Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 7, 1928. No. 1.

Pure religion resides in the will. Our wills must be God's will. His will must be effective in our lives every moment we live.—Fenelon.

"If Jesus Christ be a man,
And only a man, I say,
That of all mankind, I will cleave to Him,
And cleave to Him alway.

"If Jesus Christ be a God,
And the only God, I swear
I will follow Him through Heaven and Hell
The Earth, the Sea, and the Air."

"If Jesus Christ be God and died for me, there is no sacrifice too great for me to make for Him."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"The blowing winds
Are but the servants when we hoist a sail."

Kind hearts are here; yet even the tenderest one
Has limits to its mercy; God has none.
—A. A. Proctor.

The more godly men are the more human they will be.

He who wishes to secure the good of others has already secured his own. —Confucius.

"He who takes justice in his own hands calls it on his own head."

One of the saddest things about life is that, with so much power to help others by kindliness of word and kindliness of act, many of us pass through the world in silence, or with folded hands.—J. R. Miller.

"God's is a present forgiveness, an abiding forgiveness, a complete forgiveness, an assured forgiveness. My own separate and personal forgiveness. Now let my soul exult in it.—Mark Guy Pearse.

Love has done the grandest things the world has ever known and is still doing them. Where judgment may be generous, love is lavish; where judgment is cautious in conclusions, love is heroic.—Dr. Peter Forsyth.

Let me emphasize the fact that the word "meek" does not mean "weak". There is no suggestion here of softness. My old schoolmaster once wrote to point out to me that in Greek the word here translated "meek" is used of a colt broken in and ready for its work. It means strength harnessed for service, force completely at rest, and therefore powerful".—Campbell Morgan.

"Take up the cross,
Then shalt thou find the burden light,
The path made straight, the way all bright,
Thy warfare cease.
So shalt thou win thy crown
At last thy life lay down
In perfect peace."

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 7, 1928. No. 1.

1928

When the Christmas lights have vanished, the Christmas music is stilled, the garlands and trees are withering, the toys broken or worn, or already tiresome, we face the new year, three hundred and sixty-five days of fighting for those of us who are to live through it. We may not know how many of us, nor which of us, will see New Year's day of 1929. It is certain that some of the youngest and strongest of us will go but a short way into 1928 and some of the oldest and feeblest will be lingering here at the end of it. We cannot fix the length of our stay. We can determine how we shall use the time allowed us. Therefore, must we fight in as many of the three hundred and sixty-five days as may come to us, if we hope and intend to be worthy of living.

"Act, act in the living present Heart within and God overhead."

Fears, appetites, cravings, passions are to be fought daily. It is not a penalty. It is a privilege. It is the price of usefulness, the means of growth, the making of strength. Without it life would be empty and barren.

The great Latin poet Horace in his second satire says:

Who then is free? The wise man, who is master of himself,
Whom nor poverty, nor death, nor fetters terrify,
Strong to curb his passions, and honors to despise,
And in himself complete, rounded and full-orbed,
So that nothing from without may avail to loiter on the smooth surface,
One against whom Fortune ever rushes impotently.

It is the wise law that external conquests and triumphs may be won only by internal conflict and struggle, that the supreme peace at the last may be assured only by battle. Those who seek to evade the law forfeit their rights as citizens of the eternal and invisible kingdom, desert from the army of the Lord and fail miserably. Hermits trying for safety from temptation and conflict in solitary caverns and living on water and herbs, and voluptuaries, attempting to buy ease and happiness with money and self-indulgence have been alike cumberers of the ground and victims of desolation and despair. "Give me neither poverty nor riches, feed me with the dew of Heaven," says the wise man.

If we undertake to imagine what and how this world and we human beings would be with no sins or sorrows, poverty, pain, fears, disasters, calamities, we wander in maze and chaos. "Man is born for trouble as the sparks fly upward." We can dream of a Heaven like that when we will be rid of the weaknesses and limitations of the mortal body and mind. All that our race has done for itself on this earth, for its own advancement, to establish its kinship with Divinity and its hope for hereafter, has been brought by the the things we dread, by the victories of the spiritual part of us over the sloth and cowardice that would shun conflict with evil, and with the forces of nature and the labor and perils of exploration of nature's secrets. We may not know how the Great Judge of All weighs and measures. In His eyes something done humbly in a hidden corner may be more important, vitally and really, than the discovery of a continent or the overthrow of a cruel king—as in ultimate results, in years and realms beyond our understanding, it may be. It is certain that as it is with what seem to us the greatest things so it is with what we regard as the smallest. We make our best blessings from overcoming our worst faults, gather our noblest glories from our direst distresses, and as that great Christian soldier, General Robert E. Lee, said: "Misfortune nobly borne becomes good fortune."

In this year now just before us the vast majority of us must work in and with and for what the world esteems as small things and from day to day, not knowing how many the days will be, nor at the beginning of any day what it may bring us. It is for us to decide and determine whether day by day we shall move, step by step, upward or downward. Each of us is entrusted with that responsibility, given control over that part of our lives. We must move, one way or the other. It is not in mortal power to command success in the outward, material life. It is within mortal power to achieve victory in the inner and spiritual life and to deserve the temporal rewards.

Few of us will face a great crisis or find large opportunity in the year coming. For most of us it will bring only the daily succession of daily work and duties, meaning daily battles, the use of homely, plain occasions for development and illustration of large and shining virtues, or failure to so use them. Temptation and tendency all of us will be challenged to fight or to dream of ourselves as heroes and heroines ready for splendid deeds, but neglecting and ignoring the good ready to our hands to be done. Those who believe they would dare the deadliest dangers to do or return a kindness cower abjectly before the inclination to procrastination in giving help or expressing gratitude and leave need to suffer or hearts to be bruised. Picturing ourselves, to ourselves, as capable of any sacrifice for those we love and who love us, we indulge ourselves in the mean gratification of venting anger of the moment in word or act inflicting lasting stings.

Fragility and quick fleeting of New Year good resolutions has been a standing joke through generations. It is for each of us, men and women, to determine at the rather solemn moment when the year through which we have lived is departing forever and the year through which we hope to live is coming, how we shall use these three hundred and sixty-five days, if they are given us. It is for us to decide whether our good intents shall go to the traditional paving of Hell, or whether, humbly imploring help and guidance from above, we will make them into good works to smooth and gladden our pathway to Heaven. With the ever ready help of the Almighty and All Merciful Helper, we may use each of the coming days through which we may live to struggle for rigid self-government, self-restraint, self-sacrifice, may begin and end each of them with serene faith, steadfast patience, that sublime courage that knows how to endure and submit. So, those of us spared to the threshold of 1929 may arrive there with tranquil exultation, knowing themselves to be higher, cleaner, better, at the death of 1928 than at its birth, feeling that as they are another year nearer the ending here they are a year nearer the beginning of a life in Heaven where garlands shall not fade nor lights vanish and the joys shall be forever through all Eternity.

"Yon path of Greensward
Winds round by sparry grot and gay pavilion.
There is no flint to gall thy tender feet,
There's ready shelter from each breeze and shower.
But duty guides not that way: See her stand
With wand entwined with amaranth near yon cliffs
Oft where she leads thy head must bear the storm
Ofter where she leads thy blood must mark thy footsteps.
And thy shrunk form endure heat, cold and hunger,
But she will guide thee up to noble heights
Which he who gains seems native of the sky."

Alfred B. Williams.

FOR THE DAY OF THE EPIPHANY

Matthew 2:2.

For we have seen His star in the East, and we are come to worship Him.

TRUTH, that light of Heaven figured by the star which on this day appears to the magi, is the only thing here below worthy of the cares and researches of man. It alone is the light of our mind, the rule of our heart, the source of solid joys, the foundation of our hopes, the consolation of our fears, the alleviation of our evils, the cure for all our afflictions: it alone is the refuge of the good conscience, and the terror of the bad; the inward punishment of vice, the internal recompense of virtue: it alone immortalizes those who have loved it, and renders illustrious the chains of those who suffer for it, attracts public honors to the ashes of the martyrs and defenders and bestows respectability on the abject and the poverty of those who have quitted all to follow it; lastly, it alone inspires magnanimous thoughts, forms heroical men, souls of whom the world is unworthy, sages alone worthy of that name. All our attentions ought therefore to be confined to know it; all our talents to manifest it; all our zeal to defend it; in men we ought then to look only for truth, to have no wish of pleasing them but by truth, to esteem in them only truth, and to be resolved that they shall never please us but by it; in a word it would appear that it should have only to shew itself, as on this day to the magi, to be loved; and that it shews us to ourselves in order to teach us to know ourselves.

NEVERTHELESS, it is astonishing what different impressions the same truth makes upon men. To some it is a light which directs the steps, and, in pointing out their duty, renders it amiable to them; to others it is a troublesome light, and, as it were, a kind of dazzling, which vexes and fatigues them; lastly, to many it is a thick mist which irritates, inflames them with rage, and completes their blindness. It is the same star which, on this day, appears in the firmament; the magi see it; the priests of Jerusalem know that it is foretold in the prophets; Herod can no longer doubt that it hath appeared, seeing wise men come from the extremities of the east, to seek, guided by its light, the new King of the Jews. Nevertheless, how dissimilar are the dispositions with which they receive the same truth manifested to them.

In the magi it finds a docile and sincere heart: in the priests, a heart mean, deceitful, cowardly, and dissembling: in Herod, a corrupt and hardened heart. Consequently it forms worshippers in the magi; dissemblers in the priests; and in Herod a persecutor. Now, my brethren, such is still at present among us the lot of truth: it is a celestial light which is shown to us, says St. Augustine: but few receive it, many hide and dim it, and still greater numbers contemn and persecute it: it shews itself to all; but how many indocile souls who reject it? How many mean and cowardly souls who dissemble it? How many black and hardened hearts who oppress and persecute it? Let us collect these three marked characters in our Gospel, which are to instruct us in all duties relative to truth; truth received, truth dissembled, truth persecuted. Holy Spirit, Spirit of Truth, destroy in us the spirit of the world, that spirit of error, of dissimulation, of hatred against the truth; and in this holy place destined to form ministers, who are to announce it even in the extremities of the earth, render us worthy of loving and truth, of manifesting it to those who know it not, and of suffering all for its sake.

PART I.

I CALL truth that eternal rule, that internal light incessantly present within us, which, in every action, points out to us what we ought, and what we ought not to do; which enlightens our doubts; which judges our judgments; which inwardly condemns or approves us, accordingly as our behavior is agreeable or contrary to its light; and which, in certain moments more splendid and bright, more evidently points out to us the way in which we ought to walk, and is figured to us by that miraculous light which, on this day, conducts the magi to Jesus Christ.

Accustomed, in consequence of a public profession of wisdom and philosophy, to investigate everything and reduce it to the judgment, of a vain reason, and to be far above all popular prejudices, they stop not, however, before commencing their journey upon the celestial light, to examine if the appearance of this new star might not be involved by natural causes; they do not assemble from every quarter scientific men, in order to reason on an event so uncommon; they sacrifice no time to vain difficulties, which generally arise, more from repugnance we feel to truth, than from a sincere desire of enlightening ourselves, and of knowing it. Instructed by that tradition of their fathers which the captive Israelites had formerly carried into the east, and which Daniel and so many other prophets had announced there, relative to the Star of Jacob which should one day appear, they, at once, comprehended it, that the vain reflections of the human mind have no connection with the light of Heaven; that the portion of light which Heaven shews them is sufficient to determine and to conduct them; that grace always leaves obscurities in the ways to which it calls us, in order not to deprive faith of the merit of submission; and that, whenever we are so happy as to catch a single gleam of truth, the uprightness of the heart ought to supply whatever deficiency may yet remain in the evidence of light.

Nevertheless, how many souls in the world, wavering upon faith, or rather enslaved by passions which render doubtful to them that truth which condemns them; how many souls, thus floating, clearly see, that, at bottom, the religion OF OUR FATHERS HATH MARKS OF TRUTH WHICH THE MOST HIGH-FLOWN AND PROUDEST REASON WOULD NOT DARE TO DENY TO IT: THAT UNBELIEF LEADS TO TOO MUCH: THAT, AFTER ALL, WE MUST HOLD TO SOMETHING: AND THAT TOTAL UNBELIEF IS A PARTY STILL MORE INCOMPREHENSIBLE TO REASON THAN THE MYSTERIES WHICH SHOCK IT; WHO SEE IT, AND WHO STRUGGLE, BY ENDLESS DISPUTES, to lull that worm of the conscience which incessantly reproaches their error and their folly; who resist that truth, which proves itself in the bottom of their heart, under pretense of enlightening themselves; who apply for advice only that they may say to themselves, that their doubts are unanswerable; who have recourse to the most learned, only to have the power of alleging, as a fresh motive of unbelief, the having had recourse in vain? It would seem that religion is no longer but a matter of discourse; it is no longer considered as that important affair in which not a moment is to be lost; it is a simple matter of controversy, as formerly in the Areopagus; it fills up the idle time; it is one of those unimportant questions which fill up the vacancies of conversation and amuse the languor and the vanity of general intercourse.

BUT, my brethren, "the Kingdom of God cometh not with observation". Truth is not the fruit of controversy and dispute, but of tears and groanings; it is by purifgying our heart in meditation and in prayer that we alone must expect, like the magi, the light of Heaven, and to become worthy of distinguishing and knowing it. A corrupted heart, says St. Augustin, may see the truth; but he is incapable of relishing or of loving it; in vain do you enlighten and instruct yourselves; your doubts are in your passions; religion will become evident and clear from the moment that you shall become chaste, temperate and equitable; and you will have faith from the moment that you shall cease to have vice. Consequently, from the instant that you cease to have an interest in finding religion false, you will find it incontestable; no longer hate its maxims and you will no longer contest its mysteries.

The light of Heaven finds, therefore, no doubts to dissipate in the minds of the magi, because it finds no passion in their hearts to overcome; and they well deserve to be the first-fruits of the Gentiles, and the first disciples of that faith which was to subjugate all nations to the Gospel.

NOT but it is often necessary to add, to our own light, the approbation of those who are established to distinguish, whether it be the right spirit which moves us, fallacy is so similar to truth, that it is not easy to avoid being sometimes deceived. Thus the magi, in order to be more surely confirmed in the truth of the prodigy which guides their steps, come straight to Jerusalem; they consult the priests and the scribes, as the only persons capable of discovering to them that truth which they seek; they boldly and openly demand, in the midst of that great city, "Where is he that is 'Born King of the Jews' "? They propose their question with no palliations, calculated to attract an equivocal answer; they are determined to be enlightened, and wish not to be flat-reason, they find it.
tered; from their heart they seek the truth, and, for that

NEW EW disposition, sufficiently rare among believers. Alas! we find not truth, because we never seek it with a sincere and upright heart; we diffuse a kind of mist over every attempt to find it, which conceals it from our view; we consult, but we place our passions in so favorable a light, we hold them out in colors so softened, and so similar to the truth, that we procure a reply of its being really so: we wish not to be instructed; we wish to be deceived, and to add to the passion which enslaves us, an authority which may calm us.

* * * * *

Nevertheless, to hear us speak, we love the truth; we are desirous of having it shown to us. But a convincing proof, of that being only a vain mode of speaking is, that whatever concerns, or has any allusion to this cherished passion, is carefully avoided by all around us; our friends are silent upon it; our superiors are obliged to use an artful delicacy, not to injure our feelings; our inferiors are upon their guard, and employ continual precautions; we are never spoken to, but with lenitives which draw a veil over our sore; we are almost the only persons ignorant of our defect: the whole world sees it, yet no one has the courage to make it known to ourselves; it is clearly seen that we seek not with sincerity the truth; and that, far from curing us, the hand which should dare to probe our sore, would only succeed in making a fresh one.

David knew not, and respected not the sanctity of Nathan, till after that prophet had spoken to him, with sincerity, of the scandal of his conduct; from that day, and ever afterwards, he considered him as his father and deliverer; but, with us, a person loses all his merit from the moment that he forces us to know ourselves. Before that, he was enlightened, prudent, full of charity; he possessed every talent calculated to attract esteem and confidence; the John the Baptists were listened to with pleasure, as formerly by an incestuous king; but, from the moment that they have undisguisedly spoken to us, from the moment that they have said to us: "It is not lawful for thee," they are stripped, in our opinion, of all their grand qualities: their zeal is no longer but whim; their charity but an ostentation, or a desire to censure and contradict: their piety but an imprudence or a cheat, with which they cover their pride; their truth but a mistaken phantom. Thus, frequently convinced in our own minds of the iniquity of our passions, we would wish others to give them their approbation; forced, by the inward testimony of the truth, to reproach them to ourselves, we cannot endure that they should be mentioned to us by others.

* * * * *

THUS, in vain doth the light of Heaven a thousand times intrude upon us, and point out the ways in which we ought to go; the very first glance which we afterwards cast upon the example of others who live like us, revives us, and spreads a fresh mist over our heart. In those fortunate moments when we consult the sole truth of our own conscience, we condemn ourselves; we tremble over a futurity; we promise to ourselves a new life; yet, a moment after, when returned to the world, and no longer consulting but the general example, we justify ourselves, and regain that false security which we had lost. We have no confidence in the truth which the common example disproves; we sacrifice it to error, and to the public opinion; it becomes suspicious to us, because it has chosen out us alone to favor with its light, and the very singularity of the blessing is the cause of our ingratitude and opposition. We cannot comprehend, that, to work out our salvation, is to distinguish ourselves from the rest of men; is to live single amidst the multitude; is to be an individual supporter of our own cause, in the midst of a world which either condemns or despises us, is, in a word, to count examples as nothing, and to be affected by our duty alone. We cannot comprehend, that, to devote ourselves to destruction, it requires us to live only as others do, to conform to the multitude; to form with it only one body and one world; seeing the world is already judged; that it is that body of the antichrist which shall perish with its head and members; that criminal city, accursed and condemned to an eternal anathema. Yes, my brethren, the greatest obstacles in our hearts, to grace and truth, is the public opinion. How many timid souls, who have not the courage to adopt the righteous side, merely because the world, to whose view they are exposed, would join against them? Thus, the king of Assyria durst not declare himself for the God of Daniel, because the grandees of his court would have reprobated such a step. How many weak souls, who, disgusted with pleasures, only continue to pursue them through a false honor, and that they may distinguish themselves from those who set an example of them? Thus, Aaron, in the midst of the Israelites, danced around the golden calf, and joined them in offering up incense to the idol which he detested, because, he had not the courage, singly, to resist the public error and blindness. Fools that we are! it is the sole example of the public which confirms us against truth; as if men were our truth; or that it were upon the earth, and not in heaven, that we ought, like the magi, to search for that rule and that light which are to guide us.

* * * * *

WHERE are the souls, who, like the magi, after having once known the truth, never afterwards wish to see, but it alone; have no eyes for the world, for its empty pleasure, or for the vanity of its pompous shows; who feel no delight but in the contemplation of truth; in making it their resource in every affliction, the spur of their indolence; their succor against temptation; and the purest delight of their soul? And how vain, puerile, and disgusting doth the world, with all its pleasures, hopes and grandeurs indeed appear to a soul who hath thee, O my God! and who hath felt the truth of thine eternal promises; to a soul who feels that whatever is not thee is unworthy of him; and who considers the earth only as the country of those who must perish forever! Nothing is consolatory to him but what opens the prospect of real and lasting riches; nothing appears worthy of his regard but what is to endure for ever; nothing has the power of pleasing him but what shall eternally please him; nothing is longer capable of attaching him but that which is his no more to lose; and all the trifling objects of vanity are no longer on his part but the embarrassment of his piety, or gloomy monuments which recall the remembrance of his crimes.

---

Let us then labor for an inward stillness,
An inward stillness and an inward healing;
That perfect silence when the lips and heart are still,
And we no longer entertain our own imperfect thoughts and vain opinions,
But God alone speaks in us and we wait
In singleness of heart, that we may know
His will, and in the silence of our spirits
That we may do His will, and do that only.

ORIGEN OF ALEXANDRIA

THE most famous writer and thinker of the early Church is Origen. He was born in 182 A. D., of Christian parents, and died in 251 A. D., from the effects of cruel tortures suffered during the Decian persecution. His father, a wellknown man of Alexandria, suffered martyrdom in the persecution under Septimus Severus in 202. Origen, then a youth of nineteen, wished to appear with his father and claim the crown of martyrdom, but was not permitted to do so.

Such a man, born a Christian at that early date, ready to give his life for the faith, distinguished for his wide and profound learning, is a witness to the genuineness, integrity, and divine and final authority of the Scriptures, whose word in any criticism of documents should be accepted without hesitation. As Bishop Lightfoot has said, it is only in regard to the New Testament writings that such testimony is doubted or rejected.

Origen succeeded Clement as the head of the Catechetical School of Alexandria, a sort of divinity school. He is the pioneer in thinking out the rational grounds of the Trinity, the Incarnation of the Son, and the profound mysteries of the divine revelation in Christ. It is not to be wondered at that he made mistakes and fell into error, as it seems to us, in various matters. But the fact is that his theological and philosophical speculations have profoundly influenced Christian thought in all ages.

He is said to have written six thousand books and treatises. His great work, the Hexapla Bible, is a marvel of textual criticism at that early date, and though preserved only in fragments, reveals to us the care with which the Scriptures were studied, and their textual accuracy examined. Origen wrote a Commentary on the whole Bible; he also wrote homilies on the greatest passages and labored to explain the difficulties of the Bible. Much is lost of what he wrote, but enough remains to convince us that he had our Bible in all essentials, that he submitted his thinking to it as to God's Word written, and that he earnestly thought it to be decisive in all matters of faith and practice. Despite the absurd lengths to which he often carries his interpretations by analogy, there can be no doubt that he took the Bible as the divine rule of faith and practice, insisting that all human teaching should be tested by its teachings. The material of this testimony is quite voluminous in Origen's extant writings—a few citations will suffice:

"In proof of all the words we utter when teaching, we ought to produce the doctrine of Scripture to confirm the doctrine we teach."

"As all gold that is without the temple is not sanctified, so every doctrine that is not in the divine Scripture, however admirable it may seem, is not sacred."

"We ought not for the confirmation of our instructions to swear by and to take as evidence our own notions . . . unless we be able to show that they are sacred as being contained in the divine Scripture."

"To me it seems good to cleave close to God and to our Lord Jesus Christ and His Apostles, getting my information from the divine Scriptures, according to their own tradition."

This verily is the true spirit of a great scholar in dealing with the things of God. The use of "tradition" as meaning what is handed down by the Scriptures themselves—and not something outside and supplementary to them is noteworthy.

Here is his advice to the Christian minister: "Let him teach those things which he himself shall have learnt from God, not from his own heart or from human understanding, but from what the Holy Spirit teaches."

"We must take the Scriptures as witnesses: for our doctrines and interpretations without such witness are not to be believed."

"We ought to treat things that are not written according to the things that are written."

"St. Paul . . . affords an example to the teachers of the Church, that they should not in what they preach, bring forward their own imaginations, but things that are supported by the divine testimonies."

He declares that we have just one way of protecting our selves against false teaching. It is to be versed in the divine Scriptures which alone ought to direct our judgment in such an examination.

Verily this is sound Protestant teaching!

And what can be more in accord with our great reformers than the following call to personal searching of the Word of God?

"It is evident that we must not only apply ourselves with earnestness to learn the meaning of the Sacred Scriptures, but also supplicate the Lord and pray day and night that the Lamb of the tribe of Judah shall come and taking the sealed book, condescend to open it."

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 16. Topic, God's Plan of Salvation; or What Must I Do to Be Saved?
(Read John 3:1-36; Eph. 2:1-22.)

The most important thought that can engage the human mind, is our eternal destiny. God places the value of a single soul beyond all earthly treasures; "for what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul" (Mark 8:36). God's plan of salvation for a lost world is very plain, yet not generally understood through failure to learn and believe, "What saith the Lord".

The natural man's thoughts are limited to the natural plane. There is also a spiritual plane of thought to be attained, the door to which is absolute belief in the Word of God. Satan and his emissaries do not want this door opened, hence the inclination of the natural man is away from God. Let us, therefore, by the authority of the Holy Book, review the state of the unconverted, thence step by step to the exalted position of the believer.

All Are Sinners.

1. All have sinned; all are guilty.—Rom. 3:19-23.
2. Without hope, and strangers to God's promises.—Eph. 2:12.
3. Natural man receiveth not spiritual things.—1 Cor. 2:14.
4. Any claiming self-righteousness are deceived.—1 John 1:8.
5. Eternally separated from God.—2 Thess. 1:9.
6. Final doom, the lake of fire forever.—Rev. 21:8.

The Glorious Gospel, and Everlasting Salvation.

7. God's great love sent his son.—John 3:16; 1 John 4:10.
8. To seek and to save the lost.—Luke 19:10.
9. Not willing that any should perish.—2 Peter 3:9.
10. No other way possible.—Acts 4:12.
11. Forgiveness of Sin, requires shedding of blood.—Heb. 9:22-25.
12. Fashioned as a man; he humbled himself.—Phil. 2:8.
13. In due time Christ died for the ungodly.—Rom. 5:6-9.
14. Christ redeemed us from the law.—Gal. 3:13, 22.
15. Gave his life as a ransom.—Matt. 20:28.

What Then Must I Do to Be Saved?

16. To realize you are a sinner; no hope and without God.—Eph. 2:12.
17. To know that you can and must be born again.—John 3:7, 8.
18. Believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.—John 20:31.
19. Receive him as your Saviour, and thereby be born again.—John 1:12, 13.
20. No one refused or rejected.—John 6:37.
21. Whosoever will, may come.—Rev. 22:17.
22. Ho, every one:—come: Hear, and your soul shall live.—Isa. 55:1-3.
23. Repenting, forsaking, and confessing your sins.—1 John 1:9; Isa. 55:7.

The moment you do this, rejoice! For by the sure Word of God, there follows your new standing in His sight, through the righteousness of Christ.—1 Cor. 1:30.

24. He that believeth, hath passed from death unto life. —John 5:24.
25. Eternal life; a gift from God.—Rom. 6:23.
26. No condemnation.—Rom. 8:1-2.
27. All sins forgiven.—Eph. 1:7; Heb. 10:17.
28. Make it known.—Rom. 10:9 and 10.
29. Eternally safe.—Rom. 8:38, 39. Kept safe.—2 Tim. 1:12.
30. Beloved, now are we the sons of God.—1 John 3:2.

What a Wonderful Salvation!

THE SURRENDERED LIFE IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

THE following lines that tell of the glory of the Bible are taken from the "Wonder of the Book", by Canon Dyson Hague.

"Men think of the Bible as a book that was inspired. But the wonder of the book is that it is vivyfying and operative now. It is the Living Word, vital with the breath of the Living God, who gave it and gives it living power.

"The Twenty-third Psalm was inspired. But again and again today, as it is whispered in the death chamber, or read with the hidden cry, 'Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law', it is a Living Word and the Spirit breathes life through it once more.

"And this is the most remarkable and unique feature of the Bible; I feel that it is mine. Its promises are mine. As I read the 103d Psalm, it is not ancient Hebrew, it is present day power; and I, a living soul, overwhelmed with gratitude, cry out: 'Bless the Lord, O my soul."

"The other day I took up an old Bible that my mother gave me, and I noted a verse in Genesis with a date written on the margin. There floated back on my mind a time, years ago, when I was in great trouble. I had to leave my dear wife and children and travel in quest of health in distant lands, and my heart within me was sad. One day, on opening my Bible at random, as men say, my eye caught these words in Gen. 28:15: 'Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land.' Shall I ever forget the flash of comfort that swept over my soul as I read that verse! All the exegetes and critics in the world could could never persuade my soul that that was a mere echo of some far off relic of a Babylonian legend or of an Oriental myth. No. No. That was a message to me. It swept into my soul as a voice from heaven. It lifted me up and no man will ever shake me out of the conviction that that message was God's own Word to me—inspiring, because inspired; inspired, because inspiring.

"But the supreme wonder of the Book is Christ—He is its fulness, its center, its great subject. Old Testament and New alike tell of Jesus, the great Fact of history, the great Force of history, the great Future of history; for of this Book it can be said: 'The glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.'

"And as long as men live upon the face of this globe the Book that tells of that Supreme Personality, the Center of the world's desire—Christ, the great Arch that spans history, the Keystone of prophecy—Christ, the Revealer, the Redeemer: the Risen, the Reigning, the Returning Lord —Jesus, the Desire of all nations; so long will this Book draw men's hearts like a magnet, and men will stand by it and live for it and die for it.

"Do not think, and do not say, as I have heard men say, that we ought to read this Book as we read any other book; that we ought to study it and analyze it just as we do any text book in literature or science. No. When you read this book, come to it with reverence. Read it with a plea for the Spirit's help.

"Other books are of the earth. This is from heaven. Do not think and do not say that this Book only contains the words of God. It is the Word of God. Think of it not only as a good book, or even as a better book, but hold it in your heart and faith, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word of God; nay, more as the Living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship, although human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; personal in application; inspired in totality."

THEY TRIED TO TAKE YOU FROM ME.

Churchill Murray.

They tried to take You from me.
They said You were but an idle myth,
A delusion and a childish superstitution;
When I prayed they mocked me,
And when I worshipped You they called me mad.
But, O my Master, I have met You, and I know!
I have heard You in the stillness of the night,
And in the infinite silence I have beheld Your glory;
In the hour of pain I have felt Your comforting hand.
How can I doubt you Whom I know?

They tried to take You from me.
They proved in learned discourse that You never were;
They told me I was simple, and that You were but an empty dream;
Scientific proofs they gave, and spoke wise words I could not understand;
They ridiculed and scoffed and laughed—
But, O My Master, he that once has met You cannot doubt!
He that once has felt Your holy presence never questions more.
Though they are blind, yet have I seen Your splendor;
Though they are deaf, yet have I heard Your voice.
How can I doubt you Whom I know?

"LEAN HARD."

Child of My love, "lean hard",
And let Me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, child; I shaped it,
Poised it in Mine own hand, made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength;
For ever as I laid it on I said—"I shall be near . . .
This burden shall be mine", . . .
Here lay it down, nor fear
To impose it on a shoulder which upholds
The government of worlds . . .
Thou lovest Me? I know it.
Doubt not, then,
But, loving Me, lean hard.

ORDER OF THE THOUSANDFOLD. 1928.

Frederick W. Neve.

If.

"If thou canst believe; all things are possible to him that believeth."—St. Mark 9:23.

If I had but the nerve to believe,
Just simply believe,
That one could achieve
The things under the sun
That Jesus wants done,
If I had but the nerve to believe.

If I had but the nerve just to try,
Bravely venture and try,
What the power from on high
Could do with just me
From my poor self set free;
If I had but the nerve just to try.

Then my eyes would no longer be dim,
For I should see Him,
With cup filled to the brim;
And each set of sun
Would see golden deeds done,
For I should see, I should see Him.

The greatest things in human history have been wrought by Faith. The world is waiting now for men and women of faith to lead the way to new heights of spiritual adevnture.

"Certainly it is Heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn upon the poles of truth. All knowledge should be limited by religion and referred to use and action."

PARLIAMENT AND THE PRAYER BOOK

INTO the theological controversies which raged with traditional heat and odium in the House of Commons when it rejected the revised Prayer-Book of the Anglican Church, we have no thoughts of entering. But the public, social, political and historic aspects of the matter are fair subjects of comment for laymen. It is hard for Americans to imagine our Congress undertaking to regulate the liturgy or fix the doctrines of a church. But the Established Church of England has been for centuries necessarily under the control of Parliament. From time immemorial bills have been proposed or enacted defining or limiting ecclesiastical functions. Yet this has not made the process any the less delicate or even dangerous, politically, especially when it comes to so critical a step as prescribing the Book of Common Prayer. In 1874 the government of the day put forward a public worship regulation bill which aroused passions almost as violent as those which burst out in the House of Commons on Thursday. At that time a wise and perspicacious observer, not a Churchman, made an observation which fits the present case:

All changes in England should be made slowly and after long discussion; public opinion should be permitted to ripen upon them. And the reason is that all the important English institutions are the relics of a long past; that they have undergone many transformations; that, like old houses which have been altered many times, they are full both of conveniences and inconveniences which at first sight would not be imagined. Very often a rash alterer would pull down the very part which makes them habitable, to cure a minor evil or improve a defective outline. The English Church is one of those among our institutions which, if it is to be preserved at all, should be touched most anxiously.

The proposed changes in the Prayer-Book cannot be said to have been rashly devised. They represent the work of years. Their intent was undoubtedly to make the Established Church more comprehensive. But in the effort to allow for a greater variety of belief and a larger range of liturgical practice, alterations of the Prayer-Book were admitted which many felt to be a betrayal of Protestantism. This was the charge which sent a wave of excitement through the House of Commons and led to the overriding of the government, or at least of Prime Minister Baldwin, on the Prayer-Book issue. It was not made a party question, and one of the most effective arguments against the bill was made by the Home Secretary, Joynson-Hicks. But it was the fervid eloquence of a Scotch Presbyterian member of Parliament, as it were incarnating again the spirit of John Knox, which roused the deepest anti-Catholic instincts of Englishmen. In the act, and by the vote of the House of Commons, was confirmed the sardonic but truthful utterance of Walter Bagehot seventy years ago:

"Tell an Englishman that a building is without use, and he will stare; that it is illiberal, and he will survey it; that it teaches Aristotle, and he will seem perplexed; that it doesn't teach science, and he won't mind; but only hint that it is the Pope, and he will arise and burn it to the ground."

Already there is talk of the establishment being in danger. Mr. Baldwin went so far as to say that if it were now an original question of voting for an Established Church, the House of Commons would almost surely be against it. But this does not mean that any extreme agitation in favor of disestablishment will quickly follow. There will first come that pause and period of consultation as to what it is best to do next, for which the Archbishop of Canterbury almost tearfully pleads. In the end there may be some form of reconsideration and compromise, but for the present we have before us little but a fresh demonstration of the incurable aversion of the English to removing ancient landmarks. Let the Labor arty, above all, let Socialists and Communists, take notice!—New York Times.

RELIGION AND SOCIAL JUSTICE": By Sherwood Eddy. George H. Doran Co., New York.

The author of this book is one of the outstanding characters in the religious world today. We are grateful to God that there are many such leaders in spiritual thought. We have heard him speak and read his books and can say that he both writes and speaks convincingly.

Of this particular book some one has said that it is a book that will cause many a sleepless night. He puts the Christian life right up to its professors both in personal and national contacts. "Jesus' way of life was radical, and probably always will be, in the sense that it goes down to the very root of things. It will inevitably involve serious consequences for any who would follow it, as it did for Him."

Right there is the trouble with many "followers". They follow through some of the pleasant places, but avoid the path that leads to Gethsemane. The author writes: "Mammon is a much more patent idol, it is more cruel, smeared with more human blood, than Kali of Siva. They sacrifice goats to Kali and we shudder; we sacrifice men to Mammon and justify our 'rights'. In simple fact, though they are not worthy of mention, I have met with more opposition and misrepresentation, in 'Christian' America, than I have ever met in fifteen years in India, or in repeated visits to China, Turkey or Russia."

If you are going to read one strong book this winter we urge this one upon you. You will find clear views well stated on our most vital questions. The economic problems of our wealth and poverty, the racial questions, the social order, sex problems and the great question of religion. No one is better able to discuss this last than the author, and he does it in an orderly way. Just a few pages on religion as a personal experience, a universal experience, a satisfying experience, a rational experience and a social experience. Two hundred pages large type, price one dollar and a half.

PETER, PRINCE OF APOSTLES": By F. J. Foakes-Jackson. George H. Doran Co., New York.

The author, Dr. Foakes-Jackson, is a Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, Professor of Christian Institutions in Union Theological Seminary, and Lecturer in the General Theological Seminary, New York. Many books have been written about St. Paul, but the literature on St. Peter's life and influence is rather scarce. Some scholars hold that the influence of Peter is, in a sense, greater than that of Paul. St. Paul founded churches and wrote letters full of mysticism and theological doctrines. St. Peter seems to have been regarded in a peculiar way the rock upon which the visible world church was to be built. The words of our Lord were taken literally and the glory of Peter's position was ultimately centered in his representatives. Two hundred and sixty popes claim to be his direct successors.

St. Peter's place in the Church is also recognized in the names of the oldest and greatest cathedrals in the world. His martyrdom occurred, tradition says, on the Vatican Hill, outside of Rome. No sooner were the persecutions over than a great church arose on the spot, which later on was "built over" by Michael Angelo with a far vaster cathedral, the largest in the world. But not only in Rome was the influence of Peter recognized; Britain also built cathedrals in his honor. London's national shrine, Westminster Abbey, is also St. Peter's Cathedral. Old Canterbury Cathedral is named SS. Peter and Paul. York Minster is St. Peter's Cathedral. Ripon, Peterborough, Exeter, Whitby, Lindisfarre and other great cathedral churches are named in honor of Peter. Winchester, Dorchester and Llandaff are named for both apostles.

The book is very instructive and delightful reading and will have a large sale when it is known. It is a very able examination of the Scriptures, history and tradition bearing on the apostle's life. His traditional visit to Rome is examined. A good deal of light is thrown upon the history of early Christian times, especially upon the relationship between SS. Peter and Paul.

The author has written several books on the early Church and one on "St. Paul, the Man and the Apostle". He is an authority on Church history and early Christian characters.

"DOLLARS AND WORLD PEACE": By Kirby Page. George H. Doran Co., New York.

This book is an able discussion of Nationalism, Industrialism and Imperialism by the editor of "The World Tomorrow". The author is in a position to concentrate all the energies of a trained mind on the most difficult problems confronting the dominant nations of the world. His laily works to examine the political and social structure of these nations as with a mental microscope and form scientific opinions on ascertained facts and tendencies. Take, for example, our own nation. He writes: "We are bound up with the rest of the world. Industrialism is binding us to other nations with bands of steel and gold. By nature we are an aggressive and self-confident people. . . . We are inordinately proud and are slow to recognize our own faults and excesses. Indeed, we are very self-righteous and honestly believe that we are ethically superior to other peoples.

"The natural result is that, with an absolutely clear conscience, we participate in the very practices which call forth our vigorous denunciation when engaged in by other countries. The fact that we are not unique in this respect does not make our unconscious hypocrisy less dangerous."

It is certainly true that we are in some way arousing millions of people against us, and instead of contributing to the peace of the world we are disturbing it.

The author says that unless we solve the major problems confronting us, "all resolutions against war, all pledges not to fight, and all exhortations on behalf of peace will be of no avail", and again he says: "Whether it is to be war or peace for our children will be determined primarily by what we do about our dollars in other lands."

He discusses all the vital present day problems relating us to other countries. Our trade and our imperialistic gestures and mistakes and our general foreign policies. The book contains the best brief account we have seen of our imperialistic history beginning with the Louisiana purchase and the Mexican War down to our present handling of the Nicaraguan situation.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

Mr. Editor:

I want to express my deep appreciation of the Inaugural Address by Dr. Dyson Hague, of Toronto, in your issue of November 26. My heart sings with joy, that in this careless age of modernistic, atheistic, ritualistic and moralistic essays, which one hears so often delivered from many pulpits of this and other lands, such an intellectual, above all, spirited champion of the Truth is with us to wield with such mighty power the sword of the spirit which is the Word of God. His voice is indeed a silver trumpet which speaks with no uncertain sound. If all our evangelical preachers who stand for the inspired word of God, would give the same certain sound in everything this preacher speaks of, then, indeed, would the people prepare themselves to battle, to the help of the Lord, against the mighty. May many more such messages from Dr. Hague's pen enrich the pages of your fine paper.

ESPECIALLY BIBLE LESSONS.

Mr. Editor:

I want to express my high appreciation of The Southern Churchman since you have taken hold of it. It is refreshing to read the sound and clear articles which you are now publishing and especially the series of Bible Lessons, which are now running. When all the whole world is filled with false teachers and misleading statements, how glad I am to feed on the strong meat and milk and honey in your excellent magazine. Such Truths are rare nowadays and I am delighted to let you know how pleased I am to be one of your constituents. Praise the Lord!

We are doing frontier work for Jesus and often our hearts yearn for fellowship with God's dear children, but there are so very few and they so far apart that we just turn to our good books and His Blessed Word and continue to stand alone amidst the encircling darkness. The world is not growing better, and we feel that the dear Lord Jesus is coming again soon. We pray for His soon coming, for there is no other hope.

May the dear Lord bless you richly in your ministry of guidance.

Humbly, in His Most Precious Service,

Evangelist F. Irving Bond.

DEVOLUTION?

Mr. Editor:

I was much surprised at the Modernists' meeting in Richmond and felt sad over the resolution. I believe it was asking to change the Creed.

I have lived with students intimately since 1894 and account of my athletics have been quite close to them and still am. I do not find as much doubt among students today as I did in my college days, nor do I find real doubts among laymen. It is usually a moral question, but not always, that creates doubt in the mind as to certain theological questions. There was a gentleman in the second century who made certain charges against the Christian religion, about the Virgin Birth, and the Resurrection of Our Lord, so much better than these Modernists are doing and much more attractive, that one wonders if American education has devoluted.

FIRST ISSUE.

Mr. Editor:

I have been fortunate enough to see this valuable paper every week for many years, but that is not the same as having it coming to me, and then the thought of me is what I value. It may be a matter of interest to you to know that for almost a hundred years The Southern Churchman has been subscribed to by my Meade ancestors. At my old home, "Marlbourne", there are some copies of it dated 1836, ninety-one years ago, and of course it is reasonable to suppose that these were not the first numbers to be received by the family, but for some years previous to 1836, it may have been coming to my grandmother's home. I would like to know the date of the first issue and who the editors were. It seems to me remarkable that any paper should have been published so long under the same name. I feel truly thankful that in this day, where so much is done to uproot the Christian religion, the dear Southern Churchman stands firm and unchanged in its loyalty to the teachings of the Bible, and that its faith in the birth, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ remains unshaken.

Note: The first issue of The Southern Churchman was published Friday, January 2, 1895, under the editorship of the Rev. William F. Lee. James C. Walker was the printer. A note read, "The office of The Southern Churchman is on E or Main Street, over the store of Mr. Belt and opposite Sanxay's Bookstore".

THE FOE WITHIN THE FOLD.

Judge C. L. Marsilliot,
Memphis, Tenn.

My Dear Sir:

Allow me again to thank and congratulate you on your very interesting and profitable article, appearing in The Southern Churchman of November 19. Your article, as well as those of Mr. W. A. Robertson, of East Orange, N.

J., are to me the most important of all which appear in this most excellent paper.

I joined the National Church League some time ago, and have received two copies of The Chronicle; this with two copies of The Southern Churchman, which comes weekly (to some unknown person I am indebted for this second copy) I pass on to those who I think may care to be informed of the impending danger, to which, alas! too many are indifferent.

Likewise, with much of the literature which I have distributed, some will say: "What does it matter if we are High, Broad or Catholic? Much better this, which includes all, than being a bigot".

———— Church in ———— seems too high for those coming in from the Roman Catholic organization, not satisfying, as one communicated to me; not a sufficient difference to warrant a change.

———— has no evening service, although there are a Bishop, two Clergymen and a retired Archdeacon living in this town of about 12,000 inhabitants. The progress which ..... (parish) is making, I hear, is very encouraging to the head of the Roman Catholic organization, who remarked to a lady of ———— (parish): "She is coming all right."

Since the arrival of the new rector, Mr. ————, during the early part of the year, some have ceased to attend, and I am one of the number who can take no interest in encouraging the foe within the fold.

My distress is great, and beyond expression, as I learn of all that is transpiring among us, and I so helpless to do anything, however small, to assist in the mighty conflict against paganism, deceit, idolatry, hypocrisy and the machinations of the foe.

Pathetic, indeed, is the situation in which we unfortunately find ourselves, not only here, but wherever I have lived and traveled, North, East, South, West, Panama and Mexico.

Although by our worldliness and indifference we are brought to such a crisis, we can pray that the Protestant Episcopalians everywhere may become aware of existing conditions, and by the Grace of God arouse from their apathy ere it is too late.

Ever since so much attention has been paid to the material things in Church work, I have feared a spiritual decline.

During mission work from Baltimore to Mexico I have been forced to be very pronounced in regard to the Sacraments and Purgatory, some of my teachers insisting there were seven instead of two.

May the loving Father of us all make strong the arms of those who are fighting against the once insidious, but now bold, foe within the "fold", is the prayer of

A Distressed and Helpless Episcopalian.

DEAN FRANCIS WEI VISITS THE MISSIONS HOUSE.

Dean Francis Wei, of Central China University, who is in the United States for a brief visit in order to address the Student Volunteer Convention in Detroit the week after Christmas, came directly from his steamer to the Missions House on his arrival Wednesday morning, December 21, in order to greet the Missions House staff and a number of other friends who had come to see him.

One needs to see and hear such a person to realize something of the strength and poise and beauty of Chinese character at its finest. Dean Wei said his heart was full of many things he would like to say, but he would mention only three: first, that in coming to 281 Fourth Avenue, he felt that he was coming home, having been connected so long with our mission—some twenty-five years, first as a student, then as a worker. (He is a Cantonese, who graduated from Boone College before studying in this country.) He congratulated the Missions House on having sent to China, during all these years, workers with so wonderful a Christian spirit, workers such as those who stood the siege a year ago, and who have since passed through such exceedingly difficult times. "Our American and English missionary friends have stood by in a spirit of which any one may be proud. It is that spirit which will uphold the Church in China. I must testify to the way they have passed through a very testing time. Their lives and their work have won a place in the hearts of the Chinese."

In spite of the great confusion in China, Dean Wei is sure it will work out right. The Chinese have made mistakes, especially in the last eighteen months; they are desperate; they have been misled, but they are right in their hearts.

"As one Chinese standing before you," he said, "I ask you to forgive what we have done through our ignorance, through our mistakes."

With every right in the world to disassociate himself from and repudiate those mistakes he pled vicariously on behalf of his countrymen. He added his belief that the wave has reached its crest, and that in the not far distant future the Church will hear a call for renewed help from the missionaries. "With all the problems facing us at this critical time, I don't see how we are going to face them without the cooperation of our friends."

Among the China missionaries who were present to greet Dean Wei were Mrs. Gilman, Mr. Fred Gilman, the Rev. E. J. Lee, Mr. E. P. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Kemp, Mrs. Bliss and "Ted", Dr. Ludlow, Dr. Ritchie, Miss Gregg, Miss Mundelein, Miss Cox, Miss Ann Brown, Miss Bremer, Miss Coral Clark, Miss Wentworth. Dr. Wakefield was on the steamer with Dean Wei.

LIFE AT ARCTIC VILLAGE.

Gerald Fitzgerald, an engineer returning from a government surveying trip in Alaska, describing his trip for the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, includes an account of life at Arctic Village, familiar to Church people as the place where the "Bishop Rowe Chapel" has been built by the natives. Arctic Village is one hundred and fifty miles north of Fort Yukon, on a fork of the Chandalar River. Mr. Fitzgerald says:

"No white men had stayed at the village before and the inhabitants come in contact with whites very infrequently. Yet they have constructed a church and have a native minister. With a great deal of labor they erected a large building for a schoolhouse in the hope that the Government might one day send them a teacher. Realizing that they were isolated by the condtions of the trails, they started in at Christian Village and cut a straight trail seventy-five miles in length to Fort Yukon. The trail goes through heavy timber, but is absolutely straight and twenty-five feet wide. There are fifteen or twenty well constructed houses in the village, equipped with stoves and sewing machines. Despite their adoption of some of the conveniences of civilization they know less of the white man's ways than any other people I've seen in Alaska.

"The men of the village make a yearily trip, generally in April, to Fort Yukon, to dispose of furs and buy a few supplies, a little flour, sugar and some articles of clothing.

"There are about seventy-five people in the village. They appoint their own marshal and game warden to see that there is no violation of the game laws. The village council this year passed a law providing that no man could kill over eighty muskrats, as it was believed that the supply was being depleted. Only one man broke the law, he came in with eighty-one skins and turned the extra one over to the Church.

"The village council and the chief make all the laws. The council consists of five men appointed by the minister. The chief is elected. Women have not gained the franchise in Arctic Village.

"No gambling or drink is allowed in the district, and the laws are obeyed. The natives feel that they will get along better without too much contact with white people and they will be better off physically and morally if they live like their ancestors, depending largely on the country to furnish them with sustenance.

"The chief contact with civilization is obtained through the Church. The minister is appointed by Bishop Rowe and the chapel is dedicated to the Bishop."

Of travel in this region and in even more remote areas, Mr. Fitzgerald says:

"To my mind the airplane is going to do much to open up for prospecting country heretofore untouched. They can take a season's outfit by plane and look over a country that otherwise would be practically impossible to reach. The season is so short that time saved in this manner would be almost invaluable."

IOLANI.

"Iolani, the most famous school in the United States," has received a letter from a boy who was born in Formosa, is now in the third-year English class of a Japanese high school in China, and applies for entrance at our boys' school in Honolulu, saying: "It is said there is a high school that is the Iolani School which is the most famous school in the United States of America. Even in such far eastern country can sound the name of the Iolani School that I feel very glad to study there. Please send me a catalogue and a guide with which I must see and for my specimen before my proceeding."

FIRST CONVENTION OF NORTHERN SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE IN FINLAND.

The Northern Sunday School Conference comprises the workers in Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland. While the Russian government was in control, international conferences were not allowed. Finland became independent in 1917 and it was with great joy that they were able at the eighth conference, which met in Norway 1922, to invite the Ninth Northern Sunday School Conference to assemble in Finland, where Sunday-school work began over one hundred years ago.

This Ninth Conference took place in Helsingfors recently and Professor L. Ingman, of the University of Helsingfors, a former Prime Minister and Minister of Education was elected president of the Congress. The delegates were divided into two groups and the same program was given in both Finnish and Swedish. Sweden was represented by one hundred and twenty delegates, Norway two hundred, Denmark one hundred and sixty and Finland twelve hundred. There was hearty enthusiasm throughout the Convention as many technical and practical subjects were presented. The Tenth Northern Sunday School Conference will be held in Stockholm, Sweden, about five years hence.

GENTLENESS.

A New Year Orison.

Frederick W. Neve.

Lord, make me humble as a little child,
With childlike trust in Thee,
And keep me calm amid the tempest wild,
From care and worry free.

The greatest gift that Thou hast to bestow
Be kind and give to me,
That like some precious jewel it may glow
And thus Thy witness be.

The greatest gift of all is gentleness,
Love's fairest flower on earth;
Give it to me that I may learn to bless
With gifts of matchless worth.

For gentleness shall keep my spirit free,
That Thine own light may pass
From me to those beyond, until they see Thy face as in a glass. Amen.

THE NEW PRAYER BOOK.

Reasons for the Revision and for the Heated Controversy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It comes to Americans with rather a shock of surprise that the House of Commons should have the power to determine the rites and formulae of the Church of England. As Lord Denbigh said in the recent debate in the House of Lords, speaking as a Roman Catholic who declined to vote on the subject:

> I cannot imagine a more incompetent body to which to refer such a question than the present modern Parliament, composed as it is of professed agnostics and men of various religions, many of whom never go to a place of worship from one year's end to another, except, perhaps, to see their friends married or buried, or to be married or buried themselves.

And yet from the time of Edward VI Parliament has never relinquished its control, until 1919, when by the Church of England Assembly (Powers) act, 1919, it gave the initiative in Church affairs to the Church of England. By that enactment a Church Assembly was created, consisting of three houses—the House of Bishops, the House of Clergy and the House of Laity. They are authorized "to deliberate on all matters concerning the Church of England, and to make provision in respect thereof".

The act creates an ecclesiastical committee of fifteen peers and fifteen members of the House of Commons, and any measure submitted by the Legislative Committee of the Church Assembly is referred to this committee, whose duty it is to make a report to Parliament. When so reported, a resolution is offered in each house, directing that the measure be presented to the King for his assent, on receiving which the measure has the effect of an act of Parliament. The measure cannot be modified by Parliament—it must be either accepted or rejected.

The "Prayer Book measure, 1927," authorizes the use in public worship of the Prayer Book annex and the issue of supplementary forms of service. The book annexed is called "The Composite Book" and contains the Book of Common Prayer as adopted in 1662, "with permissive additions and deviations". It sets forth alternative forms of service. The "measure" consists of eleven sections, dealing principally with technical questions and matters of detail relating to the act of Uniformity (1662) and other statutes, printing, copyright, etc.

The Composite Book, or, as it is sometimes called, the "Deposited Book", represents years of labor. As the Archbishop of York has said:

> It (the new Prayer Book) will mark the completion of the long toil of twenty years. . . . We have sought, however imperfectly, to make our Prayer Book as inclusive as the Church. Our desire has been to secure not compromise for the sake of peace, but rather comprehension for the sake of truth, of the fullness and richness of the one fellowship of faith and life.

In the debate in the House of Lords the Archbishop of Canterbury said:

> Nothing that we have suggested makes any change in the doctrinal position of the Church of England. The balance of emphasis may here and there be somewhat altered.

While opposition was expected in Parliament, rejection was not conceived possible. How can it be accounted for? It is undoubtedly due to a recrudescence of the latent Protestantism of the English people—the arousing of the no-Popery spirit which in the past has expressed itself in violent forms. The chief objection in Parliament was to what Archbishop Davidson calls "the anxious question" of Reservation.

The present rubric merely provides that if a sick person is unable to come to the Church and yet is desirous to receive the Communion in his house, the curate may celebrate it there in a form prescribed. The alternative order authorizes the priest to set apart or "reserve" so much of the consecrated bread and wine as shall serve sick persons desirous of communicating, and it provides expressly that the elements shall be reserved only for the Communion of the sick "and shall be used for no other purpose whatsoever". This prohibition is designed to prevent the adoration of the elements, a practice which, it is said, has been steadily increasing in the English Church. In the debate in the House of Commons, Sir W. Joynson-Hicks charged that "the Sacrament today is being used as a subject of worship". In March last the archbishops and bishops agreed on stringent rules limiting Reservation, which they declared they would put forth in case the Prayer Book measure became law. But, as Lord Hanworth, Master of the Rolls, said in the debate in the House of Lords, archbishops and bishops change.

So far as discipline is concerned, the Church of England at present is in a state of chaos. The bishops have thrown up their hands—notably the Bishop of London. In many churches the priests out-Roman Rome. The ultra-Protestants suggest that the extreme Anglo-Catholics should go to Rome, as Newman did. In reply they assert that they represent the best and truest tradition of the Church of England. And although they do not say so, undoubtedly they appreciate the freedom which they now enjoy in the Church of England and which they might lose under the stricter discipline of the Roman Church. Some Anglo-Catholic extremists favor disestablishment, as in the past nonconformists did, but this is not a real issue at present. The other alternatives are to allow the present chaos to continue, or as the Archbishop of Canterbury has announced after a conference with the bishops, to reconsider the revision and send it once more to Parliament.

It has been the glory of the Church of England that it is an inclusive Church, broad enough to harbor many different types of belief and practice—Anglo-Catholics, Evangelicals and Modernists. The problem which the bishops now face is to find modification of the Prayer Book proposals which, while permitting Reservation under an able rubric will at the same time make such provision against extreme practices as will satisfy the insistence that the Church of England shall not abandon its Protestant tradition.

Letter From Colonel Axton.

Colonel John T. Axton, Chief of Chaplains of the U. S. Army, will be forced to retire April 6, 1928, on account of physical disability incident to the service. The following is a copy of a letter that the Chaplain has addressed to the fifteen hundred members of his corps who serve in the National Guard, the Reserve Corps and the Regular Army:

December 15, 1927.

To my Corps:

No man has had so rare a privilege as I have enjoyed in directing the organization of a strong, cohesive corps which has been developed from a small group of chaplains, each of whom was working in his own way without counsel, suggestion, encouragement or supervision. Ours is a fellowship in service such as no other body of men may enjoy. I shall relinquish my office with the feeling that together we have done some worthwhile things for the Army.

I can not pass to an inactive status without trying to express in some measure my appreciation of the loyal support that has come from very many sources. It has seemed as though everybody yearned for the strongest possible program of religion for the Army and gave tangible evidence of that desire.

The continuing support of the churches and their auxiliary agencies has made possible many things which could not have been accomplished had the cooperation been less substantial and hearty. There have been many wonderful helpers throughout the years.

There has always been a small inner circle of dear personal friends of means who have delighted to let me do things which could not be reached in any other way. They have added immeasurably to the success of my undertakings. Most chaplains have a few such supporters.

The opportunity to have become personally acquainted with every chaplain in the Regular Army and most of your families, and to have known nearly all of the Reserve Corps Chaplains, scattered as you are, has been a distinct advantage. These contacts have been genuinely helpful.

During the long months of the strain of a serious health menace the visits from my brethren and the many hearty letters, a great sheaf of them, have brightened what might otherwise have been days of despondency. It is not conducive to cheer to be told constantly that one is permanently and may soon be totally disabled.

I shall continue to devote my effort to benevolent, philanthropic and religious enterprises. Among these the advancement of the interests of chaplains will have a large place. Working from without perhaps I can accomplish more than while on active duty. At least the imputation of a selfish motive, the sting of which has been felt too often, will be removed. Until chaplains are accorded the same recognition as all other non-combatant officers we must cultivate sentiment and seek influence to overcome discrimination which we endured in silence too long. The place of religion and the recognition of its ministers must not be secondary in the Army or elsewhere.

To my successor I expect to give that measure of support which the corps has always accorded me. I bespeak for him a large place in your prayers and planning.

May you have that abiding faith in God, that deep consecration, that moral earnestness and that unselfish devotion which are essential to the important responsibilities to which you are called. I shall follow you always with most affectionate interest.

Very sincerely yours,
John T. Axton.

Creed Cooperation Interests Britons.

London, December 26 (A. P.).—Prominent persons in Great Britain have become interested in a proposal similar to the "better understanding" movement among Churches in the United States.

It is proposed that a commission shall be appointed, having as its object the solution of religious differences. H. Newman, a member of the Jewish Board of Deputies of Highbury New Park, is one of the proponents.

"The commission," Newman said, "will work to secure cooperation between all creeds to promote brotherhood and peace. While it will not interfere in the least with the various dogmas of the individual creeds, it will fight against the dark powers of inhumanity, disease, ignorance and crime. All these great problems can be dealt with far better if all the Churches—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish—combine and cooperate."

Newman received numerous letters from distinguished public men who expressed interest in his scheme.

The Archbishop of Canterbury wrote: "I have been much interested to learn that such a movement is now going forward in America. There is no question at all but that we ought to look with eager eyes toward any endeavor which increases mutual understanding between the Jews and the Christians."

Ramsay MacDonald. "I welcome every movement like the American movement for better understanding which is designed to remove ill-will arising out of ignorance from misunderstanding, and I wish you well."

T. P. O'Connor: "I am now and I have always been in sympathy with any movement or organization the purpose of which is to break down prejudice between different religious creeds."

Sir Hall Caine: "If the object of your commission of representative and responsible Catholics, Protestants and Jews is to enable the people in those faiths, in spite of their difference of doctrine and dogma, to live together in social and political harmony without suspicion, ill-will, prejudice or hatred, I am entirely with you."

The American commission for better understanding is made up of three Catholics, three Protestants and three Jews. —Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The Church Appeals to Youth.

The Department of Missions of the National Council has issued an appeal to youth to enter the service of the Church in the mission field and asks this pertinent question:

"Are you, young men and young women, willing to offer your lives to give the priceless truth which you have in the Christian Gospel?"

Who Are Needed?

Only those are wanted who are in vigorous health, in the early years of life, free from the responsibilities of home and family; not those desirous of seeing the world, but those eager to serve humanity.

The Church in its vital relationship to life in non-Christian lands still calls to the heroic in youth; still kindles their imagination; still impels to sacrifice. Workers are needed in Alaska, Honolulu, Japan, Liberia, Philippine Islands, Cuba, Haiti, Mexico and Porto Rico. Teachers, clergy, doctors and trained nurses are much needed in these various mission fields, and the call is issued to both men and women to volunteer for service.

Church Papers.

Sixty wardens and vestrymen attending a meeting in a western diocese the other day revealed the fact that only four of them subscribed to any Church paper. It would be a fair question to ask, how many failed to take any paper that dealt with the clubs, lodges, or business for which they felt personally responsible, yet all were able to "run" the Church, with no knowledge of the Church-at-large (?)

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Deane and Provost Hill.

The Rt. Rev. Frederic Llewellyn Deane, Lord Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney, and the Very Rev. H. Erskine Hill, provost of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland, were in Richmond during Christmas week. Bishop Deane preached the Christmas sermon at St. Paul's Church and Provost Hill preached the Christmas sermon at St. James' Church.

On Tuesday afternoon, in the Church House, Bishop Deane spoke to a gathering of people from various Richmond churches, in behalf of the Seabury Memorial in Aberdeen. A committee was appointed to facilitate the raising of funds. Provost Hill was unable to attend, as he was ill in Grace Hospital. We are happy to announce, however, that he is much better now and hopes to leave the hospital in two or three days.

Sunday Schools Adopt Sanatorium Patients.

Three Sunday schools in Hanover county have contributed during the past month or so $71.67 to the Hanover Tuberculosis Association for sanatorium expenses of patients and have adopted two patients for a month each. Members of the Sunday schools wrote cards or sent little gifts to the girls "adopted" and took much interest in their welfare.

Tuberculosis is the greatest single cause of orphanage in this country. The fight against this disease is financed by Christmas seal funds.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Banks to Conduct Mission.

Rev. John Gayner Banks, National Director of the Society of the Nazarene, will conduct a mission at the Chapel of the Nativity, beginning January 15 and lasting a week. Dr. Banks preached a series of sermons at Washington Cathedral last summer, and drew numbers of people to him by the spirituality of his message. The Society of the Nazarene is an organization in the Church, primarily to promote the revival of Christian healing as a practice in the Church.

For the Washington Cathedral.

The effort to raise necessary funds to complete a portion of the Cathedral for use during the General Convention of the Church in October, 1928, has received strong impetus in the acceptance by people of prominence from seventeen cities of membership on important committees, formed particularly to raise these funds.

Although the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, is taking an active part in the effort, the fund raising committees are officered by laymen. General John J. Pershing is National Chairman, Mr. George Wharton Pepper is Executive Chairman, and Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon is Treasurer. Despite the widespread distribution of committee members, the committees are still in the process of formation, and ultimately it is expected that every section of the country will be represented, it was said.

New York City is represented by Ogden L. Mills, Herbert L. Satterlee, Stephen Baker, Mrs. Edmund L. Bayliss, the Very Rev. H. E. W. Fosbroke, Charles Evans Hughes, James Sheldon and Mrs. Henry White.

In addition to Mr. Pepper, committee members from Philadelphia include Mrs. Charles W. Henry, Milton B. Medary, Jr., Mrs. George Wharton Pepper and Charlton Yarnall.

Samuel Mather, of Cleveland, has been named as Vice-Chairman of the National Committee, and William G. Mather, also of Cleveland, is a member of the Executive Committee. Other Cleveland people serving on committees include Henry G. Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Garfield and the Very Rev. Francis White.

Among the Washington residents who are taking part in the effort are Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, William R. Castle, Jr., F. Trubee Davison, Edwin N. Lewis, George B. McClellan, Right Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, Corcoran Thom, Major General George Barnett, Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, William H. Church, Mrs. James E. Freeman, Robert S. Brookings, H. L. Rust, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, John Hays Hammond, Fairfax Harrison, Major General Grote Hutcheson, Coleman Jennings, Miss Jessie C. McDonald, Mrs. Frank B. Noyes, Newbold Noyes, William Green, Mrs. William C. Rives, Mrs. John Campbell White and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Among the other committee members are Henry B. Rust, of Pittsburgh; Right Rev. C. P. Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, and Mrs. Forsythe Sherfesee, of Chicago; John Stewart Bryan, of Richmond, and Rosewell Page, of Richmond; Mrs. Frederick S. Converse, Rev. Samuel S. ### Fellowship Dinner.

The annual fellowship dinner, to be given in honor of Bishop Freeman by the Interparochial Committee of the Men's Clubs of the Diocese, will be held at the City Club on January 23. Senator Guy D. Goff, of West Virginia, will be the principal speaker, and Commander C. T. Jewell will preside. Reservations for the dinner will be limited to five hundred.

Deaconess Hart.

Deaconess Edith Hart, principal of St. Phaehis Training School for Missionaries at Hankow, China, and since last summer a resident of Washington, died at her home in Washington on December 28. Funeral services were held in St. Mark's Church on December 30.

Miss Hart escaped from China last spring with the last of the missionaries to leave the danger zone, after being fired upon by Chinese troops. She reached this city last July. She left the scene of the fighting in China only when warned to go by the American consul. On the voyage down the Yangtze River her boat was attacked, but she escaped unharmed. Deaconess Hart returned to the United States on a special furlough, being ordered home on account of the civil war in China. She had intended to return to her work this month, if the situation had cleared sufficiently.

When she returned to Washington last summer her account of the situation in China was received with great interest. Her departure had been sudden and dramatic, owing to the Nanking incident, in which the American colony escaped from that city after gunboats had been forced to pour a barrage of shots into the shore to stop attacks by Chinese. This affair took place March 24, and at noon the next day the American consul sent word to Miss Hart and others in her school, advising them to leave Hankow at 6 o'clock that night.

With only six hours to arrange for the future of her school, which is operated under supervision of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, Miss Hart did the best she could, packed her belongings, and with Miss Jessie Wilson, a native of Scotland, the only other foreign teacher at the school, hurriedly left the city.

They went aboard the British merchant ship Lung Wo. Under convoy of gunboats, it took this ship five days to make the 600-mile trip down the river to Shanghai. On the way the ship was fired on from forts on the shore. At one point the gunboats returned the fire.

While waiting to return to her work in China, Deaconess Hart had accepted a position on the Faculty of the National Cathedral School for Girls, where she expected to teach while living in Washington

Chambers L. Bunting.

Christ Church Parish, Macon, and the Diocese of Atlanta has just sustained a great loss in the death of Mr. Chambers L. Bunting. For a great many years Mr. Bunting has been prominent in the Church life of the Diocese. As its Treasurer he was faithful until the end, and, even though the last months of his life he was confined to his home, continued to serve. He had represented the Diocese during the long connection with its affairs both in the General Convention and in Synodical meetings. As a member of the Executive Board and of many important committees he was always to be counted on to put the work of the Church first and to be present. He loved the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God and his life was one of consecrated service.

In his own parish he was long a warden, and only in the last few months resigned on account of health and was continued as one of the vestry and will be greatly missed in its activities.

Christ Church, Macon, to Broadcast.

Beginning January 8 and each Sunday night thereafter at 7:30 P. M., Eastern time, over WMAZ, radio broadcasting station of Mercer University, Macon, the services of Christ Church will be put on the air. This station has a wave length of 261 meters and its power is 500 watts. Christ Church is one of the most prominent parishes in the Diocese and ranks conspicuously in good works. It is hoped that those listening in will notify the rector of its reception so that he may be guided as to the continuance. The Rev. Cyril E. Bentley, 518 Walnut Street, Macon, is the rector

Rev. W. W. Memminger, D. D., Honored.

The Rev. W. W. Memminger, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, Atlanta, has been elected President of the Atlanta Christian Council at a largely attended meeting. This Council is made up of the ministers of all the Protestant churches of the city and two lay delegates from each congregation. It is a body with considerable potential power and has before it some real constructive work to be done, and Dr. Memminger has been honored with the leadership.

The Rev. N. R. High Moor, the rector of St. Luke's, and Dr. Memminger were both elected members of the Executive Committee.

Memorial Organ.

In memory of the mother of a donor who wishes to remain anonymous, an unusual memorial organ for the new Church of the Heavenly Rest and Beloved Disciple, now rising at Fifth Avenue and Ninetieth Street, was announced Christmas morning at the 11 o'clock service in the present church, 67 East Eighty-ninth Street, by the rector, the Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D.

This organ will be an Austin four-manual echo instrument, having six organs, over five thousand speaking pipes, and four exceptional features which, in the opinion of the organist and choir master, Dr. J. Christopher Marks, will insure the highest measure of fundamental tone, dignity and grandeur, necessary factors for great church organ music.

The organ will be built by Herbert Brown, builder of many famous instruments in this country, including the celebrated organ in the Mormon Temple at Salt Lake City.

Manning Deplores "Paganism" of Today.

Picturing the Christmas spirit as a power needed to save the home and the Church from the "immoral teachings of our present day paganism" and to insure the outlawry of all wars, Bishop Manning preached the holiday sermon in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine at the eleven o'clock communion service Christmas morning.

The believer, the man in whom faith still lives, "will give no hearing to the forces of evil that are seeking to destroy the family as an institution and to undermine the Christian religion", Bishop Manning said:

"All lives have in them something of the spirit that led the shepherds to the stable in Bethlehem where the Saviour was born," continued the Bishop. "To the Christian, Christmas is indissolubly linked with the spirit of Jesus, the spirit that gives power to the Church.

"That the spirit is needed today to preserve the sanctity of parenthood and childhood.

"But the Christmas spirit of goodwill is a power not only in the home and the Church, it is a power strong enough to destroy the bigotry that is darkening the world. It would not be difficult to put an end to war if we would only accept Christ's message.

"If the nations would reopen the Geneva Conference and take the Christ into the council chamber they would have no difficulty in reaching an arms agreement that would be based not on rivalry and competition but on the spirit of peace."—New York Times.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Memorial Window Dedicated.

A beautiful memorial window of three lights was dedicated at Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., at the mid-night Communion Christmas Day. Bishop Thomson officiated, assisted by the rector and the curate.

The subject of the window is The Holy Family, and is of antique glass by Powell and Son of London, England. This window is the first from the famous worker and artist to be placed in the South.

The window is the east one on the southside of this historic old church and completes the memorials of this type. The donors are the Estate of Mrs. Susan Sadler Peters, a former member of this church, which her family has attended for many years.

The central light shows the Christ as a Priest holding a chalice symbolizing "He is with us always", especially in the Holy Communion. Above Him is a dove bearing out our Lord's words, "I will give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you forever". The entire background of the three lights is the Vine. Below the figure of Christ is a small subject depicting Christ sending forth His Apostles. The East light represents the Blessed Virgin. She is robed in blue and holds the Madonna lily. Beneath her is a font, the emblem of Holy Baptism. The west light is of St. Joseph, holding a staff as protector. Under this is an open Bible suggesting teaching. The Vine background is filled with a rose growth and lilies, emblems of Love and Purity. Above is a motto, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world". The inscription reads, "To the glory of God, and in loving memory of James Henry and Susan Sadler Peters and their children departed".

Mr. Adrian A. Buck, of New York City, is the American representative of Powell and Son, and to him is due the carrying out of this idea so beautifully and lovingly represented.

We Break New Seas Today.

We break new seas today—
Our eager keels quest unaccustomed waters,
And, from the vast uncharted waste in front,
The mystic circles leap
To greet our prows with mightiest possibilities;
Bringing to us—what?
Dread shoals and shifting banks?
And calms and storms?
And clouds and biting gales?
And wreck and loss?
And valiant fighting times?
And, maybe, Death—and so the Larger Life!

And, maybe, Life—Life on a bounding tide,
And chance of glorious deeds;
Of help swift-borne to drowning mariners;
Of cheer to ships dismasted in the gale;
Of succor given unasked and joyfully;
Of mighty service to all needy souls.

And, maybe, Golden Days,
Full freighted with delight!
And wide, free seas of unimagined bliss,
And Treasure Isles, and Kingdoms to be won,
And Undiscovered Countries and New Kin.

—John Oxenham, in the Baptist.

The Incarnation a Mystery.

The Incarnation a mystery? Yes, it is the mystery of mysteries, the miracle of miracles. So, in this connection, it is natural to ask the question: "What is a mystery? In answer, we should say that it is some strange phenomenon with which we are not familiar. It is beyond the human; it is superhuman or supernatural. A mystery is that which man in his finite state is unable to understand.

But there are mysteries all about us, and yet we give but little heed to them. Most all things in nature are mysterious, but we take them as a matter of course. It is a mystery how the universe is held intact by what is called "centripetal force", and all the multitude of heavenly bodies are compelled to perform their functions by that wonderful power, of which all we know is its name. It is a mystery how the grass grows, birds fly, or an object of weight falls to the earth by force of gravity. It is a mystery how one animal grows hair, another feathers, another wool and another scales! And who can explain electricity in all of its multitudinous manifestations? It is a mystery how that, by means of the lenses of the eye, objects are focused on the retina, and the image conveyed to the brain and we see. These are all mysteries, which are only a few of the thousands which go to make up our environment, and yet we do not refuse to believe in their reality. They are phenomena which we can not solve, and yet we accept them as facts; but when it comes to religion, and features connected with it, such as the Trinity, the Atonement, the Incarnation and the like, we turn away and say: "I cannot believe in that which I do not understand." How inconsistent we are!

The Incarnation is the doctrine concerning the truth of the bridge thrown over the abyss which separates the Holy God from sinful man. Hence, "When we speak of the God-man, we combine into a unity the greatest possible opposites—Godhead and manhood". So, then, let us be honest with ourselves and our God, and accept the facts as given, regardless of the mysteries connected with them, just as we are inclined to do with respect to the things in nature about us.

Therefore, we contend that the greatest mystery of the ages is the Incarnation, and yet it is an astounding fact. "It is the mystery of godliness, as the apostle declares: "Great is the mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh." The Word made flesh means that God clothed Himself with our own human nature, and came into the very closest contact with the creature of His own creation. Hence, He is not the God the Deist pictures Him to be, one who is not interested in His creations. But, in the Gospel according to St. John, our Lord is a living, intelligent, Divine Personality, who incarnated Himself; or, in other words, assumed our nature, and was made in the likeness of men; and thus removed the limitations with which the Deist would encircle Him.

We cannot think of any other way whereby God could come into such close relations with man, except only in and through the Incarnation. So we have in the Godman One who is perfectly human and perfectly Divine; thus, two natures of diverse characteristics are found in the one Person, Jesus Christ. Therefore, in the Incarnation of a Divine-human Personality we have the greatest fact in history. On it all of our future hopes depend, and in it are centered all of our expectations of salvation from sin.

He is none the less human because He is Divine, and He is none the less Divine because He is human; but the two natures are perfectly united in the One Person. Hence, we have not an High Priest who cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities." "He was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary." "He took not on Him the nature of angels, but He took on Him the seed of Abraham." Sin necessitated the Incarnation, and in the Incarnate Christ we have the remedy for sin. It is then plain to be seen that the purpose of the Incarnation was revelation and sacrifice for sin.

He came into this world to "seek and to save that which was lost". He unselfishly divested Himself of the glory which He had with the Father, before the world was and came down here and suffered the ignominy of men, in order that He might do His Father's will. On the cross He cried, "It is finished"! Thus, in that saying, we have the work of redemption complete; and let all praise, glory and honor be unto Him, who did it all for us!—Lutheran Church Work.

The Eternal Elf.

(To A. E. L.)

Helen Bayley Davis.

She doesn't belong to earthly things—
I know she's an elf!
The fairies brushed her with their wings,
(They found her sleeping on a rainbow shelf).

The spirit of youth dwells in her heart;
Her questing eyes
Seek the beauty of leaves that dart
And drift like scarlet butterflies,

And her fingers reach to grasp the grey
And purple veils
Of twilight, as she slips away
To hear the fairies tell their tales.

All the woodsy, growing things
That dwell among
The ferns, she loves, and Nature brings
Her gifts to this dear old lady—so young, so young!

Teaching the Lesson and Losing the Child.

There is peril in all progress. All the same we must have made progress. One of the outstanding features of modern Sunday-school work is teacher training. Our own Sunday School Board has outdistanced all other Sunday-school agencies in the number of qualified teachers who have had some training for their important task, the one hundred thousand (approximately) King's Teachers. There was need for it as all men know. I once heard John A. Broadus say in an address to a Sunday School Institute that he sometimes felt that Sunday-school teaching was mainly humbug when he recalled how lightly the teachers took the work. They would fail to study the lesson, they would even ask a pupil for a quarterly in order to ask questions and see the answers since they had done no special work for the lesson. That situation has greatly improved and we have much to be grateful for about it. Pupils who go to the grammar and high schools demand something at least in the teacher on Sunday.

But it does not follow that every teacher looks on the half hour with the class as an opportunity for winning the pupils to Christ. Many are willing to sow the seed and to wait for the pastor or the evangelist to do the reaping. They feel that they have done their full duty if they get over the lesson in decent shape in the appointed time and manage to hold the attention of the class in any sort of fashion. That is doing something, beyond a doubt, more than some teachers are able to do. Many pupils come to the class with a sort of bored feeling and from a sense of duty. The teacher must enlist and hold the interest of the class else he can do little in the way of teaching the lesson.

But the teacher has not done the main thing when the lesson is taught and taught well. It was the discovery of this fact that made an evangelist out of D. L. Moody. He was not content till he had won to Christ all the young women in his Sunday-school class in Chicago. I once heard Dr. W. A. Brown, the Secretary of Evangelism for the International Sunday School Association, say that he thought only about one-third of the pupils in the Sunday Schools of the whole country were won to Christ. The fish were in the net and were allowed to jump out. He told of numerous cases of criminals that he had interviewed, nearly all of whom had at one time or another been in some Sunday-school class. They had dropped out before they were won to Christ.

The point that I am trying to make in this article is that it is quite possible to teach the lesson to all and to lose the pupil. That is not good teaching. That is shooting into the air and missing the target. It is not hitting the bull's eye. It is a curious fact that the verb for teach in English, Latin and Greek is used with two objects (two accusatives), the thing and the person. One has only done abstract or doctrinaire teaching if he has not made the application to the pupil. The student of music may know the theory of music and not be able to play a single tune. The good teacher must drive the lesson home else he has not taught the lesson well.

There are pupils who are very difficult to teach. They are preoccupied or even hostile and do not desire to come to close grips with the subject. Luke tells us that after His resurrection Jesus opened the minds of the disciples that they might comprehend what He was saying to them. That is a necessary thing for every teacher to do, but it is by no means easy. And even Jesus was not always able to open the minds of His hearers that the truth might get into their dull intellects.

We all have limitations of our own as teachers and are not able to do everything well. And our pupils have limitations of many kinds. But it is possible for us all to have the right attitude and aim. If we are not planning to win the pupil to Christ, we are pretty certain not to do it. If we are satisfied with a merely intellectual interpretation of the lesson, no one will be likely to take it to heart. We shall be speaking into the air and to little purpose.

It is plain, of course, that the teacher who tries to win souls will not trust it all to the class period. He will watch for opportunity for a word in private and drive a nail in a sure place. I do not wish to make a railing accusation against our Sunday-school teachers. They are our most useful Church workers as a rule. But it is easy to fall into ruts and to make the lesson a merely burdensome affair and to miss the great dream of winning young lives to Jesus Christ.

The daily papers have recently told of the controversy among the fishermen in the Black Hills of South Dakota over the question whether President Calvin Coolidge did right in using worms instead of the customary fly on his hook in fishing for trout. He caught the trout all right, plenty of them and large ones. One may be too particular for any use about the way in which he is to win a pupil to Christ. The teacher, like Simon Peter of old, is to catch men for Christ, catch them alive, to be fishers for men.—Dr. A. T. Robertson, in Christian Index.

"Not With Wisdom of Words."

G. W. H.

There was once a great preacher. People flocked to hear him. He was splendidly endowed intellectually; every one praised him. And all went away saying: Wasn't that a wonderful sermon? They loved to go for the pure delight of following his clear reasoning. And one day this gifted, great and popular preacher opened his Bible, and his eye fell on James 1:5, If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God. And he said: "I think I am very wise, but this wisdom—if there is such a thing—I want that too."

And he got down on his knees, and humbly prayed. The promise was "it shall be given him". And his sermons changed. The intellectuals had been able to follow him, now the humble were fed. Hearts were melted, hearts were won. Not with wisdom of words, lest the Cross of Christ should be made of none effect. The Cross was now exalted.

A Meditation.

Would you have a happy New Year? Meet each duty with cheerfulness and do it well. Refuse ever to be discouraged, and never be a discourager, to make life harder for any other. Learn in whatever state you are, therein to be content, and never fret because of your circumstances; go out among men with a desire to be a benediction to every one you meet. Practice the law of love in all your relations with others, being patient, thoughtful, helpful, joyful, generous to enemies, and loyal to friends. Begin every day at God's feet, and do all things in the name of Christ. Cultivate the spirit of gladness, never letting the song die out. Make at least one little spot of this world sweeter and more beautiful than you found it. —Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

A Man Is Poor.

If he is without friends.
If he has low ideals.
If he has a guilty conscience.
If he has lost his self-respect.
If his morals are questionable.
If he has lost his grip upon himself.
If he is selfish, uncharitable, or cruel.
If he has forfeited his health for wealth.
If his mind and soul have been neglected.
If he has traded away his character for money.
If he has a disagreeable disposition that makes enemies or repels his friends.
If making money has crowded out the cultivation of his spiritual life.
If worldliness has caused him to lose fellowship with Christ.
If love of money has hardened him until the love of Christ and His gospel doesn't stir him to do his best for missions.
If all his investments and possessions are laid up on earth and he has no treasures in heaven.—Lutheran Church Herald.

In a Still Church.

Florence Van Fleet Lyman.

The stillness of an empty church
Is dear beloved by me,
Although no greeting word is said,
His presence there I see.

Alone I pray my silent prayer
The Nave is large and dim,
And there I feel a peace that steals
Within my heart from Him.

And yet I go at service time
To worship with the rest;
When they ingather in His Name
I love the still church best.

Come to Bethlehem.

F. B. Stone.

Come, children, come, to Bethlehem,
To see the little Jesus
Laid in a manger rude and bare
The Holy, new-born Jesus.

There was no room within the Inn
For Mary and for Jesus;
A manger thus became the bed
Of Christ the Saviour, Jesus.

To shepherds watching in the fields
The angel told of Jesus;
Just born in Bethlehem that day,
The promised Christ, Lord Jesus.

Then angels sang the wondrous song,
The birthday song of Jesus,
In swaddling clothes the shepherds found
The infant Saviour, Jesus.

And so to Bethlehem we go
In spirit unto Jesus,
To worship Him this Christmas Day,
Our Lord and King, Christ Jesus.

Because He came to save us all,
The angel called Him Jesus,
Because in love He saveth us,
We kneel to worship Jesus.

Why Minnie Meade Went North.

Part II.

C. J. A.

"Two days before Christmas as we were out in the woods, getting mistletoe and holly, we heard the sound of horse's hoofs, and there was Father! Oh; the joy of seeing him safe and sound! We pretended not to notice that his pockets seemed a bit bulgy. Nothing mattered now he was home. I can remember mother's happy face as she ran out to meet us. She seemed most mysteriously busy after that and, indeed, both she and father absented themselves from our company.

"Then came Christmas Eve and we were told we must get to bed in good time, or we might see Santa Claus. The fire was burning low as we placed the towel rack in front of the mantel-piece and hung up with great ceremony the new stockings mother had knit for us wondering tremulously if they would indeed still be empty in the morning After toasting our toes we were bundled into bed and kissed by a rather excited father and mother. I was quite sure I could never go to sleep, but, when, hearing a sound, I opened my eyes, Nancy, the housemaid, was kneeling at the hearth, blowing the coals into flames. When she heard me stirring, she quickly shouted, 'Christmas Gift'! which was the signal for the other children to wake up. I sat up, rubbing my eyes and saw by the light of the blazing fire the stockings, not limp and flat, but deliciously lumpy. Santa Claus had come to see us after all! But more than that, the firelight revealed, sitting near the hearth, a blinding vision of beauty, Minnie Meade. Our shouts brought two smiling, though perhaps, wearied parents.

"'Is she mine? Where did she come from?" I gasped, forgetting the stockings. Mother picked Minnie Meade up and laid her in my arms. 'A present from Father and me,' she said. Father had the unexpected gift of a little money and he got the head, and, you see, I made the rest of the baby. Her hands have shaken the hands of the Prince of Wales, for they are made of the gloves I wore at his reception'." Miss Lizzie pointed out the cleverly made fingers and thumbs. "The shoes were made from father's gloves.

"But I mustn't talk so much. I wish I could tell you of Alfred's little wagon, made by father with the help of Jonas, our old driver, and the home-made blank books, dearly prized by us, for paper was very scarce. And the contents of the stockings—shell-barks, black walnuts, persimmons, and that strange confection now unknown, apple-leather; how it all comes back to me as I talk of it. The clouds of war lifted and happiness reigned. We walked to church, for our horses had been taken. I remember how dear little St. John's looked, dressed in pine with the holly berries shining in the chancel. Father read the service, for our rector was with the army, and I still feel the thrill as I heard him read the first lesson, 'The people which sat in darkness have seen a great light'. But really I mustn't talk so much; you see the sight of Minnie Meade brought it all back."

And so it came about, a few days later, that Minnie Meade, resplendent in immaculate garments, her full skirt well starched, appeared in the window of the Near East Rummage Sale. It was evident her old charms had not failed, for she was the observed of all observers. She bore no price tag, for the committee were loath to put a price on her, fearing if they made it too high she would not sell; yet to make the price too low would hurt the gentle donor's feelings. What would the doll bring? The question remained in the air.

On the second day, however, a large car, with a New England license, driving slowly through the village, stopped, and a well dressed woman, her eye lighting on Minnie Meade, got out, entered the salesroom, and asked the price of the doll. The rector's wife, who was acting as saleslady, said: "To tell you the truth, we don't know; she shall go to the highest bidder. We have already had an offer of a quarter from two little darkies, but although she is old, she has charm, and my own little daughter has staked her whole fortune of a dollar on her. If we don't get a higher bid, she is promised to her."

"I am sorry your little daughter is going to be disappointed," said the visitor, "but I have made a study of period dolls for the State Museum, and have already a fine collection. But this one, a Civil War type and Southern, too, has not been duplicated. I feel authorized to offer fifty dollars. May I have it?"

The rector's wife fairly trembled with excitement as she reached into the window and lifted Minnie Meade for nearer inspection, and drew attention to the fine points in her composition and costumes. It was only the matter of a few seconds for the exchange of ownership of some crisp bills and Minnie Meade. Soon she was speeding North.

So it came about that Minnie Meade occupies a position of honor in the great museum, where she can be seen any day, as calm as ever, surveying admiring spectators.

As for Miss Lizzie, any pangs she may have had in parting, were forgotten in the honor of being the largest contributor to the Near East Fund.

The Surprised Squirrels.

Allen and mother were hunting for checker-berries in the woods.

Suddenly as he poked around the ground with his stick Allen gave a squeal of delight.

"See, mother," he cried, "some boys have hidden a whole lot of hickory nuts here in this hollow under the leaves. I suppose they are coming back for them later, but they won't find them," and he began stuffing his pockets until they were full.

"I don't think it was boys," said mother quietly. "I think it was a squirrel. Do you want to rob him of his winter's store?"

Benny, who had begun to crack the nuts, stopped with his eyes full of interest.

"Wait," said mother, "let's go over and sit under the tree and keep very still and see what happens."

They did not have long to wait. Soon a big, gray squirrel came running quickly along the ground to where the nuts had been stored. When he reached the spot and found his hoard gone, he sat back on his haunches and began to scold furiously. Then he began to burrow deeper into the earth to see if perhaps they were buried deeper than he thought.

Failing to find one he scolded away some more and finally ran to a big tree some distance away and ran up the trunk, still scolding.

"Gone to tell his wife and children that all the hard work they have done day after day has gone for nothing, and that this winter they must all starve," said mother.

"No, they won't," cried Benny, jumping up and emptying his pockets of the nuts, putting them all carefully back in the hollow.

Then they sat down to watch.

Pretty soon Mr. Squirrel came back and Mrs. Squirrel with him. Quickly he led her to the hollow as if telling her to see for herself that all the nuts were gone.

She began to dig and out popped the nuts. Both Mr. and Mrs. Squirrel looked for a minute as if they did not understand, then they began to fill their cheeks with them and raced away. Soon they were back for more and Allen and his mother watched until the nuts were all hidden away in some safer place.—Selected.

Jamie's Collector.

It was very warm and Jamie was tired. He had been riding on his bicycle all the afternoon and now he was sitting in the vine-covered arbor on the lawn waiting for his bedtime.

But presently, as he leaned back with his eyes half shut, he heard steps and saw a queer little man standing before him.

The little old man had a large knapsack. He said, "Good evening". Then he sat down, as if he felt quite at home.

"Are you a peddler?" asked Jamie.

"No, I'm a collector of waste."

"A collector of waste! Where do you find it, and what is it like?"

"That is just what I am going to tell you. The world is full of waste—time, opportunities, money, happiness. All these things we gather up from day to day, and sometimes our loads are frightfully heavy, I can tell you. Look at this knapsack and this parcel—all collected today!"

"Dear me!" said Jamie, "I wish you would show me some of the things you have there. Couldn't you do it?"

"If I show you anything, I will show you your own waste, for you've given me a lot of work today collecting it," replied the old man.

"I'd like to know what I've wasted today? That's nonesense!"

"It is, hey? Well, then, I'll prove that it's true, and I'll make you own it, too, before I go. I have not time to open my knapsack now, but I will read from my memorandum books the list of all you've wasted today." And he took out a small book and turned the leaves.

"Jamie—here is your account; now listen: In the first place, you wasted thirteen minutes this morning lying in bed after you were called and told to get up.

"Then when you were only half dressed you wasted eight minutes more looking out of the window at two dogs that were fighting.

"In school you lost ten minutes of the study hour drawing pictures in your copy book, and you wasted eleven minutes more over that newspaper you carried to school.

"When you came home, instead of going directly to your room to wash your face and hands and brush your hair as your mother asked you, you spent nine minutes grumbling on the stairs before you obeyed her.

"You stopped in the street to talk to Tommy Rose and wasted twelve minutes of your music lesson time besides—"

"Oh, stop!" cried Jamie, "don't tell me any more about the time I've wasted, please."

"Well, I'll tell you about the other things, then: your wasted opportunities. You saw a bird's nest robbed today and never said a word when you might have saved it.

"When you saw that little boy drop his marbles you only laughed at him, when you might have helped to pick them up.

"You let your sister take that long, hot walk to the postoffice this afternoon when you could have gone there so easily on your bicycle.

"There was another wasted opportunity when you were so inattentive to your history lesson in school.

"You flew into a passion, too, because your shoe string was in a knot—wasted opportunity of self-control.

"You forgot to rise and offer your mother a chair when she entered the room—wasted opportunity to be polite.

"You bought chewing gum after resolving never to buy it again—wasted money and wasted good resolution.

"But I have read enough to prove what I have said. Take pains, my dear boy. It is in your power to lighten my burdens each day."—Selected.

Laughter sheds perfume; life is made more fair
When sounds of mirth lend fragrance to the day;
The fogs of fear are quickly chased away
With laughter's music ringing in the air.
A merry laugh is full of golden gleams.
Driving the shadows out; a thousand harms
Are kept at bay by laughter's subtle charms,
Pouring through life in purifying streams.

FIVE "MUSTS"

OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

By F. B. MEYER, D. D.

Minister Emeritus, Christ Church, London

"During his remarkable tour of the United States and Canada, in his eighty-first year, Dr. Meyer gave several of the addresses embodied in this book. They were listened to by eager multitudes, who give great testimony to their resultant blessing, and now an audience world-wide in extent is permitted to read these God-given messages. By means of this book the reader may find in God's "MUSTS" a blessed compulsion that will energize and vitalize the whole of life."

"The Silk of the Trade"

When the surface of this granite, which is a composite of these and other actual precious stone crystals, is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these minute jewels become visible.

Be sure that the monuments you buy are cut from genuine Winnsboro Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

When you have purchased a monument specifying Winnsboro Granite, write us giving name of your Memorial Merchant, and we will send you a polished Winnsboro Granite paper weight.

BACOT: Entered into life eternal on the afternoon of Sunday, December 25, 1927, in Charleston, S. C., THOMAS WRIGHT BACOT, son of Robert Dewar and Julia Huger Bacot, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

JOHN GILLIAM FRIEND.

Entered into Life Eternal, after a long illness at his home, in Danville, Va., October 3, 1927, JOHN GILLIAM FRIEND, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. Son of the late Charles Friend and Mary Atkinson Minge of "White Hill", near Petersburg, Va.

He is survived by his wife, Jean Boylan Green, and two daughters, Belle Mayo and Anne Page, also three sisters, Mrs. Natalie F. Smith, of Richmond, Va., Mrs. Willis H. Bocock, of Athens, Ga., and Mrs. F. T. McFaden of Winchester, Va.

"The strife is o'er, the battle done,
The Victory of life is won.

CHARLES HARRISON COCKE.

Resolutions.

Be it resolved by the vestry of St. John's Church, City Point, that, in the death of Charles Harrison Cocke, who lost his life in the burning of the Grand Central Hotel early Christmas morning, St. John's Church is bereaved of one of its most faithful members. From the beginning of his residence in the comunity he threw himself whole-heartedly in the work of this church, serving it faithfully as Junior Warden of the vestry and superintendent of the Sunday school and teacher of a large class of boys. Whatever concerned his church was of the deepest concern to him, and what was needed, whether work or money, he cheerfully gave to the extent of his ability. The church and the community will sadly miss his genial, cheerful and optimistic spirit and his ready and hearty cooperation in everything that made for betterment and progress.

Be it resolved, further, that these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of this meeting, that they be published in the Southern Churchman and the local papers and that they be sent to his bereaved sister, to whom we extend our sincere sympathy.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

The Bohlen Lectures for 1928 on the foundation of the late John Bohlen, Esq., will be delivered by the Rev. Carl E. Grammer, S. T. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, Holy Trinity Parish House, Philadelphia, Twentieth Street below Walnut, Tuesday, January 10; Thursday, January 12; Tuesday, January 17; Thursday, January 19; Tuesday, January 24; Thursday, January 26, at 4:45 P. M. Subject: Things That Remain.

The Bohlen Lecture Committee—The Bishop of Pennsylvania, the rector of Holy Trinity Parish and the Professors of Systematic Divinity, Biblical Learning and Church History in the Philadelphia Divinity School.

The Deaconess House.

Deaconess Gertrude Stewart, for more than twenty years a missionary of the Episcopal Church in China, and one of the large number of missionaries of all communions withdrawn from China as a result of the revolution there, has been appointed as head deaconess in charge of the Church Training and Deaconess House of the Episcopal Church at 708 Spruce Street, Philadelphia.

Deaconess Stewart assumes charge on Friday, the Feast of the Epiphany, the day on which the school was founded in this city thirty-eight years ago, succeeding Clara M. Carter, who has been associated with the school for many years and who goes on the retired list. Deaconess Edith Clarke, who for twenty-three years has been assistant to the head deaconess, also goes on the retired list at the same time.

The Deaconess House in this city is one of the outstanding educational institutions of the Episcopal Church devoted to the training of women for missionary and other work of the Episcopal Church. Hundreds have passed through its doors specially equipped for missionary, social service and parochial work, and its graduates today are serving in all parts of the world as missionaries.

In connection with the changes which go into effect on Epiphany, Bishop Garland officiates at 10 o'clock in the morning at a celebration of the Holy Communion and memorial service to the late Rev. Dr. J. DeWolf Perry, for more than thirty-eight years Warden of the Deaconess House. Dr. Perry died last April at his home in Germantown, in his eighty-ninth year, after sixty-one years of continuous service in the Episcopal Church in this Diocese.

Missionary Work.

In more than a score of Episcopal Church parishes of Philadelphia and vicinity, beginning Sunday, January 1, and continuing during the following two weeks, intimate descriptions of the Church's work among the Indians of South Dakota will be presented by the Rev. Robert Pearsall Frazier and Mrs. Frazier, members of one of Philadelphia's socially prominent families, who have been working for nearly nine years as missionaries among the Indians.

In addition to these two missionaries, the Rev. John Cole McKim, for many years a missionary in Japan and son of Bishop McKim, of Japan, was the preacher at a missionary service Sunday night in St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, and on January 5 will describe conditions in Japan before the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Mark's Church, Fifteenth and Locust.

Sunday morning Mr. Frazier occupied the pulpit at the Huntington Valley Chapel, Meadowbrook, and Mrs. Frazier met with the Young People's Fellowship of the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown. Mr. Frazier entered the ministry from Old St. Peter's Church in this city, and since his ordination in 1919 has devoted his entire life to missionary work among the Indians. Mr. and Mrs. Frazier's appointments include during the two weeks the University Christian Association, St. Martin's, Radnor; Holy Trinity, West Chester; St. Peter's, Philadelphia; St. Andrew's, West Philadelphia; Philadelphia Divinity School; All Hallows, Wyncote; Transfiguration (University of Pennsylvania Students) Church; St. Paul's, South Philadelphia; Episcopal Academy, Church Farm School, Glen Loch; Calvary, Germantown, and St. James, Philadelphia.

Carolers.

In addition to the distribution of gifts among the more than 400 patients of the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, the celebration of Christmas at the hospital included the two annual carol services which for many years have been the outstanding features of the Christmas season.

Christmas morning, beginning at 5 o'clock, 100 nurses of the hospital, under the leadership of the Rev. Joseph Manuel, chaplain of the institution, conducted their Christmas carol services. For one hour they visited the wards and sang Christmas carols. The chaplain held at early morning communion service for the nurses in the chapel. There was another celebration at 8:30 A. M. for all patients who were able to leave their beds.

On Wednesday, Holy Innocents' Day, Bishop Garland, Rev. Frank L. Vernon, rector of St. Mark's Church, and the choir of St. Mark's Church took part in the annual Holy Innocents' Day carol service. For a number of years this special service has been cared for by St. Mark's. The carolers sang a number of special selections in each ward, and the Bishop and Dr. Vernon greeted each of the patients.

"Loyalty Program."

The widespread activity known as the "Loyalty Program" observed by many Christian communions was brought to its close early in December with varying records of good accomplished. The Cathedral holds precedence, probably, among our own parishes, in increased attendance reported both in its congregations and its Church School.

"Experience Meeting."

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of the Advent held its annual "Experience Meeting" with the opening fall session, "the summer earnings and how they were earned", forming a most interesting program. The net sum reported amounted to one hundred dollars. The same parish reports the successful experiment of a parish supper enjoyed on the evening of each third Sunday of the month, following the Corporate Communion of Bible classes earlier in the day. The supper is well attended, and the congregation assembling later for Evening Prayer is perceptibly augmented through those remaining.

G. F. S.

Renewed interest and activity within the Girls' Friendly Society is affording much encouragement to that work. A new branch organized recently in Trinity Church, Owensboro, Rev. C. C. Miller, rector, has held its first admission service, presenting a class of thirty for membership. The Cathedral Branch also recently held a similar service, adding seven new members and two associates to its ranks. St. Andrew's Branch will shortly follow in line, enlarging its numbers.

A branch has also been recently organized in the Church of Our Merciful Saviour, Rev. George G. Walker rector, the main parish for colored people in Louisville, and its first admission service will be held at an early date.

The Annual Every-Member Canvass reports work completed through the Diocese in general, with results not yet wholly tabulated. The Bishop's busy fall circuit, covering his large field, having been accomplished for the present, he is now on his way to Washington, where his presence and cooperation has been asked in the Conference of Clergy there assembling early in January.

Work of Hungarian Priest.

The Rev. Dr. Geza De Papp, a priest of the Hungarian (Magyar) Church, has for some time been at work among his people in Lynch, Ky.

This servant of God, and scholar, has had no easy task; yet labors faithfully on, even though under, oftentimes, distressing circumstances.

Dr. De Papp writes: "The Church has here a very important and necessary call to help to take out a people from a serious moral condition. I have recognized the causes of the moral sickness. I took up the fight with the enemy, and it must be mentioned that the Lynch Hungarian people are not the same kind of people like my old country Hungarian people in Europe. My old country Hungarian people in Europe are brave, good-hearted, faithful, sober, gallant and like Christ; but the Lynch Hungarian people are not this kind.

There is a constant counter-work against my work. I took up the fight with this counter-work, and many times it was bitter and distressing, with disheartening accidents."

This work of Dr. De Papp is under the supervision and direction of the Bishop of Lexington and the Department of Foreign Born of the National Council of the Church.

Personal Notes

The Rev. John C. Runkle has resigned as rector of the Church of the Advent, Kennett Square, Pa., and accepted a call to become assistant to the Rev. F. M. Kirkus, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Wilmington, Del. He entered upon his new duties on January 1, 1928.

The Rev. Elliott Darlington, son of Bishop Darlington, of the Diocese of Harrisburg, is serving as locum tenens at St. Matthias' Church, Philadelphia supplying the vacancy created by the death of the rector, the Rev. Samuel Hamill Wood.

The Rev. W. O. Bellis, Jr., rector of St. John's Church, East Mauch Chunk, Pa., has been appointed minister in charge of the Advent, Kennett Square; St. Andrew's, Oxford and St. John's, Kelton, to succeed the Rev. John C. Runkle, who goes to Trinity, Wilmington, at the end of December. Mr. Bellis takes charge January 15.

The Rev. W. W. Silliman has resigned as rector of St. James' Church, Macon, to accept appointment from the Bishop as minister in charge of Grace Church, Gainesville, Ga., the change to be effective January 1.

The Rev. Harry J. Fenwick, of Christ Church, Forest City, Pa., has been appointed to the missions of St. Paul's, White Haven and St. David's, Sandy Valley, Pa. At White Haven there are a number of large sanatoria for the tubercular and an important part of the work in this field is to minister to the sick. Mr. Fenwick begins his new work on January 1, 1928.

The Rev. W. H. Robinson, of St. Paul's Church, Troy, and St. James, Canton, has been appointed to St. James' Church, Pittston, to take charge February 1, 1928. The Rev. Mr. Neikirk, editor of the Bethlehem Churchman, served St. James' for fifteen years. He left the church in fine spirits to do aggressive work. Mr. Robinson believes in five Gospels—the four of the New Testament and the Gospel of Shoe Leather. He will be a faithful pastor.

Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., formerly Associate Secretary of the World Conference on Faith and Order, is now assistant minister at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia. Address, 217 South Twentieth Street, Philadelphia.

Ordinations.

On the Fourth Sunday in Advent, in the Chapel of the Holy Comforter, Monteagle, Tenn., Mr. Andrew Herman Edwin Asboe was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee, acting for the Bishop of Porto Rico. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., Dean of the DuBose Training School, where he has pursued his preparation for Holy Orders. The Rev. E. H. Merriman, D. D., and the Rev. Arthur C. Cole, professors in the school, read the Litany and the Call to the Ministry. The Rev. William Haskell DuBose, D. D., priest in charge of the mission, read the Epistle, and the Rev. James R. Sharp acted as chaplain to the Bishop and read the Preface to the Ordinal. Bishop Maxon preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Asboe will be engaged during the winter in missionary work under Bishop Beecher in Western Nebraska.

I Pay Cash

for Old Stamps and Old Envelopes

I am a private collector of old U. S. and Confederate postage stamps and pay high cash prices. I pay from $1.00 to $10.00 each for old Patriotic envelopes with pictures of flags, guns, soldiers, generals, emblems, etc., on them. These were extensively used during the war between the North and South, 1861 to 1866. I pay high prices for scores of different kinds of U. S. stamps on old envelopes mailed from 1845 to 1875. For nearly all old Confederate States stamps, used or unused on old envelopes, as originally mailed or separate, I pay big prices. Old folded letters with postmasters' markings and postmarks on them are also valuable to me. Many readers of this magazine have old letters, etc., written during the Civil War by parents, grandparents and old soldiers. These have been saved and stored away in old trunks, chests, etc. I will buy them and prices I will pay will surprise you. I don't want the letters, only the old envelopes with the stamps on them. Investigate. See what you can find. Also inquire from old relatives and your neighbors. Send what you find to me for my inspection so I can look them over and make you a cash offer. # THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY was organized in 1816 for the sole object "of encouraging a wider circulation of the Holy Scriptres, without note or comment". In 110 years it has issued 174,121,599 volumes of the Scriptures.

This world-wide organization engages more than three thousand Christian men and women, who carry the Scriptures forth to the people of their respective races, selilng at cost and giving freely to those too poor to pay.

During 1925 the Society issued 9,214,423 volumes of the Scriptures in over 150 languages. This is considered a creditable achievement, but our efforts must be multiplied many times if the needs of the world are to be met.

Financial support of Christian people make possible this fundamental work of girding the globe with the Gospel.

Through Israel.

I. To redeem and purchase unto Himself, by the blood of a lamb, the Nation of Israel to be His peculiar earthly people. Ex. 12:13; 13:2; 15:13, 16; 19:5, 6.

II. To rule over Israel nationally as their King, and through them to rule over the Nations. Isa. 9:6, 7; Luke 1:32, 33; Zech. 14:9; Rev. 1:5; Dan. 7:14, 18, 27; Isa. 2:2, 3; 60:12.

III. To separate Israel unto Himself as a Kingdom of Priests on earth. Ex. 19:5, 6; Isa. 32:1; 61:6.

IV. To cause Israel to blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit, as the vineyard of the Lord. Isa. 27:6; 5:1-7; Gen. 22:17, 18.

V. To bring Israel unto possession of the promised land of Canaan, and also of the whole earth. Ezek. 36; Rom. 4:13; Gen. 17:4-6; Gen. 22:18.

VI. To fill Israel with the knowledge of the Lord and His will, that through them He may reveal Himself to the Nations. Jer. 31:33, 34; Heb. 8:10, 11; Zech. 8:21-23; Isa. 61:11; 62:1-4.

VII. To reign with Christ forever over the new earth, having absolute and eternal victory in doing God's will on earth as it is done in heaven. Rev. 22:5; Dan. 7:18, 22, 27; Matt. 6:10.

to the glory of God the Father. II Cor. 5:18

Plan for the Heavens

Through the Church.

I. To redeem and purchase unto Himself by the blood of the Lamb, the Church to be the Bride of Christ, His heavenly people. 1 Pet. 1:18, 19; Acts 20:28; Eph. 1:13, 14; Phil. 3:20.

II. To rule over the Church, His Body, as her Head and Lord, and through the Church to rule over the principalities and powers in the heavenlies. Eph. 1:19-23; Col. 1:18; Rom. 8:37; 1 Cor. 6:3.

III. To separate the Church unto Himself as a Kingdom of Priests in the heavenlies. Rev. 1:5, 6; 5:9, 10; 1 Pet. 2:5, 9.

IV. To cause His Church to bring forth abundant fruit unto God, as branches of the True Vine. Rom. 7:4; Jno. 15; Heb. 6:14-20.

V. To bring the Church into possession of God's blessings in the heavenlies, and of all things in Christ. Eph. 1:3-14; Rom. 8:17; Heb. 1:2; Jno. 16:13-15.

VI. To fill the Church with the knowledge of the Lord and His will, that through the Church His wisdom may be revealed unto the principalities and powers in the heavenlies. Jno. 17:3; Eph. 5:17; Col. 1:9; Eph. 3:10; 1 Pet. 1:12; Matt. 5:16.

VII. To reign with Christ forever in the new heavens, having perfect victory over all things by delighting in and doing God's will absolutely in all things Ps. 40:8; Rev. 22:5; Rom. 8:37-39; Eph. 6:10-18; 2 Cor. 10:5; Rev. 12:7-11.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The fruit that will keep for eternity does not ripen in a moment.

It needs a trained ear to hear God's call above all other voices of the world. —Dr. William Porkess.

Sun and moon and beat of sea,
Great lands stretching endlessly,
Where are bonds to bind the free?
All the world was made for me.
—Adelaide Crapsey.

"He who has learned how to pray aright has discovered the secret of a holy life."

Sin is putting poison into the sting of death.—Thomas Adam.

Souls are won by those who give their whole souls to the service.

How little it takes to start the voice of praise in some people. The little boy in the slum whose mother had nothing but a board to cover him on cold nights said, "Mother, what do little boys do who have no boards to cover them at night"?—The Methodist Protestant.

The only doubts to be ashamed of are those you are proud of.

The heart without the offering is better than the offering without the heart.

We all need a time of repair each week. We need time in which to store the battery with spiritual energy. We need to gain reserve power. We need to augment our power of resistance. We need from time to time to take our spiritual bearings, and find out where we are and whither we are tending.—John R. Mott.

Faithfulness in the darkness to what we have seen in the light brings us to a brighter light still.—R. J. Campbell.

" 'Lord, help me'! is a prayer that a thousand men will offer when one will pray, 'Lord, what wilt Thou have me do'? There are not many men who would be unwilling to have God for an assistant; but God for a Master is not sought so generally. Yet he who would be a worker together with God must be ready to work as God's servant —or as God's child."

"To teach a child to love the truth and hate a lie is greater than to invent a flying machine that can cross the North Pole or circumnavigate the globe."

TRADERS

"Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war," and it is equally true that peace and prosperity bring penalties and perils. Falstaff described his regiment of human wrecks and scarecrows as the cankers of a calm world and a long peace. While a nation is in battle or a people is struggling to combat difficulties and conquer adverse forces of nature weaklings and fools disappear and fantastic follies draw no following. When living becomes easy and national life a monotony of increasing wealth, fads, eccentric cults, crazes, affectations, exaggerated refinements, enervations of luxury and idleness, develop like weeds on untilled ground or pimples on an unused body. "In the reproof of chance lies the true proof of men."

Among the unwholesome, insipid and cankered small fruits of tranquillity and growing opulence we have in this country are the persons of both sexes who affect lofty contempt for the business of buying and selling. They pose, elaborately and carefully, as artistic, aesthetic, transcendental, apostles of high philosophies. Writing for any who will read, talking for any who will listen, they proclaim scorn for trade and traders as creatures sunk deep in the mire of materialism, sordid and soulless, breathing a heavy atmosphere of greed in which no beauty nor exalted thought may live. Some of these persons engage in what they fondly believe to be literature, while others attempt the arts or connect somehow with the stage, or are just generally and vaguely intellectual and intense. Dealers in codfish and cheese, stocks and bonds, money, calico, alike are objects of their gibes. In the Rotarians, Kiwanis clubs, chambers of commerce and boards of trade, representing efforts of communities for development and expansion, they see only subjects for ridicule and caricature, assemblages of coarse clods, destitute of culture and insensible to its wooings.

Writers and playwrights who try to get with what they call realism and which really is laborious pandering to appetite for filth assume to be on pedestals of grand purpose, looking down on honest people selling honest goods for honest profits. Self-styled progressives who revert to the indecencies of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, while incapable of the flashes of wit and genius which won tolerance for them, sneer at the clean living and thinking citizens who support themselves and their families by dealing with facts and figures. Impressionist and futurist artists making pictures which, because nobody can understand, somebody occasionally buys, gifted young women who in quest of dollars display to the public their mental and moral deformities or physical perfections, combine to deride the homely and simple virtues and the base habit of obtaining food and lodging and clothes by working for them.

Some of these persons, posing as superior to the common clay and the every day elements of the population, contrive to thrust themselves much and frequently into the newspapers. Thereby, they may draw from the unthinking some following and imitation, may tempt to uselessness and foolish dalliance with feeble futilities some who might be capable of usefulness and actual achievements. Consequently, a little time and space may be spared to consider the scorners and compare them with the scorned.

Real thinkers, faithful students, diligent and sincere teachers, are among the most useful of human beings. Even when they are wrong they do good by stimulating thought and research. Prose writers, poets, painters, sculptors, actors, have earned and held, yet earn and hold, the gratitude and affection of the civilized world, instructing, stirring the sweetest and noblest emotions, sending imaginations on glorious flights. All these have been and are real workers. They have respected, and those who live respect now, as comrades and co-laborers all other real workers of every avocation. The dawdlers and dabblers, victims of unjustified vanity whose talents are meagre or imaginary, the slothful who have capacities without brains and courage to apply them, tricksters who seek a short road to fame by shocking every instinct of propriety, purveyors of many kinds of sham—most of them sincere only in detestation of each other and admiration of themselves—all these assume to be of finer fibre than all others of mankind. They view commerce and traffic as ignoble and degrading.

These persons are useful to nobody. Most of them disappear presently from public sight and recollection. A few are driven to wisdom by deserved privation and acquire healthy self-respect by respectable self-support. In real accomplishment for communities, the country and fellowmen, generally the best of them, make ridiculously pitiful showing compared with the men behind the counters and at the desks in villages, towns and cities who do valuable service and keep the machinery of life moving. When something is to be done for local or general advancement no one thinks of the type identified with what is called Greenwich village or its small imitations elsewhere. It is the commercial bodies—the traders—who are called on, can be relied on and who respond. The merchants of London caused settlement of most of this continent and made this republic possible, and their guilds, predecessors of our present commercial bodies and with the same ethical and practical purposes commanded respectful attention of the world's then greatest governments. Their successors, here with us in the business of trading, build and maintain the churches and schoolhouses and supply the strongest and most willing right hands of the pastors and teachers. They give the means with which the hungry are fed and distresses of the stricken relieved. It is the commercial bodies that establish industries, make actual progress, create new wealth, provide employment for many hands, make available for human needs and pleasures natural resources. They are the powerful, prevailing forces for both progress and conservatism, for moving forward on straight lines and by sane methods. Their function is noble and the vast majority of them fulfil it nobly. Lacking them, the country would languish dismally. Deprived of those who would detract from the dignity and inestimable value of their calling and who endeavor to picture trade, tradesmen and traders as despicable—while eager to annex some of the trader's dollars—the country could move along safely, comfortably and happily enough and without feeling that it had lost anything. Alfred B. Williams.

FOR THE DAY OF THE EPIPHANY

PART II. The first duty required of us by the law of charity towards our brethren is the duty of truth. We are not bound to bestow on all men our attentions, our cares and our officious services; to all we owe the truth. The different situations in which rank and birth place us in the world, diversify our duties with regard to our fellow creatures; in every situation of life that of truth is the same. We owe it to the great equally as to the humble; to our subjects as to our masters; to the lovers of it as to those who hate it; to those who mean to employ against ourselves as to those who wish it only for their own benefit. These are conjunctures in which prudence permits to hide and to dissemble the love which we bear to our brethren; ;none can possibly exist in which we are permitted to dissemble the truth: in a word, truth is not our own property, we are only its witnesses, its defenders, and its depositories. It is the spark, that light of God, which illuminates the whole world; and, when we dissemble or obscure it, we are unjust towards our brethren, and ungrateful towards the Father of Light, who hath spread it through our soul.

Nevertheless, the world is filled with dissemblers of the truth; we live, it would appear, only to deceive each other; and society, the first bond which ought to be truth, is no longer but a commerce of dissimulation, duplicity and cunning. Now, in the conduct of the priests of our gospel, let us view all the different kinds of dissimulation of which men render themselves every day culpable towards truth; we shall there find a dissimulation of silence, a dissimulation of compliance and palliation, a dissimulation of disguise and falsehood.

I WOULD that a faithful soul comprehend that he is responsible to the truth alone; that he is upon the earth solely to render glory to truth: I would that he bear upon his countenance that noble, and, may I say, lofty dignity which grace inspires; that heroical candour which contempt of the world and its glory produces; that generous and Christian liberty, which expects only eternal riches, which has no hope but in God, which dreads nothing but the internal Judge, which pays court to, and spares nothing but the interests of righteousness and of charity, and which has no wish of making itself agreeable but by the truth. I would that the sole presence of a righteous soul impose silence on the enemies of virtue; that they respect that character of truth which he should bear engraved on his forehead, that they crouch under his holy greatness of soul, and that they render homage, at least by their silence and confusion, to that virtue which they inwardly despise. Thus, the Israelites, taken up with their dances, their profane rejoicings and their foolish and impious shouts around the golden calf, stop all in a moment, and keep a profound silence on the sole appearance of Moses, who comes down from the mountain, armed with the law of the Lord and with his eternal truth. First dissimulation of the truth: a dissimulation of silence.

THE priests and scribes, on the contrary, forced by the evidence of the scriptures, to render glory to the truth softened it by guarded expressions. They endeavour to unite that respect which they owe to the truth, with that complaisance which they wish still to preserve for Herod; they suppress the title of king which the magi had given Him, and which had so often been bestowed by the prophets upon the Messiah; they designed Him by a title which might equally mark an authority of doctrine, or of superior power: They announce Him rather a legislator established to regulate the manners, than as a sovereign raised up for the deliverance of His people from bondage. And, notwithstanding that they themselves expect a Messiah, King, and Conqueror. they soften the truth which they wish to announce, and complete the blindness of Herod, with whom they temporise.

The conduct of these priests appear base to you, my brethren, but, if you are disposed to enter into judgment with yourselves and to follow yourselves through the detail of your duties, of your friendships, of your conversations, you will see that all your discourses, and all your proceedings, are merely mollifications of the truth, and temporisings in order to reconcile it with prejudices, or the passions of those with whom it is your lot to live. We never hold out the truth to them but in a point of view in which it may please; in their most despicable vices we always find some favourable side; and, as all the passions have always some apparent resemblance to some virtue, we never fail to save ourselves through the assistance of that resemblance.

O MY GOD! pour then through my soul that humble and generous love of truth, with which thy chosen are filled in heaven, and which is the only characteristic mark of the just upon the earth. Let my life be only such as to render glory to thine eternal truths; let me honour them through the sanctity of my manners; let me defend them through zeal for thy interests alone, and enable me continually to oppose them in error and vanity; annihilate in my heart those human fears, that prudence of the flesh which dreads to lay open to persons their errors and their vices. Suffer not that I be a feeble reed which bends to every blast, nor that I ever blush to bear the truth imprinted on my forehead as the most illustrious title with which thy creature can glorify himself, and as the most glorious mark of Thy mercies upon my soul. In effect, it is not sufficient to be the witness and depository of it, it is also necessary to be its defender; character contrasted with that of Herod, who is, in our gospel at present its enemy and its persecutor. Last instruction with which our gospel furnishes us is: The truth persecuted.

PART III. If it is a crime to withstand the truth when it shines upon us, iniquitously to withold it when we owe it to others; it is the fulness of iniquity, and the most distinguished character of reprobation, to persecute and combat it. Nevertheless, nothing more common in the world than this perfection of truth; and the impious Herod, who, on the present occasion sets himself up against it, has more imitators than is supposed.

FOR NO. 1. Who can flatter himself with not being among the number of the persecutors of truth, under the description of scandals? I even speak not of those disorderly souls who have erected the standard of guilt and licentiousness, and who pay little, if, indeed, any, attention to the public opinion; the most notorious scandals are not always those which are most to be dreaded; and avowed debauchery, when carried to a certain degree, occasions, in general, more censure upon our conduct than imitators of our excesses. I speak of those souls delivered up to the pleasures, to the vanities, and to all the abuses of the age, and whose conduct, in other respects regular, is not only unreproachable in the sight of the world, but attracts even the praises and the esteem of men; and I say that they persecute the truth through their sole examples, that they undo, as much as in them lies, the maxims of the gospel in every heart; they cry out to all men, shunning of pleasures is a needless precaution; that love of the world and the love of virtue are not at all incompatible; that a taste for theatres, for dress, and for public amusements, is entirely innocent, and that it is easy to lead a good life even while living like the rest of the world. This worldly regularity is therefore a continual persecution of truth; and so much the more dangerous, as it is an authorized persecution which has nothing odious in it, and against which no precaution is taken; which attacks the truth without violence, with effusion of blood, under the smiling image of peace and society; and which, through these means occasions more deserters from the truth than all tyrants and tortures formerly did.

I speak even of those good characters who only imperfectly fulfil the duties of piety, who still retain, too, public remains of the passions of the world and of its maxims; and, I say, that they persecute the truth through these unfortunate remains of infidelity and weakness; that they are the occasion of it being blasphemed by the impious and other sinners; that they authorize the senseless discourses of the world against the piety of the servants of God; that they are the cause of souls being disgusted with virtue, who might otherwise feel themselves disposed to it; that they confirm, in the path of error, those who seek pretexts to remain in it; in a word, that they render virtue either suspicious or ridiculous. Thus, still every day, as the Lord formerly complained through his prophet Jeremiah, the backsliding Israel, that is to say, the world, justifies herself more than treacherous Judah, that is to say, the weaknesses of the good: I mean to say, that the world thinks itself secure when it sees that thase souls, who profess piety, join in the pleasures and frivolities, are warm like the rest of men, upon fortune, upon favour, upon preferences, and upon injuries; pursue their own ends, have still a desire of pleasing, eagerly seek after distinctions and favours and sometimes make even piety subservient towards more surely attaining them. Ah! it is then that the world triumphs and that it feels itself comforted in the comparison; it is then that, finding such a resemblance between the virtue of the good and its own vices, it feels tranquil upon its situation, and thinks that it is needless to change, since, in changing the name, the same things are still retained.

AND it is here that I cannot prevent myself from saying with the apostle Peter, to you, whom God hath recalled from the ways of the world and of passions, to those of truth and righteousness, let us act in such manner among the worldly, that, in place of decrying virtue as they have hitherto done, and of despising or censuring those who practice it by the good works which they shall behold in us our pure and holy manners, our patience under scorn, our wisdom and our circumspenction in discourse, our modesty and humility in exaltation, our equality of mind and submission under disgrace, our gentleness towards our inferiors, our regard for our equals, our fidelity towards our masters, our universal charity towards our brethren, force them to render glory to God, make them to respect and even envy the destiny of virtue, and dispose their hearts to receive the grace of light and of truth when it shall deign to visit them, and to enlighten them upon their erroneous ways. Let us shut up the mouth of all the enemies of virtue by the fight of an irreprehensible life; let us honour piety, that it may honour us, let us render it respectable if we wish to gain partisans to it; let us furnish to the world examples which condemn it, and not censures, which justify it; let us accustom it to think, that godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise not only of the life to come, but also peace, satisfaction, and content, which are the only good, and the only real pleasures of the present life.

LASTLY—We render ourselves culpable of this persecution of seduction, by making our talents instrumental to the destruction of the reign of Jesus Christ; the talents of the body in inspiring iniquitous passions; in placing ourselves in hearts where God alone ought to be; in corrupting the souls for whom Jesus Christ gave his blood; the talents of the mind in inducing to vice; in embellishing it with all the charms most calculated to hide its infamy and horror; in presenting the poison under the most alluring and seductive form; and in rendering it immortal by lacivious works, through the means of which a miserable author shall, to the end of the ages preach up vice, corrupt hearts and inspire his brethren with every deplorable passion, which had enslaved himself during life; shall see his punishment and his torments increased in proportion as the impious fire he has lighted up shall spread upon the earth; shall have the shocking consolation of declaring himself, even after death, against his God, of gaining souls from him whom he had redeemed, of still insulting his holiness and majesty, of perpetuating his own rebellion and disorders even beyond the tomb, and of making, even to the fulfilment of time, the crimes of all men his own crimes. Woe, said the Lord, to all those who rise up against my name and glory, and who lay snares for my people; I will take vengeance on them on the day of judgment; I will demand of them the blood of their brethren whom they have seduced, and whom they have caused to perish; and I will multiply upon them, and make them for ever to feel the most dreadful evils in return for that glory which they have ravished from me.

BUT for you, who would not dare to start a doubt of the certitude of faith, with what astonishment would that infidel regard the censures which you so plentifully bestow upon your servants? You prostrate yourselves before his cross, he would say to you as before the pledge of your salvation; and you laugh at those who bear it in their heart, and who ground their whole hope and expectation in it! You worship him as your Judge; and you condemn and load with ridicule those who dread him, and who anxiously labour to render him favourable to their interests. You believe him to be sincere and faithful in his word, and you look upon, as weak minds, those who place their trust in him and who sacrifice everything to the grandeur and to the centainty of his promises! O, man, so astonishing, so full of contradictions, so little in unison with thyself, would the infidel explain, how great and how holy must the God of the Christians therefore be, seeing that among all those who know him, he hath no enemies but such as are of thy description!

LET us, therefore, respect virtue, my brethren; let us honour in his servants, the gifts of God, and the wonders of his grace. Let us merit, by our deference and our esteem for piety the blessing of itself. Let us regard the worthy and pious soul as the soul who alone continues to draw down favours of Heaven upon the earth, as resources established to reconcile us one day with God, as blessed signs which prove to us that the Lord still looketh upon men with pity, and continueth his mercies upon his church. Let us encourage by our praises, if we cannot strengthen by our example, the souls who return to him; let us applaud their change, if we think it impossible, as yet, to change ourselves; let us glory in defending them, if our passions will not, as yet permit us to imitate them. Let us reverence and esteem virtue. Let us have no friends but the friends of God; let us count upon the fidelity of men only in proportion as they are faithful to their Master and Creator; let us confide our sorrors and our sufferings only to those who can present them to him, who alone can console them: let us believe to be in our real interests only those who are in the interests of salvation. Let us smooth the way to our conversion, let us, by our respect for the just, prepare the world to behold us one day, without surprise, just ourselves. Let us not by our derisions and censures, raise up an invincible stumbling block of human respect, which shall for ever prevent us from declaring ourselves disciples of that piety which we have so loudly and so publicly decried. Let us render glory to the truth; and, in order that it may deliver us, let us religiously receive it, like the magi, from the moment that it is manifested to us; let us not dissemble it, like the priests, when we owe it to our brethren; let us not declare against it, like Herod, when we can no longer dissemble it ourselves, in order that after having walked in the ways of truth upon the earth, we may all together one day be sanctified in truth and perfected in charity.

"They reared the tower of their mirthless pride
Where the smooth sands stretched level to the sea,
And having rid the world of mystery,
Complacent, watched the ebbing of the tide.
"But the moon laughed, and bade the tide obey:
And the wind waked from sleep and put on strength:
And where the fallen tower boasts its length
A child seeks blocks to help him in his play!"

DARWINISM.

Rev. J. J. D. Hall.

Don't be discouraged, poor little fly,
You'll be a chipmunk by and by.
And years after, I can see,
You'll be a full-grown chimpanzee.

Next I see, with prophet's ken,
You'll take your place in the ranks of men.
Then, in the great, sweet by-and-by,
We'll be angels, you and I.

Why should I swat you, poor little fly?
Prophetic chum of my home on high.
That's what Darwin says, not I.

WHY WAS THE ENGLISH PRAYER BOOK REJECTED?

By Dyson Hague, Toronto

IT seems to be admitted that the speech that turned the tide was the deliverance of Sir William Joynson-Hicks in the British House of Commons. The scene was remarkable. One who was present said it was one of the most momentous parliamentary struggles he had ever witnessed. Never, in his experience, was the House moved and swayed by such intense emotions. The British House of Commons was at its best. All party considerations were, for the moment, buried. Liberals and Laborites cheered Sir William Joynson-Hicks, their bete noir of reaction, and Tories applauded the speeches of Socialists. The deepest feelings and convictions were aroused in a stern tide of resolve to stand by the Church of England as by law established and to uphold, at all costs, the Reformation settlement of the Church. The outstanding points in his speech were these. First, that a vast body of English Churchmen are determined to oppose any alteration in the Communion service, especially with regard to the reservation of the Sacrament when it is well known that, sweeping aside all camouflage and casuistry, its purpose is boldly declared to be for adoration and if not for adoration, at least to practically teach a doctrine of the Sacrament that is repudiated by the sixth post-Communion Rubric, and the twenty-eighth Article. And, he contended, the Bishops were either in sympathy with this already, or they were helpless in preventing the men who were determined to have it. It was utterly wrong to alter the law of the Church and the teachings of the Church in order that illegal men might be brought into line with the law, and everybody knew, as the Bishop of London declared, that the new book gave the Anglo-Catholics all they had fought for for the last forty years. Sir William repudiated absolutely the idea of the new book as a peacemaker in the face of fourteen hundred Anglo-Catholic priests who very plainly said they would not obey the new Prayer Book. His second point was the autocracy of the orders to be made by the Bishops. The New Book, he contended, practically gave the Bishops the power to make rubrics and regulations for new services. The nebulous thing, known in the past as the jus liturgicum episcopi, now becomes a really tremendous engine of power in the hands of the Bishop. For, there is no appeal to Parliament, no appeal to the Church Assembly, no appeal to anyone. They may make the rubrics, and issue supplementary forms of service. The only person who will decide whether a Bishop has made a rule or supplementary form in accordance with the law is the Bishop himself. This point evidently made a profound impression upon the House of Commons. The third point made by Sir William, and in some degrees the strongest of all, was the rights of the laity of the Church of England as represented by the people's representatives in Parliament. "You are not sent here," he said, "as churchmen or non conformists. You are sent here as members of Parliament. Every member has a bounden duty to consider for himself the great issues which are before him, having regard to the interests of the nation as a whole and to those masses of people who have revered the Prayer Book all their lives as second only to the Bible." After all, the Church is established by Parliament, and every Englishman is entitled to be consulted on any alteration in it. In fact, as we review that extraordinary scene in the House of Commons and that suprising vote, one can only come to the conclusion that there must have been some Higher Force at work. No one can ever estimate the incomputable volumes of prayer that went up from every part of the kingdom that the Church of England might be saved from the momentous peril that threatened her; and prayer was made without ceasing by unknown myriads of the Church Assembly unto God that He would rule or overrule the counsels and decisions of Church Assembly and Parliament. And so it has come to pass. Whatever will happen now, whatever the Church Assembly will do, whatever the House of Commons may hereafter enact, it is clear that that House constitutionally accepted the responsibility of rejecting a book that, with many desirable and useful changes, introduced features with regard to the Communion service that were contrary to the Reformation settlement going back in the direction of the darkness of the doctrine of the pre-Reformation, days. The Church of England was Roman Catholic for hundreds of years before the Reformation, but since and now the English Church has been and is Protestant—and England, too.

THE ONLY SOLUTION OF EARTH'S SUPREME PROBLEM

By Bishop Warren A. Candler

WHEN near the end of his long and illustrious career, the Right Honorable William E. Gladstone said, "Talk about the questions of the day; there is but one question, and that is the gospel. It can and will correct everything needing correction."

This profound observation of the great British statesman is based on the essential nature of the gospel, and is justified by its supreme purpose.

The Christ came "to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke 19:10); and among the lost he reckoned sinners only.

The name divinely given to Him before His birth was "Jesus"; the reason given for it when announced by the angel was because "He shall save His people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21); and when He was born in Bethlehem, the heavenly messenger sent to proclaim His birth to the shepherds, said to them, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour" (Luke 11:10, 11). There can be no more joyous evangel published to a world of sinners than the proclamation of the fact that a Saviour has been sent to redeem them.

Sin is the most awful tragedy in the universe, and the salvation provided by our Lord Jesus Christ is the only hope which mankind has for deliverance from the dire disaster.

All the misery and suffering of the human race has issued from sin, and all its anguish is far less sorrowful than the dreadful source from which it flows.

The fact of sin, with all its rightful burden of guilt and corruption, has pressed hard upon the minds of the noblest and wisest men of all ages; and it has thereby given rise to every sort of theory and effort to explain it and cure it. History records a vast array of speculative systems to account for it and an endless line of futile efforts to secure deliverance from it—such as dualisms, gnosticisms, asceticisms, epicureanisms, stoicisms, optimisms, and pessimisms. From all these disappointing devices of thought and fruitless schemes of reformation, mankind has been constrained to turn away, crying in helplessness, "O, wretched race that we are! Who shall deliver us from the body of this death?"

The inventors of pagan cults, like Zoroasterianism, Brahmanism, Buddhism and Mohammedanism, have tried in vain to find a way of salvation from sin. But their vain rituals and their impotent sacrifices have been ineffectual to beget holiness of lives and to bring peace to the souls of men.

Our modern scientists and philosophers have attacked with their materialistic systems the problem of sin; but they have made the matter more perplexing by their proposed solutions of it, and they have rendered the case more hopeless by the remedies which they have offered for it.

Some of them have been so blind that they have denied the very existence of sin. A conspicuous and representative man among them has flatly declared, "I do seriously mean that no man is under any circumstances to be blamed for anything he may say or do."

From all the variant theories of evolution, which have appeared since the days of Charles Darwin until the present time, a fatalistic determinism in ethics has flowed, which has reduced sin to something less than a misfortune; and, in so far as it has cared to offer any remedy for the evil, it has pointed to nothing better than a prolonged process of development which men are not free enough to accept or resist.

According to these theories, sin is nothing but the uneliminated remains of a brute inheritance, derived by man from his animalistic ancestry; and all his acts are blameless and inevitable. The tender ministrations of a motherhood and the malicious deeds of murderers do not differ in moral quality. The caresses of the mother of the little Parker girl in Los Angeles, and the savage attacks upon the child by the fiend who slew her and dismembered her body, are equally praiseworthy and equally blameless—that is, neither is deserving of praise or blame.

By such fatalistic dogmas sin is made a natural necessity of human life, utterly unavoidable and wholly inevitable.

In so far as any hope for extrication from it is held out by these tenets of materialism, deliverance must come by prolonged processes of development through heredity and environment.

As a matter of fact, some of the leading adherents of evolutionary theories offer no hope of deliverance at all. They leave the problem of sin unsolved and abandon mankind to live without hope in the world and to die as the beast which perisheth. This is to exclude the possibility of moral progress.

For example, Mr. F. H. Bradley, says, "Is there in the end, and on the whole, any progress in the universe? Is the absolute either better or worse at any one time than another? It is clear that we must answer in the negative, since progress and decay are alike incompatible with perfection. There is, of course, progress in the world, and there is also retrogression, but we cannot think that the whole either moves on or backwards." That is a bold statement of static life and remediless hopelessness.

Mr. Thomas H. Huxley is even more explicit and pronounced in his exposition of this doctrine of despair. He says: "I know no study which is so unutterably saddening as that of the evolution of humanity, as it is set forth in the annals of history. Out of the darkness of prehistoric ages man emerges with the marks of his lowly origin strong upon him. He is a beast, only more intelligent than other beasts; a blind prey of impulses which as often as not lead him to destruction; a victim to endless illusions, which make his mental existence a terror and a burden, and fill his physical life with barren toil and battle. He attains a certain degree of physical comfort, and develops a more or less workable theory of life, in such favorable situations as the plains of Mesopotamia or of Egypt, and then, for thousands and thousands of years, struggles, with varying fortunes, attended by infinite wickedness, bloodshed and misery to maintain himself at this point against the greed and ambition of his fellowmen."

Celsus, the ancient sceptic, as quoted by Origen, held views similar to the opinions now entertained by these modern pessimists. He said: "There never has been in former times, nor is there now, nor will there ever be, any increase or decrease of evil. The nature of the universe is ever the same, and the production of evil is not a variable quantity."

It is evident that neither ancient nor modern philosophers have been able to solve the problem of sin.

And the pagan religions of the world are equally incapable of finding a solution of it. Barbarism has no capacity to remedy its ills, physical or moral; and civilized heathenism is no less incapable of eradicating its vices. Mohammedanism, Buddhism and Brahmanism possess no power to purify the peoples of the lands over which they prevail.

In vain we look throughout the whole earth to find a remedy for sin. Deliverance must come from without and from above this world of ours, if mankind is to be saved.

We might as well expect man to lift himself by his bootstraps over a quagmire as to depend upon anything inherent in human nature to rescue the race from the bog of depravity.

Christ alone is the sufficient Saviour; and His gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, is the only solution of the world's most awful and perplexing problem.

"Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 45:12.)

PRIMEVAL MONOTHEISM

AN interesting article by Bishop H. M. Dubose of the Methodist Church, discusses the uncovering of the temple of "El-Berith", i. e., the Covenant God, at Ancient Shechem. It dates from a period long prior to the time of Abraham. Indeed, Dr. Sellin of Berlin inclines to the view that it is a relic of ante-deluvian times.

It is an evidence that primitive worship was monotheistic and free from the idolatries of later times. It is a welcome confirmation of the accounts in Genesis which present primitive man as possessed of true, if as yet undeveloped, ideas of God. It explains the appearance of such worshippers of Jehovah as Melchizedek. It strongly supports the view that the original religion of mankind was monotheistic; that monotheism is not an evolution out of polytheism, but rather that polytheism is a devolution from early monotheism. "El" worship, i. e., the worship of God as one, was the original cult of ancient Semitic people, as these excavations at Shechem reveal. There is, too, in these excavations, an uncovering of various strata, which shew a gradual corruption of the more ancient and purer worship.

There is abroad an exploiting of ethnic religions, as stages in the evolution and the upward struggle of mankind toward a pure faith. It has in view, of course, the making of the Bible a record of man's discovery of God, in the place of what it claims to be, namely God's discovery of Himself to man.

The best commentary on all this is Romans 1:18-21. For all phases and forms of man-made religions are degradations from the original deposit of what man needed to know of God. And Abraham was called and his seed chosen and disciplined for the purpose of safe-guarding this original revelation until the day of God's redemption should arrive.

Bishop DuBose declares that such archaeological discoveries require the consignment to the scrap heap of several favorite contentions of the radical school critics. The time is come definitely to abandon:

1. The Bedouin or Arabian origin of the Hebrews.
2. The development of the religion of Israel from animism and nature cults.
3. The Babylonian source of the Old Testament stories of Creation.
4. The late dating of the Pentateuch with its consequent rejection of the Mosaic authorship thereof.

And he contends that the reasons for this demand depend upon two critically reliable sources of proof, to wit: The records of the Old Testament, and the archaeological situation developed by excavations like those at Shechem.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND THE NEW MAN

By Kenneth Mackenzie

TRANSFIGURATION of life is the essential result of the reception and outworking of Christian faith. That faith is more than the expression of a religious ideality. It evidences a law as inviolable as any in the visible world. The unfolding of its dynamics in the New Testament is a marvelous history of the sanctifying of our human nature by a force which wrought changes in lives utterly incompetent to effect such ends by any self-imposed motives or methods. A cowardly Peter is found so exalted in its controlling influence that he can withstand the very tribunal which had condemned his Lord (Acts 4:19). The persecuting Saul, overmastered with heartless bigotry and cruel fanaticism, becomes in time the pleader for "the meekness and the gentleness of Christ" (2 Cor. 10:3-5). To the Corinthian Christians he addresses the assurance that while the dark page of heathenism depicts sins unspeakably heinous, such sinners had been some of them, but they had been "washed, sanctified, justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. 6:9-11). And because the truth had burned into his own soul, he offers to them such a beautiful treatise on the love that flows from their new calling, as has never been penned by the hand of man (1 Cor. 13). We may estimate the singularity of this situation when record is admitted that in that very city of Corinth, opulent, worldly-wise and intellectually proud, iniquity so abounded that the temple of Aphrodite supported a thousand women who gave themselves to a life of shame as a part of the service of the goddess. The Romans are enjoined to embody in personal appropriation, the faith of God, "Who calleth those things that be not as though they were" (Rom. 4:17). To the Galatians he writes of the fruit of the Spirit in terms of such winsomeness as has always charmed the true believer (Gal. 5:22, 23). The Thessalonian Christians are congratulated that they had turned from idols to serve the living God (1 Thess. 1:9). The Colossians have been delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of the Son of God's love (Col. 1:13). Timothy is to exhort the wealthy of his charge to lay hold of "the life that is life indeed" (1 Tim. 6:19). And this quite consonant with our Lord's provision, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it abundantly" (John 10:10). The Hebrew Christians are admonished to "go on unto perfection" (Heb. 6:1); and the epistle is crowned with the behest, "Run with patience the race that is set before you, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith" (Heb. 12:1, 2). The writings of St. James and St. Peter abound with counsellings that the Christian faith is valueless, if it be not vindicated by a life that corresponds with its lofty purpose to demonstrate the power of the Lord Jesus to express Himself in the daily experience of His followers. And St. John constantly echoes what we read earlier in the New Testament. Those of us who have labored in mission work at home and abroad are fully acquainted with the story of transformed lives, once deep in the degradation of sin, clothed, in their right mind, gloriously joyous in their new-found fellowship with the Lord Jesus, wholeheartedly zealous that others may taste of the good they have received.

A recent slur in the public press read, "It is said that there are five hundred million Christians in the world today. We'd like to know where they are to be found." This discloses a humiliating contradiction to the facts we have noted. Dr. Lyman Abbott, in his later years, was asked, "Is Christianity a failure"? His answer was, "I do not think it has ever been tried". A writer in one of the current issues of a religious magazine, under the caption, "Why I am not a Christian", frankly declares that prevailing Christianity is so distant from the ideal of the New Testament that he sees no congruity in the situation.

By far too much of the profession of Christianity lacks the confession of the Lord Jesus; too much that attachment to an organization variously called "the Church" is unmatched by the thrill of a testimony to the manifestation of our Lord in daily companionship with Him. And we may allow that Modernism has ground for complaint in the charge that creeds confer no vitalizing unction upon those who profess them. That can be all too true; in multitudes of instances it is true. But what makes the creeds ineffectual is not in what they contain, but what the people fail to extract from them. No doubt, on examination we should find that those who believe "all the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed" are either conspicuous for Godly living, or shamefacedly conscious of their spiritual degeneration.

Dr. Chalmers, the eminent Scotch divine, preached and labored for years, and successfully, presenting a conventional message and living a conventional Christian life. But at length a new vision stole across his pathway, a new unction possessed him, and his memorable sermon on "The Expulsive Power of a New Affection" gripped his people, because it had taken hold of him with a tenacious embrace and filled his life with spiritual exaltation. Let us not be deluded by the easily discharged verdict that mystical hallucination may account for this so-called sanctification of the Holy Spirit; nor yet may the lens of a scrutinizing psychology find a thought-to-be scientific explanation of what is devoutly believed by ardent Christians to be the revelation of the Holy Spirit in the heart. Certainly we may try the spirits (1 John 4:1); counterfeiting in the spiritual world is as common as in the world of sense. But this challenge is added proof that the Holy Spirit has His own place, and we are to find it.

Now, may this be our possession? Is it a reality? The test is exacting. But spiritual courage will not fail to meet it; for it must be met, else we drift along on the current of an easy complacence and resign ourselves to spiritual apathy. Is there such a thing as the "new man" in Christ? There seems no uncertain reply to this question (2 Cor. 5:17; Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10). Then how is such a man to be found?

That was a startling announcement some years ago by a popular and successful New York rector before a large assembly at the Y. M. C. A., "I do not know what they mean by regeneration. I have never found a person who was regenerated; I am sure I never have been." What we then heard with surprise and grief has now become commonplace by the generation in which we live. The challenge is before us. We must take our stand. Either there is or there is not such a vital transaction wrought by God in the heart of man. Others have found it and proved it sweet to the soul, energizing and fructifying the life. If to them it was a delusion, then we have no sure footing for our journey onward. God forbid that we should treat it as such. There was no mere casuistry in our Lord's insistence to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born from above . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit" (John 3:3, 5). The desperate cry of the sin-burdened men at Pentecost was met by the apostolic command, "Repent . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:37, 38). The declaration of St. Paul to Titus covers the entire New Testament concept, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus 3:3-7).

Frankly, let us ask, Do I really know the Lord Jesus, through the revelation of the Holy Spirit? This is His appointed office; for the Father's knowledge of the Son must come through the Spirit (Matt. 11:25-27). No man can come to Him, unless the drawing be permitted by the seeking soul (John 6:44). Have I met the behest, "To as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the children of God, even to them that believed on His name" (John 1:12)? Am I so inflamed with grateful love to Him that I can respond to His longing, "That they may be one; as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they may also be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me" (John 17:21)? Behold, this lofty incentive. A life throbbing with the consciousness of the indwelling of the resurrected Lord Jesus, yielding itself to the immediate direction and control of the Holy Spirit, who alone can reveal to us His sovereignty (1 Cor. 12:3); for the pleasure it brings to Him, for the sake of this hungry world that longs to see our Redeemer reflected in us.

EVERY-MEMBER EVANGELISM: By J. E. Conant, D. D. The Sunday-School Times Co., Philadelphia, Pa. $1.50.

The Christian Church is under deep obligations to Dr. Conant for a book that will take its place as a classic in soul-winning. With clearness, utmost fidelity to Scripture and spiritual force, the book sets forth the Divine Program, Purpose and Power for every Christian. It puts the responsibility for soul-winning where it belongs—on every individual Christian. Gives the dynamics that will make the program of evangelism effective and permanent and supplies practical methods for putting this program into operation. Some of the high lights under the heading of the Program are as follows: The results on the day of Pentecost were not due to Peter's sermon, but it "was the private witnessing of all the disciples reaching its climax and culmination in the public witnessing of one disciple that brought the results of that day". Soul-winning is the pastor's main business. The service for which the Church is equipped is soul-winning.

"So far as example goes, there is no New Testament warrant for philanthropic work by the Church in its corporate capacity except to those within the Church itself. The command is to go, not send. Much church work is fruitless and may be classed as dead works.

Under the head of The Divine Purpose is shown the decline of the growth of the Church in recent years and the equally alarming situation in the Sunday school. Back of the decline lies the lack of personal work. "Not sermons, but individual voices of private members of the Church, are to evangelize the world."

In a most searching manner and with a wealth of inspiring illustration and comprehensive teaching concerning the Holy Spirit's work in the believer, the author convincingly shows that the program will reach the lost.

The last division, that of The Divine Power, is treated in a way that feeds the soul and inspires one. The empowering Life of Christ is presented in its fulness and sufficiency, and perhaps the keynote is struck when He says, "The just must live all the time by faith and not a moment by effort. The normal Christian life is the effortless life. So if you find it hard to live the Christian life you are trying to live it instead of trusting Him to live it. The fact is, Christian living is not simply hard to a Christian, it is impossible. It is a supernatural life and it therefore takes a supernatural Person to live it."

The book concludes with tested out methods in the way of the mechanics of a campaign for souls.

Every pastor and Christian worker ought to have this book. We wish for it a wide reading, for its teaching, if followed, will bring back the Church to the apostolic days when multitudes were added to the Lord.

CERTAIN SAMARITANS," by Esther Pohl Lovejoy. The Macmillan Co., New York. Illustrated. Price $3.50.

The common run of intelligent people do not know what is going on in the world and perhaps it is well we do not. The sum of sorrow and suffering over the world is very great. This book is deeply concerned about a portion of this woe. The scene is laid in the Near East. The story is of that noble work women are doing to save a portion of the human race that is being gradually blotted out in Asia Minor. The author of the book, Dr. Esther Lovejoy, is among the chief of the good Samaritans herself. Her life especially since 1920, has been given in the service that Christ enjoined upon His followers. Few people could have stood up under the ordeal these women doctors of The American Women's Hospitals faced, who saw and ministered to the victims of the Near East atrocities. Over a thousand women physicians registered with this great work the first year it was organized, but this book has to do only with the work in Greece and the Aegean region, dominated by the "unspeakable" Turk. The story of Smyrna in September and October, 1922, is sold by doctors, nurses and officials. The author writes well. Her use of English is impressive. We feel that the truth of these horrors is not exaggerated.

This reviewer made a study of the Near East Cables and the reports of the U. S. Government committees of the Smyrna holocaust and published an address in 1923. Dr. Lovejoy's book substantiates all the main facts recited in that paper. She adds other incidents to the story of the sufferings of the Christian peoples at the hands of their Turkish masters while the allies looked on. Such a book ought to be read even if it harrows our feelings. The story ought to be told, and here it is told well.

Thank God for the noble women when governments and men fail!

Quoted from some of the Near East cables in September, 1922:

"Two hundred thousand terrified Greeks and Armenians from the interior of Anatolia fleeing before Turkish armies send heart-rending appeal to Director Jaquith of Near East Relief at Constantinople to come to Smyrna on American Destroyer Lawrence. The warship carried deck-load of emergency supplies. Three days later, Sept. 12, Jaquith at Smyrna reported city's entire population, 700,000 was facing famine. Next day American destroyer Edsell left Constantinople for Smyrna with deck-load of supplies. Many children were found dead and all refugees suffering from hunger and exhaustion. September 14, two hundred and fifty Greeks and Armenians executed at Smyrna though the Turkish Commander had promised there would be no wholesale slaughter. Appalling situation at Moudania, 50,000 without food or water lining water's edge for miles under broiling sun crying with arms uplifted in pitiful supplication to be taken off. The harbor was crowded with bodies of those who could not stand the tortures of thirst and hunger. September 14, fire began in Armenian quarter during the looting of the stores. It spread quickly to European quarters, destroying American consulate, Y. M. C. A. and other noted buildings. Sept. 29, Wandering on the island and bleak shores of Aegean and Marmora Seas, are 260,000 refugees. Most appalling misery prevails at Mitylene, nearest asylum to Smyrna. No bread. Famished people living on roots. Five thousand infants suffering acutely. Chill winds at night. People sleeping in open fields or on the barren shores."

The extract which follows appeared in the address alluded to above and refers to the author of the book:

Dr. Esther Lovejoy, President American Woman's Hospital in Smyrna, arrived in Constantinople from Smyrna October 3rd, and reported that she worked day and night directing the birth of hundreds of infants. Never were babies brought into the world under worse conditions. Many were delivered on the wharves protected from the panic-stricken crowd "only by the thin, white line of American sailors"—Others at the barricades. Others at the gangplanks of departing ships. Refugees have been on the wharves two and three weeks. Sanitary conditions beyond description. Search lights from American ships turned on the quay protect them from robbery and death at night. The screams of young women and girls are heard as they are seized by Turkish soldiers. "I never believed such things could happen in the presence of Western civilization," said Dr. Lovejoy.

Finally:

Turkish snipers and sharp-shooters made sport of sinking those who tried to swim to the ships in the harbor. Many were refused at the ships and gave up fight for life in despair. An Italian captain of a warship signaled his admiral to allow him to rescue those swimming around him. He was refused. He signalled again. "If I cannot rescue them I will resign and never command another Italian ship." He was then given permission.

An American nurse was advised by Turkish officers to save herself and leave her charge. She quietly turned away and said she would stay. One of the teachers was also warned away from her wards. She replied that Turkish men had something to learn about American women.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 17.—Topic: The Distinction Between Faith and Works.)

(Read Heb. 11:1 to 40.)

A very common error is the confusion of "faith and works", with respect to the Christian's title to eternal life; the treatment of this subject being related to the distinction between salvation and rewards for service as covered in Lesson No. 5. A soul is never saved by works, hence we should be careful to note that "works" is the outgrowth of faith, and that believers will be rewarded in heaven in accordance with their works. The classification of Scripture will at once reveal this important and interesting distinction.

Faith.

1. Faith is believing God and His written Word.—Heb. 11:1-40.
2. Impossible to please God without faith.—Heb. 11:6; Rom. 4:3.
3. True faith believes in the heart as well as in the head.—Rom. 10:8.
4. Whosoever believeth on the Son shall not perish.—John 3:16.
5. This is the record: Saved if believed.—1 John 5:11-13.
6. This is the record: Lost if not believed.—1 John 5:12.
7. By grace are ye saved through faith.—Eph. 2:8; Luke 7:50.
8. Be not faithless, but believing.—John 20:27.
9. Believe also in Christ.—John 14:1.
10. Christ dwells in our heart by faith.—Eph. 3:17.
11. By faith, peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.—Rom. 5:1.
12. By faith we are justified.—Rom. 5:1.
13. He that believeth hath everlasting life.—John 6:47.
14. He that believeth shall not be condemned.—John 5:24.
15. Trusting in Christ is result of faith.—Eph. 1:12.
16. Blessed are they that trust in Him.—Ps. 2:12.
17. We are to trust after believing.—1 Tim. 4:10.
18. And trusting, is resting in the Lord.—Matt. 11:28, 29; Heb. 4:3.
19. The gift of eternal life is not of works.—Eph. 2:9; Titus 3:5.
20. All nature manifests God's faithfulness to us, and we should therefore manifest our faith in Him.—Ps. 36:5, 7.

Works.

1. Works is a manifestation of faith.—Jas. 2:18.
2. Believers are to do the work of Christ.—Eph. 2:12.
3. Workmen that needeth not to be ashamed.—2 Tim. 2:15.
4. His work which worketh in me.—Col. 1:29.
5. Every believer, to be fully effectual, has a part.—Eph. 4:16, 3, 7.
6. Some forbear and be as idlers.—1 Cor. 9:6.
7. Some disorderly, and work not at all.—2 Thess. 3:11.
8. All believers should maintain good works.—Titus 3:8.
9. Work pleasing to the Lord Jesus.—Heb. 13:21.
10. Every workman to be rewarded in eternity.—John 4:36.
11. This reward is sure: includes "a cup of cold water."—Matt. 10:42.
12. The faithful in a few things, rewarded with many things.—Matt. 25:21.
13. Every man's work shall be revealed.—1 Cor. 9:13.
14. Recognition for works will be made at the close of this present Church Age.—1 Thess. 4:16, 17; Rev. 22:12.
15. Some while saved, through neglect, earn no reward.—1 Cor. 3:15.

Thus we see through "faith" alone
The priceless "gift" unfold,
While "works" afford a way to serve
And share the harvest yet untold.

THE DOCTRINES OF CHRISTIANITY.

Mr. Editor:

Are the doctrines of Christianity mere temporary forms of thought, mere opinions of temporary value, which change with the centuries, as Fosdick teaches; or are they divine truths based upon facts of history, such as the Virgin Birth, the Atonement, the Resurrection of Christ?

This is the fundamental issue raised by "Modernism", which is dividing the Protestant Church today.

What say you? Your answer will be welcomed.

Sectarian narrowness had nothing whatever to do with Dr. Fosdick's withdrawal from the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of New York, as is being charged by him and other "Modernists". Were he a Baptist in fact as he is in name, there never would have arisen any such storm over his occupancy of a Presbyterian pulpit. The root of the whole trouble is his denial of the supernatural element in Christianity under the plea of being modern. He teaches that the great doctrines of the Gospel, like the Virgin Birth, the Atonement and the Resurrection of Christ, are only forms of thought, only mental expressions of religious experience which must give place to others, and not divine truths growing out of actual facts which have their place in history in connection with the Incarnation.

The General Assembly of 1923 condemned Dr. Fosdick in its mandate for denying the Presbyterian Creed. He replied through the New York Presbytery that he preached the Creed. The General Assembly of 1924 then ordered him to sign the Creed he said he preached and enter the Presbyterian Church or leave his pulpit. He refused to sign. The condemnation was justified.

What has made his case so long drawn out, so difficult, so confusing and serious, is his camouflage, his clothing of his denial of the supernatural in orthodox phraseology in such a way that many unsuspecting people do not catch the real significance of what he is saying. He uses language in the dishonest way condemned by the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in their Pastoral Letter of 1923.

"ETERNITY."

Mr. Editor:

It may help Mr. Smiley (of Annapolis), in the "eternal torment", as it has helped me, to look at what Cruden's Concordance says about "everlasting", "eternal", "forever" and such . . . how often the sense is plainly only that of a strong superlative—very great or very long, just as in ordinary language we constantly use them, e. g., "What an everlasting talker he (or she) is"!

And indeed the finite human mind can never grasp or reach the infinite.

"Forever with the Lord, amen, so let it be." We may think of millions of years, or light years, and be no whit nearer the "forever". All beings, to our minds, must have beginning and end, God only excepted. Him we must get by faith.

"For he that cometh to God must believe that He is (Hoti esti), and is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

WARM CLOTHING NEEDED

Mr. Editor:

Won't you bring this urgent need to the attention of your readers? Just at this time, warm clothing is our great demand at Ellis Island for hundreds of immigrants who are temporarily being detained or held for deportation.

States one social service worker on the Island: "What would we do without our Jóint Clothing Room! Why, only today a mother and two children arrived at the Island. Their baggage had been stolen before sailing and the police could not locate it. After a ten-days' journey the little children, even sleeping in the only clothes which they had on their backs, presented a pitiful sight. From the supplies of our clothing room, what a change took place in their faces and appearance when they were provided with warm, clean clothing."

"Cases like this occur daily at Ellis Island. Men, women and children who have been detained over a period of weeks for investigations find themselves with unsuitable clothing as the cold winter days approach. Others have come from warmer climates and have not money with them to buy clothing. Even if they did have, the government could not permit them to leave the Island to make purchases."

"I remember well the incident of a young boy who had just been released from the hospital after a severe attack of pneumonia. He came to us for shoes. We had given away our last pair for we never have enough boys' or men's shoes. The only shoes we had were thin athletic shoes of an openwork pattern, badly worn and totally inadequate for cold weather."

"For this boy in his weakened condition to go out into the cold weather without suitable shoes was to invite another attack of pneumonia, perhaps a fatal one. It is not only to provide comfort that clothing supplies are needed but to protect life itself. The requests of cases discharged fro mthe hospital are many."

"Last week we gave away the last pair of trousers in our storeroom to a man who had been wearing his pajama trousers with a dark cloth coat over them to hide his humiliation."

"Men's socks! Why, we never have enough. More men are being held for deportation than previous years, because of the quota law."

"And don't forget the babies. They must be given special attention. Warm clothing is a necessity."

"We feel sure that when conditions are known many will be only too glad to respond so that all real needs can be supplied."

From Dr. Edwin Noah Hardy, chairman of the "General Committee of Immigrant Aid at Ellis Island" comes this statement:

"I am concerned about the clothing situation at Ellis Island. As you see these hundreds of people in the detention rooms, deprived of access to the outside world, your heart goes out to them. The least we can do is to see that they are properly clothed, especially the women and children. With detention and travel, clothing becomes worn out and totally inadequate."

"Our Committee of Immigrant Aid at Ellis Island" is composed of seventeen social and religious organizations with workers at the Island. We have a "Joint Clothing Room" with a woman in charge. Thus, we have the facilities for distribution of clothing, but not the clothing itself."

"I have appointed a "Clothing Committee" which will gratefully receive all contributions of clothes or money. Articles of clothing can be sent direct by parcel-post or express to Mrs. M. Lawrence, Custodian of Clothes, Social Service Dep't. Ellis Island, New York Harbor."

"Contributions or checks can be mailed to our treasurer, Mr. Thomas Mulholland, 61 Whitehall Street, New York City."

Sincerely yours,
RAYMOND E. COLE,
City Missions Society,
Chairman of Clothing Committee.

APPROVAL.

Mr. Editor:

Enclosed please find check for $3.00 for renewed subscription to your valued paper. I have been reading it for 60 years and enjoying it greatly and am glad it is at present standing up for the "Faith of our Fathers". May it continue to do so.

Cobham, Va. Mrs. Jane Page Lewis.

Mr. Editor:

The enclosed check of $3.00 is my renewal subscription for the "Southern Churchman" for the coming year, 1928. This grand old paper has been coming into my home for more than fifty years, bringing comfort and joy, and help, and I don't want to miss an issue. Especially am I gratified with the present spirit and status of the paper. Its unequivocal utterances and courageous stand for truth. Long may it live and flourish to enlighten us and be our guide in these perplexing times when even the Elect are being deceived.

Charleston, W. Va. Virginia B. Bailey.

Mr. Editor:

Find enclosed please $3.00 to renew subscription for your valued paper. Could not feel a week complete without it.

New Orleans Mrs. A. K. Lambly.

Mr. Editor:

Please find enclosed a check for $3.00 for payment to the Southern Churchman to 1929 and the little booklet Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth.

I have been a subscriber for more than fifty-five years and greatly enjoy its weekly visits. Being a constant Bible reader I will be glad to have a better understanding of its truths.

Wishing you a Happy and Prosperous New Year,

.Mrs. Mary P. Gilham.

TRAINING SCHOOL AT ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, TOKYO

At St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, the training school for nurses has been raised to the rank of a college, by official decree through the Department of Education. Dr. R. B. Teusler, head of the hospital, writes that this is the first college of nursing ever created in Japan, as well as the first school of nursing of any kind ever officially recognized by the Government. A long article in the Japan Advertiser of November 26, says, in part:

"Official Government recognition of the school of nursing represents a long stride forward for the entire medical profession in Japan, for heretofore nurses were more or less waifs on the doorstep of the profession, as far as the Government was concerned. Except for one or two instances, nurses 'just growed', so far as definite training for the profession can be considered."

Dr. Teusler is quoted as saying: "For many years St. Luke's has striven to improve nursing standards in connection with its own work and to point the way for the elevation of the whole profession of nursing throughout Japan. It is an interesting fact that the professional qualifications of the physicians of Japan are on a par with the most advanced scientific and academic work anywhere in the world, but the actual clinical application of medicine, especially in connection with modern hospitalization and nursing, has never been developed as in western countries and is still far below the best modern standards . . . Without doubt, one of the most serious obstacles has been the relatively low standard of nursing in this country . . .

"The greatest service St. Luke's Hospital can give is its contribution to this great problem of bettering nursing standards in Japan and creating adequate hospital and training facilities for teaching the profession in accordance with dvanced modern standards."

The nursing course covers three years, with a fourth year for advanced study. For nearly ten years the hospital has required all girls admitted for training should be graduates of high schools recognized by the Government.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE SOUTHERN CROSS SCHOOL PORT ALEGRE—BRAZIL.

The fifteenth session of the Southern Cross School has just come to a close. The final exercises were held on the night of November 26. Eight young men received their diplomas, making the graduating class the largest and one of the finest in the history of the school.

A splendid program was arranged, largely by Senhor Orlando Baptista, and the exercises proved to be most entertaining. In accord with the custom of Brazil on these occasions, there were four addresses. A member of the graduating class felicitated the Junior class on its elevation to the place of honor in the school. A member of the Junior class replied, bidding the graduates farewell in the name of the school, after which he embraced each one of the eight. The Rev. Athalicio Pithan, one of the first graduates of the school, at present stationed at Bage, was chosen as the class sponsor. He read an excellent paper in which he emphasized Brazil's need of man-power energized by intellect and religion. He stressed the value of mathematics, sciences and languages and the part they play in the development of mind and soul. After his address a valedictory was delivered by one of the graduates.

During the evening, the well-trained orchestra of the School rendered several selections of classical music. The exercises were closed by the singing of the school song; the words of which were written by the Rev. Athalicio Pithan and the music by Senhor Orlando Baptista.

The new Headmaster, the Rev. E. Arnaldo Bohrer presided. The Rev. Mr. Krischke delivered the opening prayer and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Thomas.

Four of the graduates will enter the Seminary in March and two of the teachers. They are fine young men and they will constitute a strong addition to the clergy of the Brazilian Episcopal Church.

W. L. R.

An Igorot has been made principal of St. James' School, Besao, the first of his race to have charge of a most promising and attractive work for his own people. He is Mr. James Bolbolin, a graduate of the school and of the Trinidad Agricultural School, who has proved himself a man of real ability. The school has thirty boys.

On December 23 a cable was received at the Church Missions House from the Philippine Islands saying:

ENTIRE MISSION STAFF WISH HOME CHURCH MERRY CHRISTMAS!

COMMISSION'S VISIT TO CHINA

The visit to China of the Commission from the Department of Missions ended yesterday, when Bishop Sanford and Dr. Wood left for Japan. Asked whether the trip had been worthwhile, Dr. Wood replied: "Tremendously worth while, from our standpoint". They were able to visit all three of the missionary districts and to hold conferences in all. It is a great satisfaction to feel that, with the exceptions of school and hospitals, the Church work has suffered little except material losses. The Christians have, as a rule, shown loyalty to the Church, under real difficulties. I heard the visitors express in their conversation but one serious disappointment, viz., that which arose from the fact that the degree of self-support reached in the churches here has not impressed them as satisfactory.

One impressive feature of their visit were some sample views of the damage that has been done to Church property. At Kiukiang they were able to go ashore from their ship and found St. John's Church hardly more than bare walls. At Nanking, the largest of the Episcopal churches had been seized as political headquarters. The visitors found a Kuoming-tang meeting in progress, the officers sitting around tables in the chancel. A picture of Sun Yat-Sen had been hung above the altar, and on the face of the altar had been pasted a picture of the flag of the party. At this place a good photograph was obtained, which will no doubt prove an interesting exhibit in America. Here, we have become accustomed to what it reveals. The Commission found that the School question revealed many points of view. There are, indeed, many sides to the question. Differences of view turn mainly on a judgment as to whether it is, or is not, possible for schools to put themselves under the regulations of the present governments (we speak of this as "registration"), and remain Christian. It is beginning to appear, however, from the experience of some who have tried it, that schools may, unless military conditions prevent, be carried on as hitherto without raising the question of registration. The government schools are so greatly inadequate to national needs that public opinion would tend to check any movement by agitators against such Mission schools as might be able to carry on. The question of registration and the consequent introduction into the schools of the Sun Yat-sen cult instead of the Christian services may die a natural death, if only missionaries will cease from discussing the matter with officials, which discussions tend to keep the matter artificially alive. Many persons believe, sincerely, that this concession to (supposed) popular wishes would secure for the Churches such a favorable sentiment as would result in a large turning to Christianity. Others, of whom the writer is one, fear that such applause or favour would be dearly purchased; and believe that an uncompromising loyalty to the Christian standards that our schools have hitherto maintained, is the real ground of hope for their future value to the Church and, hence, to the nation.—B. L. A.

HOOKER SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT.

This seems no time of year for news of a commencement, but this is when it comes at Hooker School, Mexico City. Two weeks are needed to close the school, there are so many events and demonstrations, some of them to fulfill government requirements. Bishop and Mrs. Creighton entertained eight American members of the faculty at an American Thanksgiving dinner. On November 26, at a service in the Cathedral, the Bishop preached the baccalaureate sermon. He writes of the final Commencement Day, November 28:

"A great throng was present, filling our little auditorium to the limit of its capacity; almost as many stood outside on the old wooden stairs and in the patio. Miss McBride presided splendidly, all her remarks being in Spanish. Two Mexican clergy made addresses. Then we adjourned to the lawn, where a splendid regimental band sent by a Mexican general gave a concert of high merit. Miss McBride and I gave the girls permission to dance and soon the walks were filled with happy youngsters dancing to such music as only a Mexican army band can produce."

This year there was one graduate from the Commercial Department, one from the Normal Department, and six from the Sixth Grade. Next year it is expected that there will be a graduating class of twenty-two.

SOUTHERN WEALTH AND ITS CONSECRATION.

By Richard H. Edmonds.

Prosperity of the Old South.—It is also essential in a study of this kind to understand something of the South prior to 1860, and the changed economic conditions which came about throughout the world half a century ago through the full development of power machinery as typified in the steam engine, by reason of which other sections of the United States made amazing industrial progress while the South in reality stood almost still.

Post-Bellum Retrogression.—Indeed, it may be seriously questioned if the South did not go backwards for nearly a quarter of a century after the war. Statistics of production in manufactures and in agriculture, of increased railroad mileage and increased assessed value of property show an apparent large growth. But there are other factors which should be taken into account in order to estimate accurately the South's progress. If twelve years ago it had been possible to create a true balance sheet, putting against the increased production as it appeared on the profit side, the stupendous losses which ought to have been charged on the other side of the ledger, it is quite possible that the net results would have shown that there was little or no real increase in the South's true wealth.

On the debit side we would have had to place the loss of 2,500,000 Southern-born whites who, between 1865 and 1900 emigrated from the South to other sections. And so far as the Central South is concerned we should have had to add to that a million or more who went out to Texas and the Southwest. At the lowest calculation the emigration beyond the borders of the South was an economic loss of at least $5,000,000,000, for in the balance sheet of the nation, as well as on Heaven's books, men count for more than coal and iron and cotton.

Another item to be charged to the debit side would have been the vast destruction of timber, much of it sold at a very small price, almost given away, in fact, leaving but little profit to the South, and likewise the enormous waste of soil by the shiftless, thriftless methods of tenant farming which followed as one of the curses of the war.

These enormous losses, greater by far than the actual destruction by war, should be taken into account against the gains made in the actual increase of production in agriculture and manufactures and in railroad mileage, in preparing a true balance sheet of the South in 1900.

Business Progress Before the War.—Most of our people seem to know very little about the South of ante-bellum days. Our colleges and universities have fallen short of their high responsibilities to the extent that they have failed to impress upon their students the most striking achievments of the people of the Old South. Credit is given to the Old South for its statesmen and its warriors, for its broad vision in national affairs, for its influence in shaping our government and in enlarging our territory. But if the question were asked what was the greatest business achievment of the first half of the nineteenth century, how many would answer that it was the creation by the South of a cotton industry which represented more invested capital than the aggregate capital of all the manufacturing interests of the United States in 1860. Even then the South's cotton dominated the foreign commerce of the United States and shaped much of the business and political activities of Europe as well as of America. The creation of this industry required certainly as much business ability as that needed for the development of the manufacturing interests of the country, and it involved much more capital.

A Striking Comparison.—In 1860 the assessed value of property in the Southern States was greater by nearly $1,017,000,000 than the assessed value of property in the Middle and New England States combined. Between 1850 and 1860 the value of Southern property increased over $3,843,000,000 against an increase during the same period in New England and the Middle States of $2,460,000,000. Thus, in that period the South showed a gain in wealth greater by $1,380,000,000 than the united gain of the New England and the Middle States. In 1860 forty-five per cent of the assessed value of property in the United States was in the South.

While the assessed value of the South's property exceeded by $1,017,000,000 the assessed value of property in the New England and Middle States in 1860, the change in the decade between 1860 and 1870 was so great that in the latter year the assessed value of the property in the New England and the Middle States exceeded that of the South by $10,244,000,000. Much of this enormous advance in wealth in the North was due to the industrial era which was developing during that period, stimulated in part as it was by the war.

Ante-Bellum Railroad and Industrial Strength.—In 1860 the world was awakening to a conception of the power of the steam engine and the other modern machinery. In fact, it was beginning to feel the wealth-created possibilities of power machinery. The South itself, long before 1860 had caught a vision of the changes to follow railroad building, the modern improvements typified by the locomotive. Between 1850 and 1860 the South built 8,376 miles of new road, against 4,712 miles by the New England and Middle States.

Industrial development was at that time being pushed in the South with much energy. During that decade nearly every line of manufacturing in the South showed a larger percentage of increase than in the rest of the country. These percentages, of course, were based on smaller totals, yet they were indicative of the re-awakened spirit of industrialism which had to some extent been dominant since the invention of the cotton gin had helped to fasten slavery and cotton upon the South. Prior to that invention the South was leading in industrial activities. Its people were much given to manufacturing pursuits and engineering work, and its pioneer iron makers were found throughout the mountain regions of Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Tennessee. Swank, in his "History of Iron in All Ages", said of these pioneers that they seemed to have been born with a genius for iron-making. The renewed activity in industrial pursuits between 1850 and 1860 was merely a revival of the latent industrial spirit of the South. The material development during the last quarter century is largely due to the re-awakening or new birth of that industrial spirit almost crushed to death by the war.

Agricultural Prosperity.—Though the South of 1860 was giving great attention to railroad building and to the development of its industrial interests, with many of its leaders persistently proclaiming its vast stores of coal and iron ore, its water powers and its manufacturing facilities, its agricultural prosperity could scarcely be called less than marvelous. In that year the South produced fifty-two per cent of the total corn crop of the country, the entire rice and sugar crops, the bulk of the tobacco raised and almost all the sweet potatoes produced; it had forty-seven per cent of the total value of live stock, forty-two per cent in value of all agricultural implements in the country, and a very considerable proportion of the wheat. It thus had a well-rounded diversity of agricultural interests in addition to its production of the entire cotton crop.

Great Per Capita Wealth.—These facts are mentioned in order that the inherent strength of character of the people of the Old South in agricultural, industrial and railroad pursuits may be understood, and likewise that the wealth of the South, based on the utilization of its natural resources, may be appreciated. In 1860 the average value of property per capita in the South, including slaves in the total number of inhabitants, was $568, against $528, in the New England and Middle States. If we omit slaves from the number of inhabitants in this calculation, the per capita wealth of the white people of the South was almost twice as great as the average in the New England and Middle States.

An Enormous Change.—It is because these facts are not generally known that the Old South is acused of lack of energy and enterprise and that even now its people are sometimes charged with having been inferior to those of other sections in business ability, in energy and enterprise, in the development of their country and the creation of wealth. These facts prove two things:

(1) The inherent business ability and energy of the people of the Old South, and

(2) The South's natural, resources, which enabled this section so far to outstrip the New England and Middle States in the accumulation of wealth.

Greater Things Ahead.—These facts, however, are more interesting as suggestive of what is yet to be accomplished in the upbuilding of the South than of what has already been achieved. This section, now beginning to accumulate capital and to be recognized by the investors of other sections as the coming center of American development, should make far greater progress in the next ten years than it has made in the last twenty. Its railroads will unquestionably be taxed to the utmost capacity to keep up with the increasing trade of the South. Its shipping facilities must be greatly expanded in order to take care of the rapid growth of its commerce, foreign and domestic.

With manufacturing capital exceeding that of the United States in 1880, with an agricultural output exceeding in value by half a billion dollars the value of the crops of the United States in 1890, with an increase in ten years in agricultural wealth four times as great as the present national banking capital of the United States, surely the South is now in a position to begin its real upbuilding. What it has accomplished is merely the getting of its tools together to make ready for the activities upon which it is now preparing to enter.

The Isthmian Canal.—More than fifty years ago Commodore Maury, the great "Pathfinder of the Seas", in a brilliant report on the importance of an Isthmian Canal, said that when the barrier which separated the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans was removed by the cutting of a canal, the commerce of the world would center in the Gulf of Mexico. The signs of the times show that the railroad kings and the financial giants of America are realizing that this prediction is to be fulfilled. There is scarcely a great railroad system in the country that is not striving to secure strategic connections with South Atlantic and Gulf ports all the way from Maryland to Texas.

Lost Church Appears From English Channel.

LONDON, Jan. 3 —Watchers on the shore at Walton-on-the-Naze, on the east coast of England today, were amazed to see a church rise out of the sea three miles from the coast.

It was the long-lost parish church, which had been submerged since 1398 as a result of the coast erosion.

A severe storm, which raged for several days, was followed by an exceptionally low tide, which brought the 1,000-year-old church into view. It was thickly covered with shells and seaweed.

Some of the spectators were so overawed that they took one glimpse and quickly vanished.

Others, more venturesome, made a hurried attempt to reach the church, but the tide was too quick for them. The sea came in rapidly and the lost church again vanished.—New York Times.

CHILD LABOR DAY—1928

Throughout the country Child Labor Day will be observed for the twenty-first year on the last week-end in January. As in former years, this will be the occasion for religious and educational organizations, women's clubs and other interested groups to bring to the attention of their members the facts that the problem of child labor is not yet solved.

Child labor involves more than the mere question of the age at which a child should be allowed to go to work. It includes the prohibition of all work for children under 14, and of dangerous work for children under 16; it includes the establishment of an eight-hour day and the prohibition of night work for children under sixteen; and evidence that the child is strong enough for work.

Few States have adequate protection in all these respects. In fourteen States the law carries an exemption which makes it legal for children under fourteen to work in factories or canneries, at least out of school hours; in eleven States children are permitted to work nine to eleven hours a day; in seventeen a physician's certificate is not required of a child starting work: in twenty-eight, children of fourteen may work around explosives; in twenty-two they may run elevators; in seventeen they may oil and clean machinery in motion.

To make known these facts of child labor and to stir the public to demand their correction is the purpose of child labor day—January 28 for synagogues, January 29 for churches, and January 30 for schools and clubs.

The National Child Labor Committee, 215 Fourth Avenue, New York City, will send free of charge to any interested groups an analysis of the law of their State and other material to aid in the observance of Child Labor Day.

Church Army.

Church Army in United States is to be the official title of this society, as decided at a meeting recently convened at the Hotel Gramercy Park in New York City.

Mr. Samuel Thorne, a member of the National Commission on Evangelism, has accepted the position of President of Church Army in United States, and a Board of Advisors to Church Army, consisting of the Rt. Rev. Bishops of New York, Rhode Island, Long Island, Massachusetts, and the Bishop-Coadjutor of Vermont, has been formed. This board will in particular have the oversight of the Church Army Training Centre at Providence, which was officially opened with six students on the Feast of Epiphany.

Mr. Arthur B. Lisle is Treasurer of Training Centre Funds, and communications can be addressed to him at 66 Benefit Street, Providence, R. I.

Five caravans are to be in action in rural areas in First and Second Provinces, and at the call of Bishop Darst six men are to give some weeks to evangelistic work in certain of the Southern dioceses.

CAUTION.

A man named William Thomas Haig, originally from Bradford, England, with a diploma of Licentiate in Sacred Theology from Bishops' College, Lennoxville, recently applied in this Diocese to be accepted as a candidate for Holy Orders. In case similar application should be made elsewhere, it should be known that Mr. Haig was ordained both Deacon and Priest some years ago in Canada and was subsequently suspended from the exercise of the ministry for ten years, which sentence expired in 1926.

Bishop of Vermont.

Social Service Sunday.

The Third Sunday after the Epiphany, January 22, is again set aside as Social Service Sunday. The aim of the day is, first, to expand the social vision of the parish from the idea that social service is merely ameliorating distress It is the bringing about of such attitudes in society that no individual shall be denied the more abundant life because of injustice or oppression. Second, it is to give to the people of the parish and community an opportunity to intercede for those who are spreading the social gospel and for those who are in need. A third aim is to give to social workers an opportunity for spiritual refreshment, and to impress upon them the Church's interest in their achievements and endeavors.

The Department of Christian Social Service suggests as a means of securing these results a corporate communion and breakfast for social workers and friends of social work; possibly some other meeting, as a tea or supper, at which the Church people may meet with all the social workers of the city and hear of their work; a sermon on the Christian attitude in social relations, with such prayers and intercessions as may express the people's aspirations for the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth.

A leaflet will be mailed to each clergyman with suggested prayers.

Conference of Evangelicals.

The Rev. Frank Cox, of Ascension Church, New York, has called a conference of all interested in the Keswick teaching, to be held January 22 through 25, in St. James' Church, Philadelphia, Rev. John Weber rector. The conference will stress the all sufficiency of Christ to keep from sin and the fullness of the spirit for service. Among the speakers will be the Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., Rev. Duncan Thomas, Rev. P. W. Reed, Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, Rev. Frank Cox, Rev. J. J. D. Hall and others. Meetings will be held both afternoons and evenings. A movement such as this in the church is the crying need of the hour and we call on all of God's people to remember this conference in prayer.

Bishop Stires to Broadcast.

On Sunday, January 22, at 3:30 P. M., Eastern Standard time, Bishop Stires, of Long Island, will broadcast from the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. over Station WEAF, with hook-ups to other stations over the country, taking the period usually taken by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman. His subject will be "Loyalty and Its Reward".

Bishop Stires is Honorary President of the Long Island Diocesan Assembly, and the Assembly wishes to extend an invitation to all Churchmen, especially Brotherhood men, to tune in for this address.

Leon C. Palmer,
General Secretary.

Organ for Abingdon Church.

Abingdon Church, Gloucester county, has been the recipient of a most generous and helpful gift. Mr. Wright Noble, of Winston-Salem and Gloucester, has presented this historic old church with a new two manual Estey organ. This replaces an old organ which has seen many years of service and so fills a great need and contributes inestimably to the worship of the congregation.

Woman's Auxiliary

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of this Diocese was held on January 3, in St. John's Church. A service of Holy Communion was followed by a memorial address by Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, president of Boone University, Wuchang, China, commemorative of the late Deaconess Edith Hart, former principal of the Episcopal School for Girls at Hankow, China.

At the business meeting, which followed luncheon, election of officers took place. Mrs. William D. Hind was re-elected president.

Academic Head of National Cathedral School Dies.

Miss Helen Livemore Webster, academic head of the National Cathedral School for Girls, died at the School on Wednesday, January 4, 1928, after a long illness. Funeral services were conducted in Bethlehem Chapel, Washington Cathedral, by the Bishop, assisted by the Dean of Washington, on Friday, January 6. Interment was in Lynn, Mass., and the body was accompanied by the Dean, the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenatil.

The services were attended by the entire student body and faculty of the school, and by many persons prominently identified with the Cathedral. The choir was composed of the members of the senior class at the school. Colored servants, who have long been in the employ of the school, were the active pallbearers.

After the services the body was placed in the Chapel of St. Joseph of Arimathea, where the faculty and student body filed past as a final tribute.

College of Preachers.

A gift by a layman to the College of Preachers, Washington Cathedral, provides a regular income for the present activities which may be found practicable as well as those of the future when permanent quarters are provided.

Accordingly, therefore, four small apartments have been leased providing accommodations for fourteen men. St. Albans' School, just across the street, will provide meals for those in residence from time to time. With this equipment at hand, it is planned to hold a series of small group conferences led by distinguished men, lasting five or six days, each conference dealing with one topic or subject of special importance to preachers. One such was held in November to help men in their advent preaching. Four such conferences are planned for January with subjects as follows:

1. Lenten preaching at Monday services, led by Bishop Freeman.
2. Evangelistic service, led by Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst.
3. Lenten preaching and the moral and spiritual guidance of the people, led by Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall.
4. Mission preaching, led by Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson.

The larger conference of the College of Preachers held every year for the three years just past, will be held in June and continue the week.

"Sign of Toc H."

The "Sign of Toc H" has just made its first appearance, being an official publication of Toc H, Mark I, Washington, D. C. It is full of Toc H news and inspiration. Any contributions for its pages should be sent to "The Sign Writer", Toc H, Mark I., 1324 18th St., Washington, D. C.

Christmas Pageant at the Cathedral.

Two hundred and fifty children of the Church School took part in a Christmas mystery play at the Cathedral recently. Mrs. Louise Homer Stires was the Madonna and sang very beautifully. Bishop Stires was present and took part. The play was written by Mrs. L. W. Tucker, and its production is said to have been very effective.

Queens and Nassau Clericus.

The Clericus of Queens and Nassau will have its 300th meeting on January 19 at Garden City. Bishop Stires will be the speaker. At the annual meeting recently the Rev. Charles H. Ricker, of Manhasset, was elected President; the Rev. John S. Haight, of Hempstead, Vice-President; the Rev. Baxter Norris, of Belle Harbor, Secretary and Treasurer. The Program Committee consists of the Rev. Donald F. Schumann, of Queens Village; the Rev. Rockland T. Homans, of Jamaica, and the Rev. James W. Tripp, of Ozone Park.

School for Lay Readers.

On Monday evening, January 9, the Bishops' School for Lay Readers began its second session. Meetings will be at the Diocesan House, 170 Remsen Street, Brooklyn. The faculty will be the same as at the first session. The Bishop hopes and asks for thirty or forty well qualified laymen to present themselves for this training and for subsequent service.

A Christmas Gift.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Lassiter, of Oxford, presented St. Stephen's, Oxford, with a Christmas gift, a house and lot adjoining the church property, which is admirably adapted for a parish house. The house, formerly owned and occupied by Mr. Lassiter's grandmother, Mrs. Katherine Skinner Lassiter, is given as a memorial to her and others associated with her in the early days of the parish. St. Stephen's has made rapid strides during the past year, under the ministry of the Rev. Reuben Meredith. At a recent service eighteen persons were presented to Bishop Cheshire for confirmation.

A memorial to the late Dr. Richard H. Lewis, for many years Senior Warden of Christ Church, Raleigh, has recently been dedicated. A handsome and spacious vestibule at the western entrance of the church, built from drawings by Hobart Upjohn, was given by Dr. Lewis' children.

Y. P. S. C.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Diocesan Y. P. S. L., Miss Margaret Bell, of Salisbury, was elected president to fill the unexpired term of Carl Hobgood, who died at his home in Durham in November.

Mrs. Frank N. Challen, Executive Secretary of the Y. P. S. L. in the Diocese of North Carolina, leaves this month for the Panama Canal Zone, where she was invited to spend several weeks in organizing the Y. P. S. L. Mrs. Challen's work in North Carolina with the young people has attracted wide attention.

Holy Trinity Church, Pineora.

Just after having completed some needed improvements, the Mission of Holy Trinity Church, Pineora, Ga., was completely destroyed by fire on the afternoon of January 1. The lay reader assigned for service that afternoon arrived in time to see the last ember die out. The loss is not covered by insurance, as the amount of the insurance will not exceed $1,200. This mission is in the Savannah Archdeaconry, and under the Ven. F. North-Tummon. During the Archdeacon's illness, especially during the summer, nine lay readers, all but one members of St. John's Church, Savannah, took charge of his missions, and did exceptionally good work. These men assist all during the year by holding services, both morning and evening, in the various missions of Chatham county.

A Week-end of Meditation.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while." Retirement and silence and opportunity to reflect and wait upon God; with united worship and singing at intervals; and a leader to stimulate and direct their meditations. Such is the purpose sought by a group in this Diocese. A gathering of this character for men will be held the week-end of Septuagesima, February 5, from late Friday evening to early Monday morning, conducted by Rev. Thomas A. Conover, of Bernardsville, N. J. The next week the Rev. George L. Richardson, of Burlington, Vt., will lead a similar program for women. The group making preliminary arrangements includes Messrs. Harry S. Huber, Jr., Lawrence J. Morris, G. Frank Shelby and Lee Sowden; Miss Elizabeth W. Fisher, Mrs. William C. Perkins, Mrs. J. Alison Scott, Miss Sarah Tompkins and Mrs. George Woodward; Rev. Messrs. Charles E. Eder, Frank Goostray, C. J. Harriman, Albert H. Lucas, John Mockridge, Leslie F. Potter and Stanley V. Wilcox. The plans have been laid before Bishop Garland, and with his permission those who are willing to cooperate, or who wish detailed information and to be kept in touch with developments, may address Lee Sowden, 202 South Nineteenth Street.

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee."

Wednesday, January 11, at 4 P. M., there will be a meeting at Church House to organize. The understanding is that

The Coming.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

Once a man led an ass by the bridle;
A young woman sat on the patient little beast;
They were tired and spent with a long journey;
They knew not where they might find shelter;
They feared the inn would be closed:
As they had traveled onward through the night,
The wind from the hills was sharp and cold,
And Joseph wrapped her garments close around Mary;
Then he walked ahead as though to shield her from the icy blasts;
There has been flurries of snow
That cut stingingly into his face they hurried toward Bethlehem;
But now, the night, though cold, was clear and beautiful;
Millions of stars sparkled and glinted in the blue vault of the heavens;
And the moon bathed the hills and valleys in silver radiance:
Far, far away seemed the roofs and domes of Bethlehem;
It was fully midnight when they reached the city
The little town was asleep in the moonlight:
It knew not the ime of her visiaion.
Her Holy One had come. And she knew it not.
Only the shepherds, their watch fires burning on the hillsides,
Knew of the glory of God.
And heard the hosannas of angel messengers;
They were led by the star to a little cave filled with light.
There they saw Joseph kneeling at the feet of Mary,
And a little Child lifted up in loving arms
To bless him and the whole world.
And the shepherds' souls were filled with a great joy:
They were in Holy Company;
This little Child was He that was to come—
The Promised One, the Holy One:
The One, Who, being lifted up,
Has since drawn the whole world to His feet,
The Babe of Bethlehem.

The Glory of Simplicity.

As one reads over once more carefully and lovingly the story of the first Christmas Day, one is impressed by the fact that those who were chosen as the first ones to receive the "glad tidings" were folk of great simplicity of life and experience. They had probably never been outside their homeland, and that was a tiny country. Possibly they had never journeyed more than twenty or thirty miles from their birthplace. Their occupation was a humble one. Their world was a very small one. Such news as they had of the life of the great empire of which they were a part filtered down to them as countryside gossip, and quite likely it did not interest them greatly then.

We must remember that from the standpoint of the Nativity story the good news was nothing less than a proclamation that in the birth of the Babe in Bethlehem God had kept His promise made centuries before. The long expected Christ was born. Yet the news came to people who had no social or political influence, whose education was the most meager, and who had just enough of this world's goods to buy their daily bread. It was indeed little that they could do to further the cause of the new-born King, at least from the worldly point of view. The fact remains, however, that in spite of all these material handicaps, the shepherds heard the story first. Why?

Not because they were poor and uneducated and uninfluential, but because their life had been so simple that none of these outside things came in to prevent them from perceiving what were the most valuable gifts that life had to offer them.

Much of our weariness and discontent and cynicism is due to our lack of this quality of simplicity. Of course, we offer at once the "alibi" of the complexity of our modern life. We cannot (if we would) put ourselves where the shepherds were intellectually and socially, but we can reproduce inwardly the simplicity of their outlook. Some of the simplest people I have ever met have been those whom the world recognized as intellectually and spiritually among its greatest, but in all their wealth of experience and learning they had kept a childlikeness of attitude and a freedom from entanglement with mere "things" which was both beautiful and inspiring.

How much better we could serve our fellow men, our country, society, and the world, if we were willing to take to heart this one of the many lessons of Christmas-tide. The message of peace and goodwill, of gladness and of joy, comes to those whose hearing is not dulled by the din of worldly noise. Because they hear that message clearly, then can pass it on to others without spoiling it in the passing.—Bishop McElwain in Minneapolis Journal.

When Lexington Sang Dixie

An interesting story is told of the arrival of the statue of Lee in Lexington by an eye-witness of one of the little town's greatest days. When General Lee died, the people of Virginia, war-poor as they were, formed the Lee Memorial Association and commissioned Valentine to make the statue which excites the admiration of all who see it in the simple little chapel on the university grounds. The people could raise only $32,000 for the work and when the statue was completed and ready to be removed from Richmond all funds were exhausted. The two literary societies of Richmond College provided the money to transport the statue by canal boat, and their offer was accepted. When it arrived in Lexington, the whole town and countryside had turned out and was well organized to receive it. General Bradley T. Johnson—that gallant Marylander who led the famous "Maryland Line" in the Confederate Army—was the marshal of the day. The committee who came with the statue was loaded from the canal boat to General Lee's grave. "Hrses!" said General Johnson, "no horse flesh shall ever pull the statue of our Lee through the streets of Lexington." But we will let our old friend tell the rest of the tale in his own words:"

"A man came down the double column with a long grass rope and fastened it to the ring of the wagon tongue. General Jubal Early stepped up and took hold of one end of the breast-yoke; Governor Letcher, then head of the V. M. I., took hold of the other end. General Johnson, the only man on horseback, rode up the column and said with a clarion voice, 'Men, women, fellow citizens of Lexington, fall in", Immediately every soul of them laid hold on that rope. General Johnson gave the cmmand, "'Forward march.' The great wagon moved off as if by magic. An ex-soldier began to wave his red bandana. Immediately handkerchiefs, hats, and bonnets were waving in the air. Then someone began to sing 'Dixie'; Lexington joined in. I have heard people sing 'Dixie'; I have heard bands try to play it, but I heard Lexington really sing it. The procession mounted the incline. When it reached the corner of the campus it swung around like a great human rainbow, passed through the double gates and stopped under a black locust tree beside the grave of General Lee. These old Lexingtonians fell on each other's necks and wept. One great emotion moved them all."—Selected.

Old-Fashioned Ways.

"When Grandma comes, I hope she won't upset Betty's training. She's so old-fashioned, I'm afraid she will want to interfere with the child's schedule and give her all sorts of impossible things to eat," Mrs. Treadwell had said when the vigorous old lady had announced her intention of making a visit.

But, on the contrary, Grandma had no suggestions to make regarding Betty—Betty who was finical about her food, restless and impatient, bursting into tears at slight provocation and altogether too pale and languid.

Betty lived in a household of grown-ups. Grandpa enjoyed taking her to the movies any pleasant afternoon. Cousin Mary donated pink chiffon bonnets and white broadcloth coats. Her father brought home a pair of real kid gloves, just to see her eyes shine, and a doll so fragile and delicately arrayed, that some one had to be continually reminding her not to drop it, not to soil it. Mother took her on her shopping trips, proud of the attention she received in the stores.

And still Grandma said nothing. Until one day young Mrs. Treadwell remarked, "I don't see how mothers in your day ever succeeded in raising their families. They paid so little attention to diet!"

Grandma must have been slightly ruffled for she replied, "We weren't perhaps as careful of the food that went into their stomachs as you are, but we were a good deal more particular about the food we gave their minds. We maybe did give them too much spice in their victuals, but not so much in their amusements. We didn't dash in a lot of excitement on the top of a full day. We didn't take them about through crowds to overstimulate and exhaust them. You say you don't want Betty to get a taste for highly seasoned food. Well, our children didn't get such a taste for excitement that they couldn't enjoy a quiet day at home, reading or working. Excitement arouses the desire for more excitement, just as the condiments you worry so about, cause a desire for more condiments.

"You say that certain foods are a burden to a child's delicate stomach. We never made playthings a burden. A child ought not to be continually pestered about taking care of a fragile toy. If Betty were my child I'd put away that fancy doll until she were older. A simpler one would be better for her now.

"Her food isn't too rich, but her clothes are. They are no more fit for a vigorous child than that rich pudding you refused her last night. They belong to her future.

"Our children were not always fed wisely, but perhaps they survived it all because they didn't have too much attention, too many people about, too much nagging about non-essentials, fussy clothes, elaborate toys or constant stimulation."

"But what can a mother do in this modern world? We can't live as you did then," said the younger woman.

"You can as far as the essentials go. Just as you choose for her simple food out of all that is on the table, so you can learn to choose simple pleasures, quiet enjoyment and the child-companionship she so much needs."—Stella E. Fulton.

Wolseley' Estimate of Lee.

Field Marshal Viscount Wolseley, who reached the highest eminence in the British army, is best known to Americans because of his euology of General Robert E. Lee. Lord Wolseley made his way to the Confederate line in 1862 and enjoyed a much-coveted visit to the great commander, of which visit he wrote thus in later years:

Every incident of that visit is indelibly stamped on my memory. All he said to me then and during subsequent conversations is still fresh in my recollection. It is natural it should be so, for he was the ablest general, and seemed to me the greatest man I ever conversed with, and yet I have had the privilege of meeting Von Moltke and Prince Bismarck. General Lee was one of the few men who ever seriously impressed and awed me with their inherent greatness. Forty years have come and gone since our meeting and yet the majesty of his manly bearing, the genial, wining grace, the sweetness of his smile, and the impressive dignity of his old-fashioned style of dress, come back to me among my most cherished recollections. His greatness made me humble, and I never felt my own insignificance more keenly than I did in his presence . . . He was, indeed, a beautiful character, and of him it might truthfully be written, "In righteousness did he judge and make war . . ."

When all the angry feelings aroused by the secession are buried with those that existed when the Declaration of Independence was written; when Americans can review the history of their last great war with calm impartiality, I believe that all will admit that General Lee towared far above all men on either side in that struggle. I believe he will be regarded not only as the most prominent figure of the Confederacy, but as the greatest American of the nineteenth century, whose statue is well worthy to stand on an equal pedestal with that of Washington and whose memory is equally worthy to be enshrined in the hearts of all his countrymen.—Selected.

God Knows It All.

Kate Goldsboro McDowell.

God knows it all, the heart's desire
For worldly power, distinction, fame,
Denying these, He leads you higher,
Where you may learn to bless His name.

God knows it all, the pain, unrest,
The bitterness you ofttimes feel,
So draws you to His loving breast
That resting there your wounds may heal.

He leads you not where you would tread
Through paths that seem to you so fair,
But through byways with clouds o'erhead,
For you shall need His guidance there.

The wounded love, the aching heart,
The disappointments you conceal,
All these of God's plan form a part,
Some day His mercy shall reveal.

Misjudged, unpitied and alone,
Ofttimes your heart on Him shall call,
Hear then this answer from His throne:
"Be comforted, I know it all."

Whene'er earth's days and nights grow long
And sun and stars seem not to shine,
"God knows it all", the heart's sweet song
Winging its way to light divine.

Why is the Bible the Best Seller?

Because it is the most universal in its appeal.

It knows no class, race, sect or cult.

It is humanity's book.

It is the common reservoir from which all men draw their supplies.

It is the community power house of the spiritual world.

It is read by the white man and the negro, the Oriental and the Occidental, the proletariat and the aristocrat, the college professor and the hod carrier, the ruddy-cheeked boy in the Sunday school and the pale and wasted old man on his dying bed.

Nobody, no group, no organization has been able to box it, or fence it, or own it, as exclusive property.

Churches are founded upon it, rise, increase and in time decay; theologies are constructed from its texts, they flourish and dissolve; it abides, as the mountains abide, whence flow the inexhaustible springs of human hope.

It is a Book that reaches back into gray antiquity, forward to the golden age.

It is like the great tree Ygdrasil whose roots are in the past and whose branches wave in the sky of the future.

It contains the only program of civilization.

Its principles constitute the only practical basis of commerce; it is the cornerstone of business.

Only by its teachings can we come to the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

It is not the Jew's book, nor the Catholic's, nor the Protestant's, nor the orthodox's, nor the heretic's; it is man's Book; and wherever a soul is born into the world this Book is for him.

It treats of the most interesting of subjects, how to live and how to die.

It contains the rarest traditions, the noblest poetry, the most convincing preachment; it is the world's greatest literary masterpiece.

A myriad Magdelenes have wept away their shame at His feet; a myriad soldiers have lisped His name with their last breath upon the shotted field.

The Bible utters the soul of man. It is mysterious, as he is full of mystery. To its commands he responds with an instinctive Amen. To its vision of holiness his heart turns, as a flower to the sun. Its appeal to conscience lays upon him a ghostly, compelling hand.

It restrains crime more than all the police. It solves more problems than all the philosophies. It wins more wars than all the armies. It promotes progress more than all the reformers. It is the terror of the oppressor, the liberator of the slave, the solace of the disillusioned, the morning star to them that overcome and the cup of comfort to them that fall by the way.

It is the pledge and program of the millennium.

And in that final hour that comes to all men, when the spirit shudders forth into the unknown, this Book alone brings the word, like a bell in the fog, of Him who says:

"I am the Resurrection and the Life."
—Dr. Frank Crane in the World Outlook.

Press Forward, Church of Jesus!

F. B. Stone.

Press forward, Church of Jesus,
Urge men to watch and pray!
The Gospel is so needed,
It must not be delayed;
O, who will seek Christ's people,
Their hungry spirits feed?
You, you have still the manna
To satisfy their need.

Chorus.

Let faith hold fast its purpose clear,
To bring men unto Him whom He has bought so dear;
Press forward, Church of Jesus,
The age will soon be o'er,
And Thy commission ended
By a swift closing door.

Prepare men for His coming,
Teach them to work and pray,
Let none be overtaken
In ignorance of that day;
Let not your footsteps falter,
As foes around you press,
For they are ever near you
To harass and distress.

But I am always with you
To help you take my Word,
To all my scattered people,
The Gospel still unheard;
O, do not longer tarry,
Get ready for that day,
The great event's approaching,
Let not your steps be stayed;

Loyalty.

John Morley tells us that Gladstone was in danger of losing his glorious reputation after the Khartoum affair when Gordon lost his life. One big man helped to save him. Lord Roseberry, the great orator and statesman, offered himself to the aged Gladstone's administration. It saved him. This was true friendship. When disaster, loss of reputation, calumny were about to visit his friend, Lord Roseberry turned them from the door. He came in the darkness. That is loyalty.—Exchange.

The Dawning Gear.

Josephine T. Flournoy.

We are standing on the threshold
Of a newly dawning year;
Wider! wider! fling the portals!
As the welcome signs appear.

Onward surge the countless millions,
Young and old and babes new-born;
Joy and sorrow, pain and pleasure,
All are there to greet the morn.

And above that vast assemblage—
Like a vision in the night—
See the star of hope ascending
With its everlasting light.

A New Year's Call.

It was just before the New Year, and Miss Henderson had been telling her small pupils about the pretty custom, so common long ago, of calling on one's friends on New Year's Day.

All the children were interested.

"I wish we could pay New Year's calls too," said Dora Day to her little friends after school was over.

"I don't see why we can't," said Polly Bliss. "I'm going to anyway. I'm going to call on my grandma."

"I'd call on my mamma," tiny May Carrier told them, "because I love her bushels more than any body else, only it would seem funny to call on somebody who lived right in the same house with you, wouldn't it?"

The children all lauhged.

Even Margaret Lee's sober little face wore the hint of a smile though she said nothing.

Margaret was a stranger among them. She did not know any one to call upon. But, oh, how she wished she did!

She started homeward. Polly and Dora looked after her thoughtfully. Then there was a putting together of curly heads and much giggling and mysterious whispering. When New Year's Day came Margaret decided that the very best way to forget how badly she felt at the thought that she knew no one to call upon, was to do something. So she put the playroom in nice order and then dressed Araminta and Flossie Maria and all the rest of her dolls in their very best clothes and placed them upon chairs.

"I wonder what I can do now," she thought, and before she had had time to settle upon anything, the front doorbell rang loudly. She heard Nora, the maid, go to the door and open it; then she heard the sound of many feet that were trying to go softly, coming up the stairs.

Margaret wondered what it could mean.

A soft tap came upon the playroom door and Margaret was almost sure she heard a giggle.

When she opened the door there stood Dora and Polly and May, all dressed in their very best dresses.

"We've cme to pay you a New Year's call," Dora told her.

"It was Polly and Dora's plan," said little May.

"We shall make our other calls afterwards," said Polly.

Margaret's face was shining with happiness.

"Why, I never thought of any one's calling on me," she told them joyfully. "I just thought about my not having any one to call upon. I'm so glad I dressed up my dolls. It was lovely of you to think of coming, seeing I'm a stranger."

"You aren't going to be a stranger any longer," laughed Dora.—Dew Drops.

The Magnanimity of Lee.

Lee's was a magnanimous soul. "I have said we never criticized him," says Major Stiles. "I ought, perhaps, to make one qualification of this statement. It has been suggested by others and I have myself once or twice felt that Lee was too lenient, too full of sweet charity and allowance." That is a fault rarely found among men.

"On the retreat from Pennsylvania he rebuked his aide, Colonel Venable, for telling bad news too loudly. Venable was high-spirited and did not like it, nor did a kindly invitation to drink buttermilk entirely sooth him. Shortly afterwards, the aide, worn out with running and watching, lay down to sleep in the mud and rain. When he awoke, he found that the General had spread his own oil-skin over him."

Referring to the battle of Gettysburg, Dr. Jones says: "While he knew, and the calm verdict of the historian must be, that the defeat had been due to failure to carry out his orders, yet, with a self-abnegation which rises to the sublime, he calmly said: "This is all my fault. I have lost this battle, and you must help me out of it the best way you can.' "

When he urged the promotion of a certain officer, it was pointed out that that officer had been very free in criticizing the General. "The question is," Lee answered, "not what he thinks or is pleased to say about me, but what I think about him."

One of his biographers relates that, seeing him one day talking at his gate with a stranger, to whom, as he ended, he gave some money, he inquired who the stranger was. "That is one of our old soldiers in necessitous circumstances," he replied. "To whose command did he belong?" The General quietly added: "He fought on the other side, but we must not remember that against him now."

Referring to the enemy, a general said in Lee's presence: "I wish they were all dead." Lee said: "How can you say so, General? Now I wish they were all home, attending to their own business, leaving us to do the same."

He often referred to the enemy as "those people." One of his frequent orders was, "drive back 'those people'."

"I have fought against the people of the North," he said, "because I believed they were seeking to wrest from the South her dearest rights. But I have never cherished bitter or vindictive feelings, and have never seen the day when I did not pray for them."

At Gettysburg a wounded Union soldier saw Lee riding by, and raising up on his hands, he looked Lee in the face and shouted as loud as he could. "Hurrah for the Union!" Lee drove to the man, dismounted, and the soldier thought he meant to kill him. But he said Lee looked at him with such a sad expression on his face that all fear left him. Grasping the soldier's hand, he said, with great tenderness, "My Son, I hope you will soon be well." The soldier said afterward: "If I live a thousand years I shall never forget the expression of General Lee's face. There he was defeated . . . and yet he stopped to say words like those to a wounded soldier of the opposition who had taunted him as he passed by."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Sally's Christmas.

Mrs. Landon looked out of the cottage window.

"Well, I declare!" she exclaimed. "It's snowing!"

She stood still a few moments watching the falling flakes, and then crossed the room and stirred the fire in the big, open fireplace, and put on another piece of wood.

"Maybe we'll at least have snow for Christmas," she told herself, and sighed.

She looked tired, wistful, as people look sometimes when they need some one or something to come and cheer them up. As hard as she had worked, she was barely able to make ends meet for herself and little Sally, and she had made almost no preparations for Christmas, which was now only two days off. So it had been the Christmas before, and even the Christmas before that. But Sally was six years old now, and had started to school, and had learned from the other children of the countryside what happy times they had at Christmas and what nice things they got, and that was what made it seem harder than before. As she stood thus, thinking, the door burst open and in came Sally, snow-sprinkled, bright-eyed, and with cheeks as red as the reddest apple that any one ever saw.

"Mother!" she shouted jubilantly. "It's snowing! Did you see it?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Landon, brightening up, "I certainly did. Aren't you glad?"

"Yes," Sally answered, "I am, 'cause now maybe we'll have snow for Christmas."

She pitched her crumpled hat on a chair, and her mother unbottoned the tight fitting coat that had been patched and darned until it resembled a crazy quilt.

"I'm goin' back out in a minute," Sally objected.

"Wait until you warm up a little," her mother said, and stirred the fire again.

Sally held out her hands to the cheerful blaze.

"Mother," she asked, "are you sure Santa Claus isn't comin' this Christmas?"

Mrs. Landon smoothed out the girl's tangled hair.

"I don't think he will, honey," she answered. "I don't think he'll know where to find us so far up here from the road."

The little girl stood thinking.

"He's comin' to Peggy Wood's," she said, "and to Mary Jane's, and to Susie's, and to Ann McCoy's. He brings them things every Christmas, and he never has come to my house."

Mrs. Landon's lips trembled, and she was silent a moment.

"Maybe he'll surprise us some time," she then suggested.

The little girl looked solemnly into the fire.

"I wonder if he will," she said slowly.

Then, suddenly remembering the snow, she ran to the window.

"Look, mother!" she cried. "it's just comin' down. The ground's gotten white already."

"Yes," her mother replied, looking out across the clearing. "Isn't it pretty?"

The snow was falling fast, and they could barely see the tall cedars along the brink of the forest slope.

"Listen!" exclaimed the little girl suddenly.

They heard children's voices, and going quickly to the front window they saw visitors coming, one, two, three, four, five, six children, and one lady.

"It's Miss Jane!" Sally whispered, scarcely believing her eyes. Miss Jane was her school-teacher, and the others were children from the school.

Mrs. Landon opened the door.

"Come in," she invited cheerfully.

"I know you're surprised to see such a troop," Miss Jane declared, as she came in smiling, followed by her six companions, "but the children like Sally so much at school I brought them up to see her."

Sally stood a little back of her mother, and her eyes were still big with wonder.

"Hello, Sally!" greeted several of the children.

"Hello!" she answered, abashed at so much company.

"How is our little Sally?" asked Miss Jane, beaming down at her.

Sally smiled and stood close beside her mother.

"She's all right," Mrs. Landon replied. "Let me hang up your coat."

"Miss Jane," spoke up a fat boy with red cheeks and a very red nose, "can we all run out and play in the snow?"

"Why, yes, if Sally can go with you," consented Miss Jane, glancing at Mrs. Landon.

"Yes, indeed," said Mrs. Landon. "Here, Sally, put on your coat and run out with the children."

A few moments later Sally and her lively visitors were romping merrily through the falling snow. Most of them were several years older, but one little girl was six years old, and that was just Sally's age. Her name was Dot, and she wore a bright red coat.

"Let's play tag!" shouted one of the girls, skipping about.

"Well!" agreed several others.

"Tag, you're it!" sang out the fat boy with the red nose; and away they scattered like a flock of geese.

"Tag, yourself!" cried a swift little girl, who had caught the fat boy and tagged him back.

They all yelled and veered away, and dodged and screamed as the fat boy lurched around after first one and then another.

"Hey, Skipper, here I am; tag me!" teased one boy who ran close by and sped away.

"Hi, yi, hi, yi!" yelled another.

And so the game went on until after a while they changed and played with Indian; and they were still playing this when some time later Miss Jane joined them and said it was time to go. Just then the fat boy's feet flew out from under him, and down he sprawled in the snow, red nose and all, and everybody laughed and laughed.

"Hey, Skipper," shouted a freckled-faced boy. 'Goodbye'!" and everybody laughed again.

Sally watched them until they disappeared over the brow of the ridge where the road led down through the woods, and then ran into the cottage.

"Mother!" she exclaimed, all out of breath. "We had so much fun!"

"I know you did," Mrs. Langdon replied. "I'm so glad they came."

And she unbuttoned the ragged little coat again and hung it on a peg by the door.

The snow must have fallen all that night, for the next morning it was still snowing, and it snowed until late in the day, which of course was Christmas Eve. Mrs. Landon seemed more cheerful now, and went about her work singing softly to herself.

"Mother," said Sally a little while before dark, "wouldn't Santa Claus come if we wrote him a letter to tell him where we live?"

"He might," Mrs. Landon replied. "We could try it and see."

"Well!" exclaimed Sally, and off she scrambled to find pencil and paper.

They sat before the fire, and Sally told her mother what to write.

"Dear Santa Claus," she began, "we live up here near the woods. You can come up the road. Please bring me a doll and some candy and an orange, and something else if you can. And bring mother something. I am six years old. You haven't ever come, so be sure to come if you can, and bring my doll. From Sally."

Mrs. Landon folded the letter and held it high above the fire in the twirling smoke, and then it flew up the chimney. Sally drew in a deep breath and looked up at her mother.

"Will he come, mother?" she asked.

"I hope so," replied Mrs. Landon.

The next morning Sally awoke early and sat straight up in bed. It was Christmas! Mrs. Landon was already dressed.

"Mother," Sally called out, "did he come?"

"I can't be sure," Mrs. Landon answered, crossing to the window. "But I thought I saw something hanging on one of those big cedars."

She looked out, and in a flash Sally was beside her, staring across the smooth stretch of snow. The three tall cedar trees, laden with white, stood like peaceful emblems of a holy day. And from the lowest branches of the one in the middle things were hanging here and there, and in the midst of them all, gleaming something red.

"Yes," cried Sally. "I see them!" Help me to dress! Quick!"

A few minutes later they were speeding hand in hand toward the friendly cedars. When they reached them they found that the large one in the middle was really and truly an out-of-doors Christmas tree, tall and stately and snow-laden, with branches leaning low. And among these low-hanging branches were packages, big and small and medium sized, all wrapped in red and tied with holly ribbons; and there were candy canes and a horn and golden stars and many other things. But the first thing Sally really saw was a beautiful big doll, all adressed in pink, and swinging low enough for her to reach.

With a little cry of delight she ran to it, and in a twinkling the beautiful doll was clasped in her arms, and she was gazing upon it as if scarcely believing it was real. She did not see all the other things among the cedar branches. She did not see the pile of big and odd shaped packages around the trunk of the tree. She did not see the large basket, wrapped about with holly paper and filled up over the brim with oranges, apples, nuts and raisins and candy. She only saw her doll, which she loved already with a love that was more than love. Then she glanced up at her mother, who stood waiting and smiling.

"Mother!" she cried, holding up the beautiful doll. "Look!"—J. C. J., In Southwestern Episcopalian.

Storekeeper Henry.

"Where is Henry? Does any one know where Henry is?" Frank asked the question for he wanted to be sure that all the class would be ready when the bus came to carry them to the picnic grounds.

"Where is Henry," he asked again as he passed through the group of waiting children. But no one knew where he was.

"Let's see if we can find him, maybe he is sick." So three boys ran to Henry's home that was not far away. He was not there. His mother said that he had left half an hour before to go to his uncle's store. Down to the store ran the boys. There they found Henry waiting on some customers. When the customers had gone out they asked Henry what he was doing.

"I am keeping store for uncle, he has to be away half an hour." The boys all thought it would be nice to have an uncle with a store that they could keep just like Henry was doing, if they would not have to stay on picnic days.

"But you will miss the picnic, if you wait that long," said Ted.

"I can't help it, I told uncle I would stay until he came back."

"But the people have all gone, and it is so early there may not any more come. Why don't you lock the door."

Henry shook his head. "That would not be right," he answered, as he took up a cloth and began dusting the counter. Just then two more customers came in. Henry waited on them. After they left the boys again urged Henry to come with them, for there was always more fun at a picnic when he was along.

But Henry only shook his head and went on dusting the shelves.

Just as they were urging him for the last time his uncle came back.

"Run along," he said, "I just heard that your class is to have a picnic. Here is something for a boy that is willing to give up a picnic to help me," and he slipped a dollar into Henry's hand. "For a little ice cream for you and your friends."

"Whoo-pee, thank you, uncle," and the four boys dashed out of the store, and raced to the bus that was just beginning to move away.—Inez Wilson, in The Presbyterian Advance.

Deaths

ASHLEY B. MINER.

ASHLEY B. MINER, for over forty years a communicant of St. Paul's Church, Suffolk, Va., and also for many years a vestryman, passed into the future life December 29, 1927. He was the only brother of Rev. E. P. Miner, of St. Mark's Church, Norfolk, Va. The following is from the Suffolk News-Herald of December 31:

The Upright Citizen.

This whole community mourns the loss of Ashley B. Miner, whose body was consigned to its last earthly abode today. When men of such high and upright character pass the community is poorer, but there is consolation in the knowledge that they have left it a better place in which to live. This man is one of the finest exemplars of the good and upright citizen. Though no life is perfect and wholly without its errors, the one which has just closed approached the perfect citizen probably as nearly as that is possible in a world so imperfect. He lived the life of the good citizen in every relation, and none who came in contact with him at any vital point has aught but praise and admiration for the splendor of his character.

Stricken with blindness in early manhood, he never allowed that infirmity to become a handicap. Rather it seemed to soften and sweeten his life and make him more kindly and gentle toward the world. How he overcame what to many would have been an insurmountable barrier is almost a romance in this community. He created one of the city's greatest industries, giving employment to hundreds and by his own skill and genius amassed a considerable fortune by methods beyond question. Every dollar he made was an honest dollar earned in the sweat of his brow. And when fortune smiled, he did not close his heart to those in need and no man ever appealed to him in vain. His charitable acts in this community will live to bless and keep green his memory.

His life is an example for the young men of this community, not only in the fact that he overcame his physical handicap and made a success, but in all the relations of life and the finer things that combine in good citizenship. Suffolk, Va., and the world are poorer for his passing, but of such is the kingdom of heaven. For him his family and community need not grieve as those who have lost him forever. Such lives live on in their good works and in eternity.

FENTON NOLAND.

A Tribute.

The death of MR. FENTON NOLAND is the passing of one of the most useful men, not only in the community in which he was born and lived the whole of his life, but to the whole of Hanover county. To the church to which he belonged he is an irreparable loss. It is not for any man to say that God's cause is crippled beyond recovery when any one of His servants is taken hence, for He is able to raise up those who will carry on His work, but when such a man falls in Israel we find ourselves inquiring, who is there to take his place? There are others who are better able to speak of him as a citizen of the county than I am, but whatever they say, I am sure that this fact will stand out most prominently, that there was no one more deeply interested in county affairs than he was and no one more ready to devote himself, his time and his energies to the county's good.

It was characteristic of the man to put his whole soul into his work, and whatever he did, to do it to the best of his ability. From 1893 to 1903 it was my privilege to be his rector. I never knew him before being thrown with him in this relation. In all my long ministry, over a period of sixty years, I have never had a more reliable, more capable, more earnest and more cheerful co-worker than he was. He was the wheel-horse upon whom the whole team depended. His rector was ever sure of him. If his place on Sunday was empty, there was a good, insurmountable reason for its being so. He was not a spasmodic worker, full of fire and zeal today, cold and indifferent tomorrow. His zeal was a steady glow.

I am sure his present pastor can say that it was just as fervent the day of his death as it was in my day thirty-five years ago.

Fenton Noland was a singularly clean man in word and act. I never heard of his saying or doing a thing that would cause a blush of shame. He left a glorious heritage to his family and his parish.

S. S. HEPBURN.

DAVID RIDGELY HOWARD.

At his home in Baltimore on December 29, 1927, just ten days before his eighty-fourth birthday, DAVID RIDGELY HOWARD passed quietly and peacefully to the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

The youngest son of James and Catherine Ross Howard, he was the last surviving grandchild of Colonel John Eager Howard, of Revolutionary fame; and, following his grandfather's example, he was one of the gallant sons of Maryland who threw in their lot with the South in 1861. Severely wounded at Gettysburg in 1863, he lost a leg in the fighting around Petersburg in April, 1864; and shortly after the fall of Richmond in 1865 he escaped to Canada, where he remained until the general amnesty enabled him to return to Baltimore without a formal surrender.

He was essentially a gentleman and devoted Christian of the old school; and while he died a loyal citizen of the United States in relation to the rest of the world, he could never adjust himself to the view that the constitutional question as to the right of secession had been either justly or finally settled by the "War Between the States". To his last breath he was an "unreconstructed rebel" and believed that his first, if not sole, loyalty was to the State of Maryland, just as firmly as he believed that Robert E. Lee was the greatest military commander that ever lived or that man's only hope of salvation is through the merits and intercession of our Lord and Saviour.

To his nearest kin he leaves untarnished the goodly name that he inherited, and to all of those who knew him well he leaves a precious memory of complete abnegation of self and unfailing courtesy and kindliness for every one, high or low—but especially the lowly—with whom he ever came in contact.

RESOLUTIONS UPON THE DEATH OF FENTON NOLAND.

At a meeting of the vestry of St. Martin's Parish, held on the 7th day of January, 1928, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God in His wise providence to take out of this world the soul of our friend and former vestryman, FENTON NOLAND, ESQ., while in the full possession of his faculties, and in the active exercise of his usefulness as a good citizen:

Be it resolved, that in his death our parish and community have lost one of their best and most useful members—one who was at all times ready and willing to help those in need about him, and whose work as treasurer of this parish and one of its wardens marked him as among the most useful members of society, and of the church which he so faithfully served.

Resolved, that his example is of great value to all of us, and should render us more dutiful and efficient in our work for God and His Church.

Resolved, that we tender his family our deep sympathy; and that these resolutions be spread on the minutes, a copy of them forwarded Mrs. Noland, and also published in the Southern Churchman and in the Virginia Churchman.

J. P. H. MASON, Rector;

JAMES ROY ELLERSON.

Resolutions.

Whereas, the Vestry of St. Alban's Parish has been advised of the loss of its friend and coworker, JAMES ROY ELLERSON, then be it resolved that the following be spread upon its records and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the family and published in the Southern Churchman.

Resolved, That the Vestry of St. Alban's Parish, Diocese of Washington, learns with distinct shock and profound sorrow of the death of James Roy Ellerson; Mr. Ellerson was a most loyal and earnest, active and effective Christian worker in all of his contacts; the Vestry of St. Alban's Parish will scarcely ever cease to miss him and his wise and friendly counsel; it is well nigh impossible to replace him; each individual member of the Vestry has the sense of the personal loss of a faithful friend; by his example of high Christian rectitude and honor, James R. Ellerson made the world a better place in which to live.

the above statement embodies the commitments already made. In all other matters the group is free to act, and all its members will be equal.

The Farmhouse at Westtown has been suggested. They can accommodate comfortably from twenty to thirty, according to how much it seems wise to crowd sleeping quarters.

"A Day of Demonstration."

St. James' Church, Philadelphia, has set aside all of Sunday, January 8, as "A Day of Demonstration", at which outstanding clergy and laymen of the Episcopal Church in the United States gave a presentation of the educational work which that communion is doing among the negroes of the Southern States under the auspices of the American Church Institute for Negroes.

Included in the list of speakers on that day's program were the Hon. Richard I. Manning, former Governor of South Carolina and a member of the National Council; the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of the East Carolina Diocese; the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., Director of the American Church Institution, and Dr. J. E. Blanton, Principal of the Voorhees Normal and Industrial School of Denmark, S. C. The Voorhees School is one of the ten schools through which the Episcopal Church is doing an educational work among the negroes in the South. It has more than 600 students, thirty-four teachers and property worth upwards of $250,000.

MORE THAN HALF THE WORLD

STILL LIVES IN BIBLELESS HOMES

Yet for every home in the world in which there is even a single copy of the Bible there are two which have never seen the Book. Millions do not know that it exists.

WHAT MAKES YOUR HOUSE A HOME? Not the wood and bricks and other material of which it is made, certainly—it is the love and faith and peace which the Bible puts into the heart that makes the essence of home.

The Bible changes into a home the houses of the world: the tukyl of the African—the igloo of the Eskimo—the tepee of the Indian—the tent of the Arab—and all the bungalows, apartment houses, huts, hovels, mansions, and palaces that men devise and build to live in. MANY LANGUAGES HAVE NO EQUIVALENT FOR OUR WORD HOME. WHAT BETTER GIFT CAN WE WHO HAVE TRUE HOMES GIVE TO THE LANDS AND RACES WITHOUT THEM THAN THE BIBLE?

was organized in 1816 for the sole object "of encouraging a wider circulation of the Holy Scriptres, without note or comment". In 110 years it has issued 174,121,599 volumes of the Scriptures.

This world-wide organization engages more than three thousand Christian men and women, who carry the Scriptures forth to the people of their respective races, selilng at cost and giving freely to those too poor to pay.

During 1925 the Society issued 9,214,423 volumes of the Scriptures in over 150 languages. This is considered a creditable achievement, but our efforts must be multiplied many times if the needs of the world are to be met.

Financial support of Christian people make possible this fundamental work of girding the globe with the Gospel.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

Ring Out the Good News

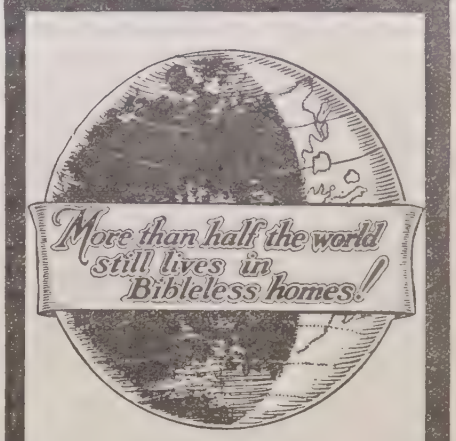
THERE are some who will not soon forget the good spirit and the kindly feeling that seemed to soften even the most unresponsive hearts during the Christmas season that has just passed. Some will not forget the stir in their hearts that came on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day as the church bells pealed out their glad invitation to come and worship the One who was born on Christmas Day, over nineteen hundred years ago.

And yet how soon many do forget. Would it not be a marvelous thing if the hearts of men could be kept open and responsive to the Saviour's invitation throughout the whole year? Chimes and church bells have found a peculiar ministry in reminding men of the faith of their childhood and sounding out a beautiful "whosoever will may come" to every one within hearing in such a way that none can take offense.

Most churches are so constructed as to make easy the installation of a bell or a set of chimes, and the possession of a bell by no means restricts the ministry of the chimes, for these are usually played from the organ on the inside and the bell is rung immediately afterward.



What more fitting memorial could you raise to some loved one who has gone to be with the Lord than a sweet toned bell or a set of tower chimes? In what more effective way can you regularly remind every one in your community that the house of God stands open to proclaim a Saviour who is not willing that any should perish but that all might come to repentance?

Church Equipment Service appears in The Southern Churchman each month. If you have questions as to church equipment or you desire information as to where to purchase any equipment or accessory not found in the columns adjacent to this article, full information will be promptly furnished if you will write to Church Equipment Service, Southern Churchman, 628 East Main Street, Richmond, Virginia.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The richer the jewel the harder the cutting.

"The criminal temperature of the land will drop only when religious education parallels in efficiency the education given in the public schools."

"The last century made the world one neighborhood.
The present century must make the world one brotherhood."

"If you intend to do a mean thing wait until tomorrow. If you are going to do a noble thing, do it now."

You cannot dream yourself into a character;
You must hammer and forge yourself one.
—Froude.

The delicate forest flower seems
An emanation of the indwelling life,
A visible token of the upholding love,
That are the soul of this great universe.
—Bryant.

Dare to look up to God and say, Deal with me in the future as Thou wilt; I am of the same mind as Thou art; I am Thine; I refuse nothing that pleases Thee; lead me where Thou wilt; clothe me in any dress Thou choosest. —Epictetus.

He that has a pure heart will never cease to pray; and he who will be constant in prayer shall know what it is to have a pure heart.—La Combe.

"If you shift onto the shoulders of another the burden that belongs to you, you will find at last that you have also surrendered to him your crown."

"The great temptation to which we are more or less exposed is that of losing sight of God in the ordinary actions of the day. It is hard to feel that every action of every day is capable of being so done as to advance or to hinder our growth in grace."

It may not be ours to utter convincing arguments, but it may be ours to live holy lives. It may not be ours to be subtle, and learned, and wealthy, but it may be ours to be noble, and sweet, and pleasant.—Canon Farrar.

Christ works from within you. He shapes your course. He shares your sorrows and your joys. He rules, not by fiat, but by His endless life in your own souls. Nothing is independent of His sway. And if you would realize the God of your life and salvation, test His presence within you by love, devotion, and service.—Cadman.

O Master, from the mountain side
Make haste to heal these hearts of pain,
Among these restless throngs abide,
O tread the city streets again.

Till sons of men shall learn Thy love
And follow where Thy feet have trod;
Till glorious from Thy heaven above
Shall come the city of our God.

THE FUTURE OF THE CHURCH

There are a great number of evangelicals in the Episcopal Church who are distressed by the condition of the Church. They are spiritually minded people who know the Lord and love the Word and wish to have the gospel preached. And they are the life of the Church. With the stand for truth taken by The Southern Churchman has come an amazing revelation of the condition of things in the Church. When the truth is given we can, as the saying is, get people's number by their reactions to it. Devout saints of God—fruit-bearing Christians—with truth welded into their being by years of arduous service in the mission field, have welcomed what this paper stands for and described its changed front as a resurrection from the dead. The worldly Churchman with the headiness of the doctrinaire sits in the scorner's seat and calls it all comedy. It is what is to be expected from those not born again. First Cor. 2:14 gives their picture, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned".

Not in the spirit of the revolutionist, but of the anxious physician, conscious of the urgent need of a remedy, we wish to inform people of the trend within the Church and to ask is the Episcopal Church to abandon the gospel? It is ever to be remembered that the Reformation did not simply negative errors, but brought positive truth to light that was completely hidden. It only bears out the teaching of Scripture that to be put in trust with the gospel means that we must strive together for the faith of the gospel. Now Protestantism is a term often used with a shallow understanding of its meaning. What we are now concerned with are not matters of order or polity or form, but with great underlying facts that have been the strength and influence of the Protestant Church. When we look at the outstanding bodies of the Protestant Church we find that the connecting link and that which has characterized its life and growth has been the evangelical doctrine of justification by faith. It has been the main-spring of missionary and evangelistic effort, and vigorous conquest for Christ has resulted. The English Church has produced giants in the ministry who preached it and when it has been preached the Church has been powerful in influence. And for every evangelical Church this has been the heart of its message. One of the strong evidences of the departure of the American Church from the teaching of the English Church, we think, was given us by the late Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D. D. Dr. Thomas than whom no greater teacher, we believe, has been heard in America, taught for some years at Oxford, England. For some years he traveled over America and perhaps few men have ever been so beloved by Christians in all the churches as he was. He told the writer that people often expressed surprise that with his evangelical views he was an Episcopalian. He said it excited no surprise in England. One wonders in view of this whether we are remaining true to the Preface of the Prayer Book, which declares itself far from intending "to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline or worship".

But to pass briefly on to our proposition to be established—we must confess that something is wrong with the Church. We are not growing. Compare the growth of this Church in growing suburbs with that of other denominations. It is pitiful—often little two by four congregations with small buildings and remaining so for years while the community builds up and other Churches have several large congregations with splendid equipment. We know of a large city where the Church is retreating before the influx of colored and foreigners, abandoning great masses of humanity, fields white unto harvest. We know of another city of over half a million with the Church not touching a large Polish population, while other Churches have vigorous missionary forces at work.

We have not time to enlarge on the description of the malady. What is the diagnosis? The fault is in the pulpit. Our clergy can preach to saints, but not to sinners. They are sellers of rhetoric in many cases. "Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly null." We sat under a rector for some time once while he preached to a large congregation, with no shred of the gospel, only ethics. The hungry sheep looked up and were not fed. A regular attendant from youth, we never remember hearing a sermon on grace or justification by faith. But put the blame where it belongs—the Seminaries. Some one has said it took the Egyptians three thousand years to make a mummy, but the Theological Seminaries have them beat, they can make one in three years. Men have been known to come out of a Seminary poorer preachers than when they entered. To our mind no man ought to teach young men to preach until they have led a soul to Christ. We do not mean had them confirmed, but seen them manifestly converted. Yet the Dean of a certain Seminary protested against leading men to a definite decision to accept Christ as their Saviour. Some years ago a young man just before graduation wrote a friend that he was about to finish at a Seminary and go out to preach, but he said, "I declare I do not know what I believe". We have heard clergy who knew the gospel say that they had to unlearn much of what they received at the Seminary. We have known of a theological student who was reproved for his smoking by one of God's aged servants. We recall now his mirth when the man quoted to him the text, "Flee youthful lusts". The atmosphere of the Seminary was rather conducive to making light of any strict restraining of the flesh in this direction. Yet this same student was afterwards deposed from the ministry for immorality. As far as any teaching on holiness is concerned it was as scarce as the proverbial hen's teeth.

In days when more evangelical truth was taught the students went out to found many mission stations of the Church. It was gloried in as a mark of an evangelical Seminary. But with the Modernist teaching supplanting the old gospel we must sadly write Ichabod, for its glory has departed. Modernist teaching is strongly akin to the Unitarian. The latter's doctrine paralyzes all missionary endeavor. They have to recall their missionaries from the field. They have no message. They can win no souls. The Unitarians exist by gathering half-baked Church members.

Unless men are grounded in the substitutionary blood atonement of Christ, that He died for our sins, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God, there may be simulated unction in the pulpit, but no real fire and no true unction. And without unction preaching is powerless. Dr. Campbell Morgan says the three essentials of a preacher are truth, clarity, and passion. Without truth there can be no passion. If we examine the preachers who have most powerfully moved the world, it will be found that the heart of their message was the cleansing blood of Christ.

Is it not significant that in the recent poll of the twenty-five great preachers of the country the Episcopal Church had not a single representative and was conspicuous by its absence?

A senior from one of our Seminaries supplying a city church was recently heard by a woman who knew the truth because she sat under a minister who knew it, but had to get it after he left the Seminary. This woman came away disgusted and indignant that such drivel should be imposed on a Christian congregation. His sermon was as remote from the gospel as a discussion of whether Mars is inhabited would be.

How about it? Here is a man going out from a Seminary to a mining camp in the West. He wants to do good, but has no message. The same man is taught the gospel by a consecrated lawyer who knew his Bible. Immediately he realizes the power of the gospel—souls are converted and his whole ministry is changed into a fruitful one. He looks back to the needy fields of earlier years and has a pang of sorrow as he thinks of neglected opportunities. But why neglected? He did not know the plan of salvation, justification by faith was not an experience with him, he was not equipped for work. But why? He was NOT TAUGHT THE GOSPEL. Before God it is crime.

And today the same Seminary is refusing the offers of a layman to send the strongest evangelical teachers in the country there to teach the young men and help fit them for a ministry that will win souls and build up the Church.

Having had some experience in Bible Institutes, we can say that there is a refreshing contrast here to what is offered in our Seminaries. The emphasis on the great facts of the Bible and the thorough grounding in the Word of God which is believed and loved sends out young men who know how to teach the Bible and who get spiritual results.

It is a subject for earnest prayer. Now comes news that Princeton Seminary, a citadel of evangelical truth, is about to give way and next May may witness such a serious blow to evangelical Christianity as to cause an epoch. The Gospel will ultimately triumph, but the Church that throttles it, is on the downward grade. To our minds, the future of our particular Church is not bright unless there is a radical change in some of the erroneous and shallow teachings at our Seminaries, or until we get a new Seminary where men are trained in evangelical principles and sent out as flaming evangels to preach the gospel, and the pure and unadulterated Word of our God that will stand through all eternity.

We wish to extend our warmest congratulations to our esteemed contemporary, The Religious Herald, on its completion of one hundred years of service. With an editorial policy loyal to the Truth of God's Word, and loving in spirit, the paper has been a mighty factor in the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God in Virginia. Its influence has been felt beyond its own denomination. The Baptist Church in Virginia owes a debt to the present able editor of The Religious Herald. For forty years he has been greatly used of God in teaching through this medium and has maintained a high standard of religious journalism, for which the Christian world is grateful. May he be spared many years and may God continue to bless the Religious Herald.

WHY ARE PEOPLE NOT READING THE BIBLE?

Arnold N. Hoath

WE are accustomed to boast of the enormous circulation which the Bible enjoys, although the purchase of a Bible is no guarantee that it will be read. Undoubtedly many people like to keep a Bible or two in the house, as they like to keep certain remedies in the medicine chest, not expecting to use them, but wishing to be prepared for any emergency. Certainly the wholesome habit of parents and children meeting together at the family altar for Bible reading and prayer is declining almost to the point of extinction. Nor is this lack of home religious training compensated for by adequate Bible teaching in our public schools. In the various educational systems throughout America when the Bible is not ignored, it is looked upon by most pupils merely as a sort of factory whistle announcing that the day's work has begun. With little guidance in Bible reading, either in the home or in the public school, is it any wonder that the habit of private study of the Bible is decreasing, and that what was said of Timothy can be said of few today, "From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures".

Perhaps at no time since the Bible was brought within the reach of every one through the invention of printing, has it been so sadly neglected. The hazy and confused ideas which people have of its contents are often ridiculous. The general ignorance of its narratives is pathetic. We may blame the perverseness of human nature for this lamentable condition of affairs, but mere fault-finding will not get us very far. We will do well to examine some, at least, of the reasons which are advanced, rightly or wrongly, for this widespread neglect of a book destined to make us "wise unto salvation". It may be that our examination will reveal a remedy.

Because of its remoteness from our own age some people as they try to read the Bible, especially the Old Testament, are depressed with a feeling of unreality. There is so little in the manners and customs and ways of thinking in those far-off days of primitive living that can be hitched on to the experiences which we encounter. Our age has been called the "push-button" age; it is the age of factories and offices and large cities; of rapid transportation, of electric light and the telephone. There is so little in common between the leisure of the Bible times and the hurry of our own times that as we read we seem to be concerned with an unreal and wooden world, lacking the life and vitality characteristic of our own century.

This same sensation of unreality and unnaturalness seizes the student who takes up the study of any ancient people for the first time. It is only as he reads and reads and re-reads, that ancient Italy and ancient Greece are seen as "real" countries with "real" people having "real" experiences. The only way one can enter into the heart of an ancient people, or a book dealing with an ancient people, is to absorb its spirit and to live in its "atmosphere" by constant study and thought. Gradually, as he continues to study, the ancient times become as vivid and vital as his own and as this paralyzing sense of unreality departs, he wonders that he could not see from the first how thrilling, interesting and even momentous these old time events were.

The cure then for this feeling of unreality which discourages many from reading the Bible is to acquaint oneself thoroughly with the historical background of the events both in the Old and New Testaments. The feeling of unreality is not a reason for us to give up reading the Bible, it is a call to us to enter upon such an extensive study of the social and political customs as well as the religious beliefs of the Biblical age as will make those times as healthily vigorous and fascinating to us as is our own era.

Moreover, this feeling that the Bible "transports us into a shadow world" which has nothing in common with the problems of the twentieth century will not only completely vanish as our increasing knowledge of Hebrew history and literature puts red blood into the Old Testament characters, but our eyes will be open to the absorbing manner in which the Bible places its emphasis upon the realities of life. Gradually our sympathetic understanding of the historical background of the Biblical events will enable us to perceive how free the Bible is from sentimentalism and sham and how directly it looks out upon life. Even as the study of antiquity prepared the way for the benefits of the Reformation, because it helped to create a mental atmosphere conducive to a spiritual appreciation and understanding of the New Testament, so by the same method the moral reality, so strikingly keen in the Bible pages, will bring home to us what a great writer has called its "quickening preoccupation with what are the absorbing issues of God, the soul and the world", issues which are always great and always common to every age. Instead of experiencing any unreality in our Bible reading we shall then say with Coleridge, "The words of the Bible find me at greater depths of my being".

Another reason that is sometimes given for the neglect into which the Bible has fallen is that it is "hard to understand". This the writer of 2 Peter admitted regarding the Epistles of Paul, and all of us will admit, regarding the prophetical books. Here also the remedy is a knowledge of the environment and the circumstances which produce the prophecies or epistle. As Professor J. E. McFayden, D. D., has pointed out "Everywhere the prophetic message is interwoven with history", and the same thing is true also of the letters written by St. Paul. The fact is that we only find the Bible difficult when we are not prepared to take as much trouble and time to understand it as the musician does to understand Beethoven's melodies, or the artist the paintings of Michael Angelo, or the poet the writings of Browning. A volume that is intended to make use wise unto salvation is surely worthy of as close study as the child gives to the mastery of reading or the multiplication table.

Moreover, not all the Bible is hard to understand. Great sections of it are easy to read and to comprehend; book after book is delightfully simple. Instead of being frightened away from the Bible by the more obscure passages or books, if we were to concentrate, at any rate at first, on the vast areas which are easily intelligible, we should be adapting the old couplet:

"Let those now read who never read before;
And those who always read, now read the more."

A VISION OF GOD

God Condescended.

By the Bishop of Winchester, the Rt. Rev. Theodore Woods, D. D.

AND there, at the very centre of history, is the vision of which this is supremely true. God condescended. God accommodated Himself. God stepped down till He reached our level. And we behold Jesus. There at the meeting point of ancient and modern, of the old world and the new, "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory. . . ." Just because through the modern study of the Gospels we have grasped, as possibly no generation since the first has been able to grasp, the reality of our Lord's humanity, we have been able to grasp with a deeper insight the reality of His deity. For though He is so human, the more you measure Him by human standards the more unaccountable He is. Natural through and through—let Nicodemus and the Woman of Samaria, and Martha and Mary testify to that, to say nothing of Peter and John and the others. Yet supernatural, as they all discovered. Perfectly at home in both worlds. But proving at every turn that this world, with its human interests and situations, its common ways and its ordinary furniture, can be, and is intended to be, the framework for the exhibition of that one. One of our profoundest thinkers and mystics has called attention to the fact that in our generation the two main lines of spiritual advance seem to be the rediscovery of the historical Jesus and the worship of the ever-present Christ in the Holy Communion. There is great significance in this. We want to get down—if I may use the vulgar phrase—to the brass tacks of history, and see face to face the human-ness of God in common life. On the other hand, we want to grasp afresh the reality of the supernatural, and discover anew that whatever may be said of the circle of the natural and the human our one hope and joy lie in the fact that God breaks into it; uses it to His purposes; makes it the channel of His self-giving to man. For obviously this relationship of the material and the spiritual reaches its climax—apart from the Incarnation itself—in those great moments when the Lord makes Himself known in the Breaking of the Bread. In all the ways of which I have spoken He makes Himself known; in the stars and in the flowers; in the heroism of the man; in the selflessness of the mother; in the purity of the little child. But here is the focus and climax of it all. Simple as bread and wine can be; yet mysterious, for here the Eternal breaks into the material; God stoops down to man. And this has been the experience of the Church throughout the ages. The witness of millions is behind the familiar words:

"Thou spread'st a table in my sight,
Thy unction grace bestoweth;
And oh! what transport of delight
From Thy pure chalice floweth."

The Conclusion of the Matter.

And this brings us to the conclusion of the whole matter. The vision is there. In the universe; in nature; in those lives and characters in which we catch a glimpse of the supernatural; supremely in Jesus our Lord; and in that high moment when He makes Himself known to us in the Breaking of the Bread. And the vision is within the reach of each and all of us if with a humble, lowly, and obedient heart we draw near. Watch for it—in your prayers tonight; as you lift your heart to God before you go back to work tomorrow. Get that New Testament open again and study it. Gaze on Jesus as He moves among men from the manger to the Cross and on to the open grave. And seeing the vision see all else in the light of it.

The men and women in their multitudes for whom He died. The homes which He could make happy and holy. The service in church or nation, in home or parish, which, for love of Him, you might render. The people you might help. For to see God is to love men. Pray that to our nation, more still to our Church that vision may be restored. And as you pray, prepare. Study to be quiet. Think more deeply. Read more sensibly. Be on the lookout for God in your own life. To do this is not to be a visionary. Precisely the opposite. We move every hour in the midst of what is utterly practical, completely common, thoroughly pedestrian. Yet it is there that the curtain is drawn back and God comes into the open. As you sit at your desk, as you walk down the street, as you mend the children's clothes, as you work in the office, as when you kneel in the church or at your bedside, you can touch God. And that brings healing and energy and power. For God is unveiling Himself to all who will look. He is speaking to all who will attend. He is loving all who would be loved.

"My God, how wonderful Thou art,
Thy majesty how bright,
How beautiful Thy mercy-seat,
In depths of burning light!

"How wonderful, how beautiful,
The sight of Thee must be,
Thine endless wisdom, boundless power,
And awful purity!

"Yet I may love Thee too, O Lord,
Almighty as Thou art,
For Thou hast stooped to ask of me
The love of my poor heart."

Then give it. And give it now.—Church of England Newspaper, November 4, 1927.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

STUDIES IN EPHESIANS.
By the Rev. Duncan Thomas.

EPHESIANS is distinctly divided into two parts. The Epistle might be said to be an extended treatise on Christ as the Head of the Church and the Church as His Body. The first three chapters emphasize the divine part in this relationship of Head and Body, and the other three chapters the Body's duty to be in all things worthy of and to harmonize with the Head in every detail of life.

A. Chapters 1-3. GOD'S PURPOSE IN CHRIST—showing that God sums up every blessing for us in Christ. All comes to us by and in and through Him. I. Chapter I. THE INCEPTION OF THE PURPOSE. God's Purpose Thought out in Eternity, that all blessings for the Church should be received through Christ. It was a "Mystery", in the Scriptural sense of being hid in the mind of God until He Himself revealed it.

I. Chapter 1:3-14. The Purpose Conceived in the Mind of God in the counsels of Eternity to bless His Church in Christ. In general terms this is summed up in verse 3, which is the keynote to the first half of the Epistle.

St. Paul is hardly able to contain his enthusiasm as he contemplates what God has done for His Church in Christ. "Blessed," "Blessed," "Blessing." But not "blessed be God the Creator of all mankind" for all these blessings. Strange to St. Paul would much of the present-day talk of the "Universal Fatherhood of God and Brotherhood of Man have sounded; that is true only on the lowest basis, of creation; while Scripture is written from the viewpoint of redemption. So these blessings come to us from "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ". And only when we approach Him by the One through Whom alone we have access can we really say, "Father", and be acknowledged as heirs of God, because joint-heirs with Christ. But so coming all His riches are ours!

(1) He has "blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the spiritual realms". We might paraphrase that, "He has blessed us with every spiritual blessing that heaven contains". When all earth's imperfections shall have been fully put away, when Christ comes again, then we shall have every material and intellectual blessing as well. But here is an even more astounding fact, that many of us have not grasped. God has given us, not the blessings that satisfy least, reserving the best for the world to come; but every spiritual blessing He has bestowed. Heaven has no spiritual blessing, except in fulness, that has not been given us.

What spiritual blessings or graces have you been hungering for? Quiet patience instead of hot blasts of impatience? Peace unbroken instead of nerve racking worry? Joy unceasing and increasing instead of fits of "blues"? Love that never faileth instead of lapses into occasional uncharitableness? Purity and power instead of weakness constantly stumbling into the mire?

All has been given!

(2) For note that the Apostle uses the past tense here, "who HATH BLESSED us with every spiritual blessing". We are prone to put off expectation of acquirement of some graces and victory over certain sins, and to hope for that in the future—in heaven maybe. But these things are ours now; they have already been given. He says not "will bless", but "hath blessed". He offers us not a promise of the future to be asked for, but a fact of the past, fully accomplished, to be accepted and acted upon in the present. God's grace is magnified not so much by the grace seen in us after we get to heaven where there are no temptations, but by what He does in and for us here and now.

More, it is HE who hath blessed us—an act or bestowment of God, and not an achievement on our part. We do not strive for a beautiful character and then, like little Jack Horner, say, "See what a big boy am I"! We accept His grace, so that others seeing our good works will attribute them to the correct Source and "glorify your Father who is in Heaven". All our life, past, present and future is solely of grace. And that means "unmerited favor" or "God doing it all", and our simply receiving His blessed working by faith. We do not need then to beg for grace, but just recognize that God has already, before we asked, fully provided it; and so we need only use it.

(3) And He has provided "every spiritual blessing"? Yes; but note: all blessings are summed up in One—not thing, but—Person. Paraphrase again: "blessed with every blessing that heaven contains, when He gave us Christ"—all wrapped up in Christ. God turned the treasure-house of heaven upside down and emptied all at our feet. All heaven's treasures are summed up in Christ. And God has given us, not His power or other grace, though that were amazing, but His Son, who is power and every grace. His gift is a Person; and a person is indivisible. So that we are not given peace now, to have joy added separately later. But we have Him, and His life outflows in perfect love, joy, peace, purity, power. It would be wonderful to receive His righteousness; but better still, we have Him, and "He is our righteousnsss". "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and in Him ye are made full," so that we are "filled unto all the fulness of God."

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
More than all in Thee I find."

"It is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me."

A REPLY TO DR. L. W. BATTEN

By Charles Hillman Fountain

IN a recent issue of The Churchman, November 26, 1927, Dr. Loring W. Batten, professor in the General Theological Seminary of the Episcopal Church in New York, had an article in reply to an editorial in The Southern Churchman, October 29, 1927, concerning the Davidic authorship of the One Hundred and Tenth Psalm. The Churchman is a modernist, though nominally Episcopal, paper published in New York, while The Southern Churchman is an orthodox Episcopal weekly published in Richmond, Va.

The Southern paper had declared that our Lord in His controversy with the Pharisees in Matt. 22:41-46, "Solemnly asserted" that David was the author of the One Hundred and Tenth Psalm. Dr. Batten in criticising this statement insinuates that Christ's earnest discussion with the Pharisees about His Messiahship was a joke, and that what He said to them did not amount to much spiritually. He says flippantly:

"I wonder how solemn our Lord was in the colloquy with the Pharisees. There is clearly not much of spiritual value in the passage. Jesus is reported to have asked a catch question and the Pharisees bit. Was it an occasion of grave solemnity?" (Black mine.)

The irreverence of all this is apparent on the surface, for our Lord never asked "catch questions" to make people "bite", nor did He ever discuss His Messiahship in any but a serious and solemn way. And for Professor Batten to say that the Saviour's divine words did not have much spiritual value is blasphemy. Our blessed Lord said of what He taught the people: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (John 6:62). This is true of all the "wonderful words of life" that He spoke, including those in the passage under discussion (Matt. 22:41-46). The professor continues:

"Moreover, the passage is susceptible of more than one interpretation. It seems to prove that Christ was in no sense David's son. Does The Southern Churchman accept that conclusion? But the passage may mean that David did not write the Psalm, for the author does call somebody 'My Lord', and if that means David's son, then David could not have written the poem."

Let us examine the passage under question and see what it teaches about the Messiahship of the Nazarene, and in this way learn the falsity of what Dr. Batten says.

After being maliciously questioned by His enemies, and answering them successfully, our Lord turned the tables on them, and asked them a question they could not answer. They believed that the Messiah was the Son of David, and as such a human being, Christ asked them how, that being the case, it was possible for David to speak of Him as his Lord. He said that the King of Israel in the One Hundredth and Tenth Psalm called the Messiah his Lord. "The Lord (Jehovah) said unto my Lord (the Messiah), Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool" (verse 1).

How could the Messiah be both David's son and David's Lord? Christ asked the learned doctors. How could He be both human and divine? How could He be before David as his Lord, and after David as his son? How could He be both David's divine ancestor and his human descendant? How could He be David's creator and David's offspring?"

Matthew says the Pharisees could not answer the Lord. Of course, they could not answer Him, for they did not believe in the Messiah's deity. The doctrine of the God man, with which the New Testament is all radiant within from beginning to end, is the answer of the Christian to our Saviour's question: "If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?" Dr. Batten, like the Pharisees, is unable to answer the question: he says it "seems to prove that Christ was in no sense David's son".

Thus we see that this passage of Holy Scripture has "much spiritual value" in it, in spite of the professor, because in it Jesus claims both deity and humanity; he asserts His preexistence in Heaven and His incarnation on earth. It is one of the sublime passages of Holy Scripture in which we look from earth to heaven and from heaven to earth, and see the only Begotten Son of God, "Who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven, and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, and was made man".

This portion of Holy Writ shows that the doctrine of Christ's preexistence is taught in the Synoptics as well as in the Fourth Gospel (see the parallel passages: Mark 12:35-37; Luke 20:41-44). It proves that the Lord Himself taught this doctrine, and not only John and Paul. It falls in line with His declaration in the last Gospel, "Before Abraham was, I am" (John 8:58). Here in the Synoptics He says in effect, "Before David was, I am". This Scripture proves beyond all doubt that the Jesus of the Synoptics is the same Being as the Jesus of John's Gospel. Modernism declares that they are not the same Being, and that if the Synoptic picture of Him is true the Johannine is false, and vice versa. In the Revelation the risen Christ speaking from heaven to the beloved John, repeats in different language what He had said to the wicked Pharisees years before: "I am the root and the offspring of David" (Rev. 22:16). As the root from which David sprang, I am his Lord; as the offspring of David who sprang from him, I am his Son.

The Southern Churchman claims that David wrote Psalm

110 because the Lord said that He did. Dr. Batten retorts: "To say that David wrote Psalm 110 because our Lord said so is not Biblical criticism, it is submission to authority." Of course it is. The believer submits to the authority of his Lord. Biblical criticisms must give way to His authority when it contradicts His Word; but true criticism never contradicts it; it rather is in harmony with His Word.

Ewald of Germany was a noted Biblical critic with some of whose views no Christian can agree, but he said of the Book of Psalms:

"The conclusion from all exactest investigations is that certainly a considerable mass of songs, and these the finest and most important, proceed from David, or at least from his time." (Quoted from Old Testament Critics" [p. 308] by Whitelaw, published [1903] by Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, London).

And Whitelaw said: "That the Psalms already cited as having been ascribed to David by Christ, His apostles, and the primitive Church, namely: 2, 16, 32, 69, 110, were really the work of the Shepherd King, though often challenged, has not been successfully disproved" (Pp. 310-311).

In view of these statements of Biblical scholars, Dr. Batten is not at all justified in saying that "the position advocated by The Southern Churchman requires the abdication of the critical sense"; nor has he any good reason for being indignant at that paper for saying that "the late Dr. Driver of Oxford, following his infidel German master, has the courage to deny what our Lord solemnly asserts" about David's authorship of the One Hundred and Tenth Psalm. He cries out with heated feeling: "Such a reflection on one of the greatest and sanest English Biblical scholars invites condemnation from all men." No, it invites condemnation from no man who is familiar with Dr. Driver's disregard not only of Christ's words, but of the facts of criticism as well.

Professor R. D. Wilson, of Princeton Theological Seminary, speaking of this man in his recent book, "A Scientific Investigation of the Old Testament", says:

"Reader, if the most plausible, and probably the most scholarly, of all that school of modern critics that delight to assail the integrity of the Scriptural narratives and to use so frequently the modest appellation, 'all scholars are agreed', will make such palpable blunders in a matter as to which there is abundant evidence to show that the Scriptures are right, what dependence will you place on him when he steps beyond the bounds of knowledge into the dim regions of conjecture and fancy? If when we can get abundant evidence, the documents of the Bible stand the test of genuineness and veracity, and the charges of the critics are proven false, upon what ground of common sense or law of evidence, are we to be induced to believe that these documents are false or forged when charges absolutely unsupported by evidence are made against them?"

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH

By Dyson Hague

The Church's Teachings.

NO Churchman can ever overvalue Article XI, one of the greatest in our Church's teaching, for the rediscovery of the meaning of Justification by Faith was the soul of the Reformation. It was its inspiration; its life; its victory. It came to the individual reformer as a revelation; to the Church as a revolution. But its starting-point was opened eyes and regenerated hearts. It began as good tidings of great joy to each. To Latimer as to Luther the glorious fact that he, a poor sinner, was accepted and justified by simply receiving God's grace as a free gift by faith ( Eph. 2:8), came as an almost incredible surprise. It swept over his soul as the sunrise, bringing peace and joy. And from the men who knew its power it passed over England and over Germany, and flashed on the religious world of Europe as an epoch-marking, epoch-making dynamic. It was not merely the power of God unto their salvation; it was the power of God to the salvation of the Churches.

Now remember, that as a matter of actual Christian life, the experiences of Latimer and Luther were identical with those of St. Paul. Each of them—the one in Judaism, the other in Anglican Romanism, and the third in German Romanism—endeavored with all the powers of a strong religious nature, by the use of the complicated means of the eccleiastical system in which he was nurtured, to make himself worthy of, and fit for, the favor of God. Each of them went through long and strenuous soul experiences in the endeavor to build up by his own deeds and merits a superstructure high enough and strong enough to qualify himself for salvation. The record of Paul's experiences in Philippians 3:4-9 is almost identical, circumstantials excepted, with that of Latimer, whose weary way of vigil, fast and pilgrimage, and the purchase of pardons and indulgences, terminated in that glorious moment when the sin burden fell from him through the absolution by the ministry of God's Holy Word, "though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow".

It came to him as a flashlight. It was a personal faith in God the Saviour, a faith that threw itself upon God. The justification by faith, then, which is the cardinal doctrine of our Church today (Article XI.) did not originate merely as a dogma, or as a Protestant or Anglican doctrine, as opposed to the Roman Catholic or mediaeval dogma of Justification by Works. It was primarily a personal spiritual experience defying the exactitude of definition.

The starting-point of the great doctrine of Justification by Faith, which was the life and glory and vitalizing power of the revival and re-formed Anglican Church, was the personal experience of the men who afterwards formulated it as a doctrine. This was certainly true of Wycliffe. It was certainly true of Latimer and Ridley, and undoubtedly also of Cranmer. (See his great confession, the secret and key of the Anglican Reformation. Works, Park. Soc., i. 374.) They knew that they were accepted and forgiven. They knew that, being justified by faith, they had peace with God. And this transformed their whole conception of religion. The formulated doctrine followed.

It was because of this calm and happy consciousness of acceptance with God that these men printed in the forefront of the Church Service of the Church of England the indispensable prerequisites of all acceptable worship, the means of obtained forgiveness through God's offered absolution and that happy sense of sonship and acceptance which enables them to say "Our Father". It was because of this they drew up in the strictly technical language of formulated theology, as the teaching of the Church of England, the doctrine of justification by faith only as the articulous stantis aut cadentis ecclesiae. It was their summary, and the Church's Summary of Rom. 3:19-26; Rom. 5:1-5; Phil. 3:7-9.

STRAIGHT LINES

John Littell

"Judgment will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet."—Isaiah 28:17.

LET me show three pictures.

Amos saw the Lord standing on a wall made by a plumbline, with a plumbline in His hand. The plumbline, a cord with a leaden weight, is used to raise perpendiculars, to build a wall straight and upright. Suspending it against a wall, one can tell if the wall is straight up.

"Amos," said the Lord, "what seest thou?" And Amos said, "A plumbline". Then said the Lord to him, "I will set a plumb line in the midst of my people Israel; I will not again pass by them any more" (Amos 7:7).

It is the business of builders to build right. You may imagine how some owner of a property on which a structure is rising might choose to pass by time and time again without paying much attention to the job, so long as he suspects no crooked work. But one day he may turn in and look it over. He takes up a plumbline to satisfy himself with a test. The wall should be straight up. The plumbline will prove that it is not. It will have to come down. And hereafter he will not pass by as if he did not know or care what grade of work the men were doing. Hereafter he would watch it. If any part did not go up straight, he would require that it be taken down and done over.

Israel was called to build life on civic, social and religious lines. Theirs was a structure of import. For it was the precursor of a later building, the spiritual temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (Eph. 2: 20-22). Israel was to build those great natural virtues justice, prudence, temperance and fortitude on which, after a new experience in the greater light of a new knowledge, Christ was to train His people in building His virtues of Faith, Hope and Love.

But now Israel was not building her part right. Owner, architect and paymaster in one, He found they were not building straight. Their responsibility led to judgment. He stood to destroy.

Isaiah knew of responsibilities betrayed. He broke in on a feast the leading men were having, and he cried out that things must go straight. They said he spoke to them as if they were children. They mocked him with rhyming Hebrew syllables:

"saw-la-saw saw-la-saw qaw-la-qaw-la-qaw zer shahm zer shahm,"
"line on line, line on line, here a little, there a little";
in English rhythm,

Holy saws! Line it out. Baby Laws. Simple Lout!
Here a bit. Who'll be hit?
There another. Who need bother?

His eloquence was nothing but "Go straight", over and over again.

Isaiah retorted that God's Law was just that: few words and easy. The same thing keeps coming back: people must go straight or take the consequences.

The scene reminds us of something in our own day. There is too much talk of "the failure of Democracy". But we make the talk because we work Democracy so badly. Not always, to be sure, but we do work it badly in spots. We must not resent the criticism till it spurs us to straighten something out. We ought to be and we can be proud of the working of our Democracy if we make things go straight.

A third picture:

St. John the Baptist also told people to go straight. His picture was a road—a fine memorial road in honor of the visit of a great King. Valleys would be filled, hills cut down, the road would be straight. He told soldiers how they could go straight, told tax-collectors how they could, and other people. He wanted to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. Responsibility is a sure thing. So is judgment. He spoke of the axe of destiny laid at the roots of the trees; of chaff, worthless, fit to burn. He said some people were like vipers—straight as a snake. He wanted all to face responsibility and to go straight.

These Three Pictures All Tell of Responsibility. They Cry Out to Us: "Go Straight."

Now, my friends, of course you know how responsibilities come. They come to us out of Life. If we have good things we will have responsibilities. Life, education, home inheritance, earnings, brains, experience, bring along with them our responsibilities. If I joyously accept the wealth of the gifts of life I should be just as joyful about accepting the responsibilities which grow out of them.

Life creates the duties; it is from life we derive our responsibilities. Right here comes in the true function of the Church. We do not get responsibilities from religion but religion helps us to meet and fulfil them. It shows us how to go straight, but first it shows us how to see straight. If I refuse to take vows of service or take them and later repudiate them, I am still not absolved from them because the duties never derive from vows but from the wealth of my life. Even if I escape the vows, I cannot escape my responsibilities. I must bear the consequences. The penalties of my failure are imposed not by religion but by life itself. It is because of the richess and the strength of my life that I fall into judgment for my failures.

God's law is no hard arbitrary decree over us. Judgment has nothing to do with vindictive passion. Law is the way life is lived. Judgment is the result of life. God's law is the expression of life's purpose, the working condition of our progress and happiness. Judgment is the measure of our ill-success. It cannot be otherwise than this: we fail at our peril. "Be sure your sins will find you out." "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is Eternal Life."

CURING THE DIVORCE EVIL.

Divorces are on the increase in our country—that is well known. It is also known that divorces are increasing at an alarming rate. So desperate have conditions grown that some are suggesting desperate remedies. They want national legislation that will forbid all divorce. Now, we do not intend to deny that the laws concerning marriage and divorce in some of our States may need revision, but let us not deceive ourselves and expect too much of legislation. When discussing this question, let us keep in mind that the Roman Catholic Church delights in pointing out the magnitude of this growing evil. Stung by the accusation of the horrible conditions of ignorance, filth, illegitimacy prevalent in Catholic countries, the Catholics wish to counter with the accusation of the growing divorce evil in our country. At the same time they cannot deny that though they forbid divorce altogether, yet something worse than divorce is found among Catholics. The Roman Church annuls marriages, even though they were performed by no one less than an archbishop.

On the other hand, we should not forget that the mere forcing of people to live together in wedlock is not a satisfactory solution of the problem. Let us keep in mind that even in the Old Testament, when God Himself instituted government and inspired its laws, divorce could not be entirely avoided because of the hardness of their hearts. Hardness of heart, that is the cause of the increasing divorce rate. If conditions are to improve, the Word of God must soften hard hearts. That hammer of God "that breaketh the rock in pieces" must be used upon the hard hearts of men. This Word has transformed many a lion into a lamb and is as powerful today as it ever was. In fact, through the use of the Word in our Christian congregations untold divorces have been prevented. And while it is true that even in our churches not all offenses are avoided—for Satan also brings disunion into Christian families—yet it certainly ought to cause people to think when they hear that there are actually large congregations of Christians in which for years and years there is neither separation of man and wife nor a divorce. We Christians have the solution of the problem. "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God" (Rom. 10:17). By the hearing of faith the Holy Spirit is given (Gal. 3:2). And "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5:22-23). And where these fruits are found, divorce and lawsuits do not find the soil very favorable. Let us Christians thank God for what He has given us and let us do all we can to bring the life-giving Word to those poor souls who know of nothing else than the Law, and do not know that aright.—S., in The Lutheran Witness.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 18. Topic, Law and Grace.
Read carefully the Book of Galatians.

The laws of God reveal the righteousness of God, and the depravity of all humanity. Law stops all argument and lays bare the results of sin, the need of penalty for sin, and the need of a Saviour. Through the wondrous grace of God in this present "Age of Grace", provision has been made for whosoever will, to pass from the death sentence which the law requires, to the glorious freedom of the children of God, for "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law". The following selections from many Scriptures, will make plain the distinction between "Law and Grace".

Law

1. God's law is holy and perfect.—Psalm 19:7, 8; Rom. 7:12.
2. Reveals the demands of a Just God.—Ex. 20:1-17.
3. Reveals sin.—Rom. 3:20.
4. Reveals man's disobedience.—Jer. 3:25.
5. Demands perfect obedience or death.—Ezek. 18:4; Jas. 2:10.
6. Makes all guilty; every mouth stopped.—Rom. 3:19.
7. By the law, no flesh justified.—Rom. 3:20.
8. All under the curse.—Gal. 3:10.
9. The law demands holiness.—Lev. 20:26.
10. Excludes from God's presence.—Ex. 19:12; Jer. 23:39.

11. The sting of death is SIN; the strength of SIN is the law.—1 Cor. 15:56.
12. Final penalty, "the lake of fire".—Rev. 21:8; Rev. 20:15.

Grace.

1. But thanks be to God which giveth us victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Cor. 15:57.
2. Grace reveals what God did for us.—1 Cor. 15:3, 4.
3. Grace sent his son.—John 3:16.
4. That he by the grace of God, should taste death for every man.—Heb. 2:9.
5. Grace shows mercy.—Eph. 2:4.
6. Grace is unmerited favor.—Eph. 2:5; Rom. 11:6.
7. Grace called us.—Gal. 1:15.
8. Grace pardons all transgressions.—1 John 1:7, 9.
9. Grace sets believers free from the Law.—Gal. 5:1; Rom. 8:1.
10. Grace justifies every believer.—Rom. 3:24.
11. Grace makes every believer perfect.—Heb. 10:14.
12. Grace fills us with the love of Christ.—2 Cor. 5:14, 15.
13. Grace opens the way to the presence of God.—Heb. 4:15, 16.
14. Grace makes us heirs, and grants eternal life.—Titus 3:7.
15. Saved through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Acts 15: 11.
16. Redemption and forgiveness through his blood, according to the riches of his GRACE.—Eph. 1:7.
17. To "me", the least of all saints, is this grace given.—Eph. 3:8.

And why was this wondrous grace shown? "That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."—Eph. 2:7.

"Grace! Flowing from Calvary;
Grace! Fathomless as the sea;
Grace! Throughout all eternity;
Grace! Enough for you and mee."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

I. H. Haldeman

DOES it make any difference who was the father of Jesus?

There are those who say it does not.

There are even preachers in the pulpit who say it does not.

I affirm it does.

I affirm it makes a difference as wide as eternity.

If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a human father, as Joseph protested he was not that father, then Jesus was born of a mother stained with the sin of unchastity.

If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father, and that father was not Joseph, as Mary was betrothed to him, and in the eye of the law as solemnly bound as a married woman, in giving birth to Jesus she became as guilty as a wife who breaks her marriage vow.

If Jesus were begotten by a natural father; as that father was not Joseph; as that natural father has never been known, then Jesus was begotten by an unknown father of an unmarriad woman; as the child of an unmarried woman and an unknown father is both illegitimate and bastard, He whom we call the Son of God entered the world with the bar sinister of His mother's unchastity and faithlessness stamped with the seal of an unknown father's cowardice, and stands before men as an illegitimate and bastard son, having no legal or decent right to live.

If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father; as personality comes not from the mother, but from the father (Heb. 7:9, 10), He was the seed of the man and not the seed of the woman. If He were not the seed of the woman, the promise made at Eden's gate that such a seed should bruise the serpent's head has never been fulfilled; and whatever else Jesus of Nazareth may be, He is not that seed.

If the Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father; if, as is true, personality comes from the father, the personality of Jesus was natural. If He were a natural person, He was not God. If He were not God (and since forgiveness of sins belongs only to God) He had no right to forgive sins. He had no right to make Himself the object of faith and the issue of salvation. As He claimed the right to forgive sin and to consign to eternal wrath all who did not believe in Him, He was either a wanton deceiver or a blindly deceived man. In either case, as a mental weakling or moral degenerate, He would stand outside the category of a Redeemer and Saviour of men.

If our Lord Jesus Christ were not begotten by God the Father of the very seed of the woman; if the act of God were not an absolute generative act; if the generative act were that of a natural man and the conception wholly natural, our Lord Jesus Christ is reduced to the level of a merely natural man. If He were a natural man; if He were not true and real God; if He were not God of God, very God of Very God, God the Son as well as Son of God, He was not the second person of the Trinity. If He were not the second person of the Trinity the question may be asked: Who is the second person of the Trinity?

To this, under the circumstances, there can be only one answer: No one is. There is no second person of the Trinity.

If there is no second person of the Trinity, there is no Trinity.

Thus, if Jesus of Nazareth had only a natural father, the doctrine of the triune God, the doctrine that God subsists as three distinct persons in one individual substance or being, falls to the ground, and the Church is landed into the front yard of open Unitarianism.

If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father; if as the son of such a father His personality was only natural; as a natural person is not infinite; as only an infinite person can atone to an infinite person; as only God can satisfy the law, the government and being of God; and since our Lord (as begotten of a natural father) could not be God, and was no more at any time than a finite person, He could not offer atonement to God. If, therefore, the father of Jesus were a natural man, the death of our Lord on the cross was not an atoning sacrifice.

This is true upon the side of His personality. It is true upon the side of His humanity. It is true in this wise:

To be an acceptable victim for sacrifice, to fill the function of a substitute, our Lord Jesus Christ must be free from the penalty of sin. To be free from the penalty of sin He must be sinless, not only in deed, but in essence and nature. A sinless humanity can be produced only from a sinless father; but if our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural man, He was begotten by a sinful father. If He were begotten by a sinful father, He inherited His sinful nature. He would have sin in Him. He would be under the penalty of sin. Under the penalty of sin, He could neither be a substitute for sinners, nor yet a sacrifice for sin.

If it could be proven that Jesus had a natural father (and as son of such a father could die neither as a substitute nor sacrifice), it would be plainly proven that the cross was a bloody, brutal, barbarous, useless and excuseless murder, without the basis of a single principle, without profit to man, and without glory to God.

If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a human father; if as a natural son, with a natural personality and nature of sin, He could not offer an atoning sacrifice, nor act as a substitute, it would be evident, since God alone can raise the dead, in failing to be true and actual God, He could not fulfill His own promise that after laying down His life He would take it again; it would be evident He could not of Himself raise Himself from the dead. And, further, as God the Father is said to have raised Him, and the Holy Spirit is said to have raised Him, and it is said He should raise Himself; and the Father and the Spirit are represented as cooperating with the personal power of the Son to raise Himself, since He was a natural man and not God, He could not cooperate with the Father and the Spirit in a supernatural act; and as His failure so to cooperate would break down the Scripture doctrine of the invariable coordination of the Trinity-resurrection could not take place, He never was raised from the dead.

If our Lord Jesus Christ had only a natural father, the Trinity, as already shown, does not exist. All, therefore, that is predicated of the Trinity as such utterly fails, and there is no honest evidential warrant for believing in the ordained, consummative work of the Trinity; that is to say, the resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth as the thus declared Son of God.

If Jesus had only a natural father, the logical consequence of His natural sonship vitiates any pretended evidence that He is alive today. Immortality has not been brought to light, and we stand on the edge of the grave with only night and silence.

It makes a great difference who was the father of Jesus!

If God the Father did not stoop down from heaven, and in prime accord with the Son as His verbal and eternal expression, and through the coordinate and covenant operation of the Holy Spirit take hold on a cell or seed of the Virgin Mary, creating a new and distinct human nature, which the Son of God took into union with Himself, becoming a unique being with two natures, human and divine in one body and with one personality forever, then the whole foundation and fabric of Christianity as set forth in the New Testament is completely overthrown.

The men who deny the Virgin Birth; who do so that they may the more easily be delivered from carrying the baggage of the miraculous; who shift the fatherhood of Jesus from the Eternal God to the act of some unknown sinful man, are paying a dear price for their jaunty endeavor to accommodate the supernaturalism of Christianity to the poverty-smitten weakness of their own faith, and the noisy clamor of an unbelieving, spiritually ignorant and scoffing world.—The Bible Champion, Reading, Penn.

It should be remembered that the denial of the Virgin Birth is not new or modern. It was rejected by the Gnostics in the early days of Christianity. The ancient infidels, Celsus, Porphyry, and Lucian, scorned it. It was attacked by Voltaire, Rousseau, D'Alembert, Bolingbroke, Bradlaugh and Paine, because of its supernatural character, just as the modernists do today.—Sunday School Times.

REPLY TO MR. SMILEY.

Mr. Editor:

The Rev. Mr. Smiley generally gives the true interpretation of the Bible. But when he says, that the Bible teaches conditional immortality, I do not think he ought to be followed.

The Bible does teach conditional blessedness and conditional punishment. The Son of God was sent by the Father as a universal Redeemer; but He will not force any one to accept this great work of redemption. He will bless no one arbitrarily. If people are to be blessed they must cooperate with the Spirit of God. Then blessedness is conditional. If they do not cooperate with the Spirit they will be punished. Then punishment is not arbitrary. It is according to a law in the spiritual world.

But as to conditional immortality, I do not believe that this is a doctrine of the Bible. I drew the conclusion from certain words that once escaped the lips of the Rev. Dr. Sparrow, some time Dean of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia, that he did not believe that any would be annihilated. I heard him say that he would rather suffer in eternity than lose his existence. I think the Doctor was right. I cannot conceive of any greater punishment than the loss of one's existence. If I had to choose between annihilation and universal salvation, I would teach universal salvation. Not that the wicked in the next world would be given eternal life arbitrarily. They would be treated as free agents; and who can say that, as they beheld the great love of God in its manifestation, they would not turn to Him and serve Him and worship Him some time as the eternal ages roll on? I believe that such a belief is agreeable to the teaching of the Word of God, if the Word of God be interpreted as a whole.

BACK TO THE PRAYER BOOK.

Mr. Editor:

The marvel in the ecclesiastical world, or to bring it closer home in the Protestant Episcopal Church, today is the growth in power and influence of the Living Church paper, under the able management of its astute Editor, whereby the Anglo-Catholics are exerting their baneful and disrupting influence in "this Church" with the avowed purpose of changing its protestant name and nature.

Time was in the memory of many now living when the name of the paper was anathema, and not allowed in the home of an orthodox evangelical; the paper itself, if all reports were true, then, like the other Church papers, was struggling for a bare existence. Today the paper is financially well-to-doa, able to send its editor over to Europe on the slightest notice, even as far as Lausanne, of which more hereafter; has invaded, they say, the very strongholds of the evangelicals and is looked upon in some quarters as the leading Church paper.

The wonder and marvel is how all this has come about. Let's see. There is no question about the fact that its untiring and zealous Editor with his motto, "This one thing I do", with his ability to keep his noisy minority well in hand and doing his bidding, has been the moving power behind the Anglo-Catholic movement. In season and out of season were taught and practiced where possible its tenets and teaching. With unflagging zeal he stuck to his text and task and seized every opportunity to advance his paper and the cause. On the other hand the majority, who differed and disagreed, were careless and indifferent to what was going on around them, lacked a leader and had no settled policy as is the case todap. And so the man with one idea driving always and at all times to one fixed goal, easily distances men with no ideas, no fixed goal. With these facts before us it is not difficult to determine who would do the printing for the Church when the time came, as it did some twenty years ago, for the establishment of a printing press where the printing for the General Church might be done. It was none other than the Living Church! That there was some question about the propriety of this action, was evident from the fact that this writer heard then amiable General Secretary of the Board of Religious Education ask the question, "What's the harm of having the Living Church do the printing for the Board of Religious Education"? No answer was then avouched but in the light of present and past experience an answer so convincing might have been given that the project would have been stayed in the borning. But it wasn't, and hundreds, some say thousands, of dollars were poured into the offices of the Living Church. Soon a $25,000 printing plant was put up therein; the Living Church was firmly established financially, kindred adjunct papers and periodicals were published, and today General Church literature, as the Christian Nurture Series, and many books, go out to schools and churches and general readers with the Morehouse Publishing House stamped thereon and the genial Editor gives luncheons to Seminaries and has Bishops to breakfast with him!

Came a day when the Nation Wide Campaign was being launched, and being nation wide it must be Church wide, and these brethren having the matter in charge find themselves in the offices of the Living Church with this printing press ready for work and soliciting work. To the genial editor said they, "Would you", the question wasn't finished. He saw at once the situation which was avidly seized upon and in the forefront went this paper with all the necessary printing and the dollars it brought in. Gaining the gratitude and friendship most surely of these brethren the astute editor easily went to the front and fore of this great national effort, thereby securing a prominent place in Church affairs hitherto not vouchsafed him.

Again, when the Bishops' Crusade is on there is much printing to be done and it will be remembered that the printing for this nation wide effort went out with the imprimatur of the Morehouse Publishing Company, stamped thereon. Here again many friends were made, and that influence widely extended, for at a conference in preparation for this Crusade, only one Church paper was mentioned by the chief speaker and that the Living Church, and the fact was mentioned with no little gusto that this speaker, a Bishop, had breakfasted the week before with its Editor, quoting his approval of the plan, the only name referred to in that regard.

And yet again. In the flare-up in New York, when the authority and Creed of the Church were seriously attacked (supposedly), with the secular papers making much of it (the Tea Pot Dome scandal was not then at hand, otherwise we might have had less from them), the Living Church, while other papers might have been called luke-warm, saw its chance and went boldly to the aid of the Bishops and the Church as the paramount authority, and comes out of the wrangle with more Bishops and other clergy as its friends.

All this time the disrupting Party—the Anglo-Catholics, with their able leader, the Editor of the paper, were encroaching on the rites and rights of "this Church's enlarging their influence till at the General Convention they were able to enlarge the scope of the resolution on Changes in the Prayer Book so that doctrinal changes have been made, when it has been asserted time and time again without successful denial that the order for these changes were for enrichment and not for the purpose of making doctrinal changes in the Prayer Book.

With these facts before us, thus hastily thrown together, are we to be surprised that the astute and able editor of this paper, carrying this disrupting party in the hollow of his hand and making friends on all sides, of Bishops and other clergy, with the means at his disposal furnished largely by the Church, thus being disrupted, are we to be surprised that he presumes to bid a Diocese, of the old evangelical kind, to prayer for its dead with no voice raised against it?

Or, are we to be amazed to hear that at the Lausanne Conference for Faith and Order, this same Editor had the temerity to throw a wrench of objection into the easy going machinery of unity, coming near to wrecking the whole plan and thereby bringing the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States into disrepute throughout the Protestant world? With such power and prestige and influence as herein set forth, are we to be amazed that the astute Editor of this paper presumes to lead in all these matters? And that now flushed with supposed victory, he essays by the help of his noisy minority to throw Thirty-nine Articles out of the Prayer Book? Thus getting rid of one more safeguard in his onward march to the threshold of the door of the Church of Rome? The Pope will not let him and his cohorts come in as they are, and he will not go as the Pope requires, knowing full well that Papa would soon cure him of his ecclesiastical high jinks.)

Not amazed at these things which have come to pass, but rather that the large majority of Churchmen, disagreeing with this avowed trend and intent towards Rome's threshold, should we sit supinely by and allow them to come to pass? Or shall we be still further amazed that knowing these as now being publicly announced this majority will allow this paper with its propaganda and its astute Editor and their noisy following to wreck this Church on the rocks of dissension of their own creating? I cannot believe it. But that they will rally to call properly made, "Back to the Prayer Book, and save the old Book from its destined mutilation, if the Living Church has its way.

In answer to the question, then, "Upon what meat hath this, our Caesar, fed, that he has grown so great"? the answer is upon the meat of financial prosperity furnished by the very Organization which he is doing his best to wreck: that material prosperity out of which has grown the opportunity to sting the hand that fed him. O tempora, O mores.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.

Mr. Editor:

Will our laity take note of the action of the English Parliament, in its veto of the Revised Book of Common Prayer?

The acceptance of the said book in the view of the House of Commons would have been, practically, a surrender to the "Catholic" element.

The House of Commons represents the laity, and declined to allow the Church of England to act the part of "Mr. facing both ways". Now "there is a generation" in the Protestant Episcopal Church of these United States, who, unheeding Solomon's warning not to "spread the net in the sight of any bird", openly proclaim that it is their purpose to change the Name, the Doctrine, and the Worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Now what will our House of Lay Delegates do, in the premises?

THE NEW CHRISTIAN EPIC: By Albert W. Palmer. The Pilgrim Press, Boston, Chicago.

This is a book of fresh, stimulating sermons preached in America and Scotland. It is a very good exponent of modern religion and makes very pleasant reading. There are a dozen sermons on themes that are occupying the minds of thoughtful people. We do not think the author has done anything unusual in his sermon on Christ. Such strong writing on the Person and teachings of Christ is coming from the press almost daily that a sermon or book on the subject has to rank pretty high to get a reading.

The sermon on "The New Christian Epic" is better. It is well worked out for so brief a space. It is a very clear statement of modern religion and will please many.

"The Stars Above the Freight Trains" is a sermon based on an accident to a boy crushed under the wheels of a heavy freight train. It ends with a series of "Great affirmations of the soul", words of faith and cheer to read when troubled or discouraged.

The sermon on "Humanity's Greatest Prayer" is not comparable to Bishop Gore's, or several other brief expositions of the "Lord's Prayer", which we have read.

"Immortality" and "The Christ of Modern Thought" are the titles of the last two of the series.

Dean Brown, of Yale Divinity School, says: "Dr. Palmer's sermon on "A Search for An Inscription", is one of the best I have read for many a day."

The price of the book is $1.50.

THE BIBLE: ITS CHRIST AND MODERNISM: By T. J. McCrossan, B. A., B. D. Eighteen Years Examiner in Greek and Hebrew for the Presbytery at Minneapolis.

I cannot too highly esteem the privilege of introducing this book and its author.

Dr. McCrossan has long been before the reading Christian public as an exponent of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints". With keen acumen and trained scholarship, he has discerned and exposed error and exalted "the truth as the truth is in Jesus". The present volume is the result of long and patient study in the realm of religious controversy, which, by far, too many have been content to apprehend but superficially.

We seem to be at the parting of the ways. Indeed, there are those who boast that we are. A clarion call is needed to arouse the indifferent to the peril of the hour; and to encourage those who would give "a reason of the hope that is in them". Not all can be specialists in this field. Dr. McCrossan has shown his fitness for the calling and he has in this contribution put into concrete form, simple for all to comprehend, the various testimonies invoked in the discussion; and given us as a guide out of the mystifying intricacies of the modern school. He does not merely express opinions; but takes the facts as presented by those who would overturn the faith of the historic Church, and show their infidelic character. His accurate citations will be a strength to the thoughtful and will assure the average student of divine things that he has not been beating the air.

My own heart throbs with the expectant hope of the great good this book will accomplish. It will disclose the subtlety of the methods now used and by pungent suggestion will turn the arguments, now prevailing, against those who present them. It will stimulate the believing Christian to a deeper study of the Word of God and give a thrill of gladness to those who have long contended for the faith.

The Modern Movement, based upon the New Knowledge, protests that it does not take the Bible from the people, but purifies it of the errors which have encrusted it. This movement in its radical assumption, claims that to be rightly understood, the New Testament must be deleted of the Grecian mysticism of St. Paul, the fallacy of the death of "the Just for the unjust", the reality of the resurrection of our Lord and the consequent attributed facts. Modernism has woven about the head of the "simple Peasant of Judea" an ideality which demands no essentially historic basis. It would make of the Cross a beautiful expression of self-sacrifice and enshrine the Living Christ as a potency for good, regardless of how He came into the world or how He went out of it. In other words, it would decree that we need not know anything about our Lord; there is an evident spirit in the world that makes for righteousness and we may rightly attribute that spirit to Him, regardless of the body of doctrine as expressed in the creeds of Christendom.

Dr. McCrossan insists that unless the facts of the Bible as defined in the New Testament be soulfully embraced, the suggested IDEALITY must fade into an evanescent dream. One striking feature of the problem deserves attention. Ideals are valueless without the unction to reach them. The Modern concept of the New Testament makes self-effort the key to advance. It resolves itself into the long-ago adopted slogan of the Unitarians, "The Fatherhood of God; the brotherhood of man; and salvation by character". Hence, Modernism has no evangelistic note; it has not apostolic missionary appeal; it presents lofty concepts of God, of man, and of spiritual values, but provides no dynamic force by which spiritual aspirations may be attained. And the worm that lies at the root of the situation is that prevalent repudiation of the Person and mission of the Holy Spirit, whose advent on Pentecost marked the birth of the Church and inaugurated His Lordship over the Church. Wherever He is heartily received as the inspirer of the Word of God, as the source of life through whom the Son of God came into the world and effected His august redemption for a lost humanity, as the power of God for service and the bond of fellowship, the taint of Modernism vanishes.

The sad fact confronts us that this alluring Circe "is administering the opiates of spiritual sleep, removing the keen edge of conscience toward God", and it deprives the man who falls into the snare of the "Blessed Hope", which has been the inspiration and joy of the saints of all ages.

Great is the pity, that the teachers of this "new way" may themselves ultimately come to Harnack's confession. "There will be no solution of the present unrest until there is a return to positions which have been forsaken". But what of those who have been led astray and have not caught the vision of the superlative value of the "old paths"?

May the Lord make Dr. McCrossan's appeal the means of holding many who have not forsaken the positions of the venerable past; and by all means rescue some who have.

Bible Distribution.

"A while ago," Dr. Carter continued, "Mr. Coolidge wrote the New York Bible Society these strong words:

" 'There is no other Book with which the Bible can be compared and no other reading that means so much to the human race. It is the support of the strong and the consolation of the weak, the dependence of organized government and the foundation of religion.' "

In the last year the society distributed 700,000 copies of the Bible, and Dr. Carter said:

"An important branch of our work is that of Bible distribution at Ellis Island, where we make it possible for every immigrant to receive a copy of the Bible in his own language. There is an immigration problem because many immigrants do not learn English and they have no reverence for our laws, our institutions and our Christian ideals. The lack of knowledge of the Bible is today the nation's peril. We have recently inaugurated a new plan for giving a knowledge of the Bible to the immigrants as they arrive at Ellis Island and to the immigrant or foreign populations throughout the country. These immigrants desire to learn English, and there is no simpler or better way to help them learn English than to furnish them with portions of the Bible printed in two languages in parallel columns or pages, their own native language and English. The immigrants will read each word on every page. They will learn of the standards and ideals which are the basis of our America, and they will learn the real message of the Book —God's love through Jesus Christ."—Selected.

St. Augustine's College, Canterbury.

Lovers of Canterbury are sending to St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, contributions toward the 1,500 pounds needed for the preservation of two of the college gates. One was built in 1370 and one was completed in 1309. Their turrets were feeling quite nervous and shaky after some six hundred years, but are to be rendered secure, it is hoped, for centuries to come. Time was when the splendid buildings of St. Augustine were used as a quarry.

The occasional Papers issued by the College carry notes from its graduates who are serving as bishops, archdeacons and priests, in difficult places all over the world. The Rev. Dr. H. H. Gowen, the Ven. Frederic Goodman and the Rev. Frederick W. Clayton are among well known clergy of our own who are Augustinians.

Course for Organists and Choir Directors.

Under the auspices of the British Music Society an interesting course for Organists and Choir Directors will be given in Oxford this summer. Among the lecturers and demonstrators will be:

Dr. W. G. Alcock, M. V. C., of Salisbury Cathedral; G. Thalben Ball, Mus. Bac., of the Temple Church, London; Dr. Ernest Bullock, of Westminster Abbey, and Sir. H. Walford Davies, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Four of the principal choirs and organs of the College Chapels will be used for demonstration purposes.

The course will include the following subjects: Choir Training, The Singing of Psalms and Hymns, Congregational Singing, The Making of the Service, Church Music Composition, Organ Playing, Extemporization, Voluntary (Offertory) Playing, The Use of Transcriptions, and The History of Church Music.

A party of American Organists and Choir Directors will leave New York by the Cunard Line, June 30, and arrive at Southampton, July 8. The return ticket will be good for twelve months. The students will live in New College (built by William of Wykeham in 1379).

The pamphlets illustrating the course, and giving full details, may be obtained from Mr. Francis Mackay, St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, or from the Secretary, British Music Society, 117 Great Portland Street, London, England.

American Church Institute For Negroes.

Dr. Patton electrified the Board of Trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes, and the National Council, at its December meeting, by a most interesting recital of recent achievements in this important branch of the Church's work. He gave the cheering news that, including the appropriations of the General Education Board, about $470,000 have been raised, in cash and pledges, for the building and equipment program at St. Paul's, Lawrenceville, Va.; St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N. C., and the Fort Valley School, at Fort Valley, Ga. He also stated that the General Education Board were so well pleased with progress of the effort that they are now ready to pay to the Institute a considerable part of their conditional appropriation, in order that the building program may go forward uninterruptedly.

Another interesting announcement was that the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, is cooperating with the authorities of the Institute in the endeavor to raise, in the Diocese of New York, the remainder of the money needed to complete the present program for these three schools. To this end, Carnegie Hall has been engaged for the evening of March 12, 1928. The Bishop will endeavor to fill the hall with representative people from all sections of the diocese. A chorus from the Institute schools will render "spirituals" and plantation melodies. A moving picture, featuring the work of the schools, prepared by the Publicity Department of the National Council, will be shown.

Many expressions of appreciation have been received from our Negro clergy and laymen, from all sections of the United States, since the election of Mr. Wallace A. Battle as Field Secretary of the American Church Institute for Negroes. As one of many notable evidences of the widespread interest of Negro Churchmen in Mr. Battle's election, the Negro clergy and laymen of Philadelphia gave Mr. Battle and Dr. Patton a reception, on Monday evening, December 12, at the parish house of the Church of St. John the Divine, a Negro parish.

Attention was called to the fact that, when the American Church Institute for Negroes was incorporated, in 1906, the then eight or nine millions of Southern Negroes were an isolated group. Dr. Patton referred to the rapid developments that have taken place in recent years in aerial navigation, the radio and other facilities for world-wide communication. These influences, with many others, have given the Negro an international racial consciousness. "The ten millions of Negroes of the South are no longer," said Dr. Patton, "an isolated groups." They are a part of a great, international race of one hundred and seventy million people. The time has come, therefore, when the Church should give immediate consideration to the extension of the sphere of the work of the Institute to meet this new consciousness of the Negro race. A thoroughly equipped Institute school should be established in the West Indies and in Africa."

Boy Scouts.

The Boy Scouts of America will celebrate throughout the United States its eighteenth birthday on Wednesday, February 8, as the high spot of its annual Anniversary Week celebration from February 6-12. On the night of February 8, hundreds of thousands of Boy Scouts in all parts of the United States standing at attention, will rededicate themselves to the Scout Oath and Law. There will be Scout meetings, Father and Son banquets, church services, and many other forms of activities with which the occasion will be celebrated. On February 6 the Scouts celebrate Home Day, and on February 7 School Day. After the anniversary celebration on Wednesday, February 8, other days of celebration include Citizens' Day on February 9, Camp Day on February 10. On February 11 the boys will themselves demonstrate Scouting activities in the open. The week will close with special religious services on Sunday, February 12.

Possible Merger of Three Churches.

One of the most important mergers in the history of the Diocese of Maryland is under consideration in Baltimore. The churches concerned are Ascension, Lafayette Square, the Rev. Robert E. Browning, rector; Christ Church, St. Paul and Chase Streets, and the congregation which worships at the Pro-Cathedral, Charles Street and University Parkway, Canon Harold N. Arrowsmith in charge. If the plan materializes 1,700 communicants will be affected.

The Church of the Ascension, which has a congregation of approximately 1,000 communicants, has for some time been seeking a more desirable location, because of changing conditions in its section of the city. Christ Church has been without a rector since the recent death of the Rev. Murray W. Dewart. It is the second oldest church in the city, and is preparing to celebrate its hundredth anniversary this spring. Twice in its long history it has been forced to move by the encroachment of business, and the present church, though still somewhat "uptown", finds most of its membership in the suburbs. The congregation of the Pro-Cathedral, living largely in the apartment-house district and the semi-suburban section known as Guilford in its immediate neighborhood, worships at present in the undercroft of the Synod Hall of the future Cathedral of the Incarnation.

It is proposed in the merger to erect a church building on the cathedral site, which would be ample for the combined congregations and in the future would be a unit of the completed cathedral. Conferences are being held under the leadership of the Bishop-Coadjutor Helfenstein, but no definite plans have been as yet worked out.

The Clericus Meets at Church Home.

The January meeting of the Clericus of Baltimore was held at the Church Home and Infirmary on the ninth of the month, when an opportunity was given the members to inspect this dioecsan institution. Addresses were made by Dr. Cullen on the history of the hospital, by the Rev. Shirley C. Hughson on Parish Missions, by a representative of the Federated Churches of Baltimore, and the Rev. Josselyn Reed, of Liberia. The loving greeting of the Clericus was sent to Bishop Kinsolving, of Southern Brazil, who has been forced under doctors' orders to retire from his missionary work.

The newly-elected officers of the Clericus are: the Rev. Philip Jensen, President; the Rev. Wm. C. Roberts, Secretary, and the Rev. Gideon C. Montgomery, Treasurer.

Bishop's Guild Annual Memorial Service.

The Bishop's Guild held its Annual Communion Memorial Service recently at the Diocesan House followed by luncheon. The Guild is composed of women of the parishes of the diocese and its aim is to help the Bishop in the theological education of his candidates for the ministry. Two events each year are held to raise money for this purpose: a luncheon in December and a Christmas sale in November.

Mrs. M. E. Dulany Endows Episcopal Diocese with $50,000 Gift.

Announcement of an additional gift of $50,000 by Mrs. Mary E. Dulany to the new diocese of the Episcopal Church in Northwestern Wisconsin was made at the midnight service at Christ Church by the the Rev. Dr. F. E. Wilson.

"Here is a Christmas gift for which you will all join me in offering our gratitude to God tonight," said Dr. Wilson in the course of a brief Christmas sermon. "Eighteen months ago we were stirred by the generous thought of one our communicants who offered to give $100,000 to establish the Dulany Memorial fund for the new diocese. This was to be a closed fund to which only Mrs. Dulany might add in case it required any increase. The money was to go into trust, the income only being used for the annual administrative expenses of the diocese. Since that time a careful survey has disclosed the fact that the welfare of the new diocese would be greatly furthered by a larger initial fund. And now I am authorized to tell you that in honor of the birthday of our Savior, Mrs. Dulany has added $50,000 in her original gift, to be available when the new diocese is created, making a total fund of $150,000."

The new diocese will include about one-third of the territory of Wisconsin, the larger part being cut off from the present diocese of Milwaukee and a smaller section from the diocese of Fond du Lac. From Superior to La Crosse and from Hudson to Owen will cover the jurisdiction of the new diocese. The bishops have given their formal consent and the councils of the two present dioceses have voted their approval of the separation. Final action must now be taken by the general convention of the Episcopal Church which meets in Washington, D. C., next October.

It has been agreed by all concerned that Eau Claire shall be the city of the new diocese, making Christ Church parish, of this city, the Cathedral parish. A house has been purchased on S. Farwell street by the local vestry to be used as a bishop's residence. All the congregations in the whole area are now contributing to a separate trust fund to be known as the development fund for extension work when the new diocese gets on its feet.

Commenting on Mrs. Dulany's gift at the annual council held in Milwaukee last winter, Bishop Webb said: "I have felt ever since I was elected that the northwestern part of the State ought to be set apart as a separate diocese The country has a great future, and this is especially true if some system of water-way is arranged to the Atlantic ocean. It is impossible for a bishop residing in Milwaukee really to understand the conditions and look after parishes and missions as far away as those in the northwestern part of the State. To put it concretely, the parishes in Superior are farther away from Milwaukee than Portland and the lower counties of Maine are from Philadelphia. With this endowment, as well as an episcopal residence in Eau Claire, it seems to me that this section can and ought to be set off as a new diocese. I hope I may live to see it and I will feel that the greatest thing I wanted to accomplish in my episcopate will have been brought about."

Mrs. Dulany has done a big thing not only for the Episcopal church, but also for the city of Eau Claire.

Episcopal Rift Here is Feared Over Ritual.

The discord within the Church of England which resulted in the rejection of the revised prayer book also faces the Episcopal Church in this country and is a source of grave anxiety to the Church, Dr. Charles Gilbert, secretary of the Diocese of New York, said yesterday at a meeting at the St. Thomas' Guild Hall, 1 West Fifty-third Street.

The fundamental discord, he feels, lies between that wing of the Church which would move toward Catholicism and that wing which wishes to retain the Protestant character of the Episcopal Church. This discord comes to a head in the different conception of the sacrament of the communion; for where the Catholic party regards the bread and wine as actually transubstantiated into the body and blood of Christ and therefore worthy of adoration, the Protestant wing stand by the doctrine of the Reformation and considers adoration of the sacrament idolatory.

English Protestants Object.

For this reason the protestant wing in England refused to allow the provision of the revised prayer book which allowed the priest to reserve such of the sacrament as had not been used at mass. The provision was coupled with a reservation that the reserved sacrament should be used solely for the communion of the sick, but, according to Dr. Gilbert, the feeling was universal among the low church men that the bishops could not enforce this condition and prevent adoration.

That this great gulf between the two parties could not be bridged seemed doubtful to Dr. Gilbert. "But I hope it will be," he added, "so there need be no more breaking up in the already too broken body of Christ, the Church. Yet I fear that the more the rank and file of the laity come to understand the meaning of this controversy the more bitter the conflict will become and the more danger there will be."

The British House of Commons rejected the new prayer book largely on this ground, Dr. Gilbert said, because they felt, rightly or wrongly, that it would alter the Protestant character of the religion of the people of England. The feeling also existed that the proposed change had been made without much consideration of the views of the laity and would tend to enhance the position and prestige of the clergy.

The American Episcopal Church must face the same problem at the annual convention of the church at Washington next October, Dr. Gilbert pointed out in closing. Already, he said, the first step in the Catholic direction had been taken at the last convention at New Orleans, when the first move for removing the thirty-nine articles from the prayer book had been passed. Dr. Roland Brooks, rector of St. Thomas's, presided at the meeting.—New York Herald Tribune, Jan. 5.

Memorial Chimes.

Sunday, December 11, Bishop Ferris officiated at the dedication of a set of memorial chimes recently erected in St. John's, Honeoye Falls, the gift of Mrs. Frank H. Dennis, of Rochester, in memory of her husband. Besides Bishop Ferris and the rector, the Rev.

Messrs. Mulder, McKim, Davis and Jermin were in the Chancel. The pastors of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches of the village were in the procession. These chimes, consisting of fifteen new bells added to the original bell which has been in the tower of St. John's Church since 1878, is one of the largest, if not the largest, in this part of the state and represents an expenditure of $10,000. The donor, though of the same name, is no relation of the rector, but she and her husband have been close friends of his for many years and this intimacy, coupled with her admiration for the excellent work the rector is doing at Honeoye Falls, led to the gift in which the whole community is now rejoicing.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Eightieth Anniversary.

The congregation of Calvary Church, Charleston, of which the Rev. E. L. Baskervill is rector, celebrated its eightieth anniversary of the erection of its church edifice with fitting services from December 12 to 22, inclusive. The church building is the oldest in the South, built solely for the worship of Colored people.

During the services hearty greetings and congratulations were received from the Rt. Rev. Wm. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Bishop's Trip Abroad.

The Rt. Rev. and Mrs. Robert Carter Jett are planning to be in New York from Saturday morning, January 14, to Monday the sixteenth.

At noon Monday, they plan to sail on the White Star Liner "Laurentic" for a Mediterranean cruise, after which they will visit the Holy Land and several European countries.

The Rev. Messrs. Devall L. Gwathmey, of Wytheville, and Thomas Semmes, of Richmond, will accompany the Bishop and Mrs. Jett through the Mediterranean. They, however, will return on the Laurentic, being away from home only about six weeks, while the Jetts will probably be gone about three months.

Improvements at St. Peter's-in-the-Mountains.

This is one of the most interesting mission points in the diocese, located in Franklin County, on a rural route from Callaway, and about ten miles from Ferrum, the nearest railroad station, on the Norfolk and Western Railway between Roanoke and Martinsville.

Miss Caryetta L. Davis has for a number of years been the very efficient missionary-in-charge, with the able assistance of Miss Mary F. Montgomery. The chief activity at St. Peter's is the school conducted by these ladies and in this, in the winter time, they have the additional help of Miss Susan R. Saunders, of Evington, Va.

Some ten years ago an attractive stone church was erected on the grounds, but funds were not available to complete it until recently. Windows have now been put in and good doors in place of the temporary ones that have been used to keep out the weather, and an excellent floor has been laid. Also the chancel platform has been put in, and the chancel furniture which had been used by Christ Church, Roanoke, in its old building at Church Avenue and Second Street.

St. Peter's-in-the-Mountains is under the care of the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, rector of Trinity Church at Rocky Mount.

Woman's Auxiliary on the Job.

An institute for training leaders of the Lenten Study Classes was conducted by the Woman's Auxiliary of this diocese on the eleventh and twelfth of January. The leader was Mrs. E. L. Herndon, of Pottsville, Pennsylvania, who is Educational Secretary of the Diocese of Bethlehem. Mrs. Herndon discussed the Woman's Auxiliary Text Book for this year, "A Church Awake", by Dr. William C. Sturgis.

The meeting was held in the Parish House of Christ Church, Roanoke, and the visitors were guests of the three Woman's Auxiliary branches of the three congregations in Roanoke, Christ Church, St. John's Church and St. Peter's. Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, Diocesan President of the Woman's Auxiliary, was Chairman.

About twenty-five or thirty persons were present, representing thirteen parishes in the diocese.

WEST VIRGINIA—

The Annual Bazaar was held in Caldmon Hall, St. Hilda's Hall, Charles Town, by the Missionary Society, under the direction of Miss Edith Gregory. Attractive booths arranged by each class added to the interest of the occasion. The Wide World Gift Shop was voted by the judges the most attractive. The sum of $575 was realized. There were visitors from many points and among them Bishop Strider.

St. Stephen's, Beckley, reports a satisfactory growth, a large number of confirmations under the guidance of the Rev. W. P. Chrisman and the near prospect of the erection of a parish house greatly needed for the expanding work.

The Church of the Heavenly Rest, Princeton, was featured by an enjoyable visit from Miss Etta Ambler, the Sunday-school worker of the diocese, and a successful weeks' mission conducted by Bishop Strider.

Other Worthwhile Preaching Missions have been held by the Rev. Horace M. Brown in Grace Church, Eckman, and Christ Church, Wellsburg, and by the Rev. C. W. Sydnor in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Follansbee.

The Kanawha Convocation was held in St. Luke's Church, Welch, the Rev. H. Carleton Fox, rector. On the morning of the second day a quiet hour was conducted by Bishop Gravatt, who was also the celebrant of the Holy Communion, assisted by the rector of the parish. The financial condition of the diocese and the every member canvass were introduced by the Bishop and the Rev. J. W. Hobson. At the election of officers the Rev. H. M. Brown was elected dean, and the Rev. J. E. Thompson, Secretary-Treasurer. The invitation of Christ Church, Bluefield, for the next meeting of the Kanawha Convocation, February 14-15, 1928, was accepted.

The Northwestern Convocation met in Christ Church, Clarksburg, the Rev. J. T. Carter, rector. The outstanding events were the quiet hour conducted by Bishop Gravatt, in which he spoke on the Life, Progress and Hindrances in the Church, and several talks by Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council. The Rev. W. G. Gehri was elected dean for 1928, the Rev. C. G. Cogley, Secretary and the Rev. H. G. C. Martin, Treasurer. The invitation extended by the Rev. John Ridout for the next meeting of the Convocation to be held in Trinity Church, Parkersburg, was accepted.

The Church School Institute of the Northwestern Convocation held its initial meeting in Christ Church, Fairmont, and was a pronounced success. There were delegates from Clarksburg, Grafton, Morgantown, Elkins, Wheeling and other points. A feature of the evening was an inspiring address by Bishop Strider.

The Ohio Valley Sunday School Institute was held in St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, with an excellent attendance from Sunday Schools in Ohio and West Virginia. The speaker for the day was the Rev. Maurice Clarke, Secretary of Religious Education in the Diocese of Southern Ohio. Every one present was interested and profited in what Mr. Clarke had to say about Sunday-school work.

Savannah Negroes Honor White Priest.

No finer description of a service at the Colored Mission of St. Augustine's, Savannah, honoring the Rev. S. B. McGlohon's twentieth anniversary as rector of St. Paul's Church, could be written than that printed in the Savannah Morning News, which is quoted in part:

"By eight o'clock last evening five hundred Colored people were packed in the little chapel of St. Augustine's Episcopal Church to pay tribute to the Rev. S. B. McGlohon, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. An equal number were turned away. In the congregation were several parties from points as far distant as Brunswick, Augusta and Guyton.

"The far-reaching effect of this testimonial was reflected in a telegram sent by Dr. George E. Haynes, executive secretary of racial relation commission of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Haynes said: 'Savannah Negroes have set the pace in pointing the way to increased racial concord. It will not be long before Negroes in every forward-looking community will show forth to the world the esteem in which they hold those godly men and women who in a quiet way are doing as your honored guest has done. I congratulate the Rev. Mr. McGlohon. I doff my hat to Savannah Negroes.'

"Lay Reader R. M. Davey read the Lessons, one being from the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah, 'The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to those that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes and the oil of joy for mourning.' 'That is the Rev. McGlohon' could be heard plainly all over the church at the ending of the Lesson.

"Professor R. W. Gadsden spoke for the Colored citizens of Savannah. He said: 'To my regret, the members of our group are losing faith in Christianity as practiced by quite a number of jelly-back folks, but every time we come in contact with a man like the Rev. McGlohon, we say if the Christian religion produces just one like him, it is abundantly worth while.'

"In choice words befitting the occasion, Mr. McGlohon told the people how pleased he was over the testimoniai, and that as a group they must cease to be self-pitying and look on the lovely, pure, honest and holy things of life. He further said that the white people were more and more appreciating the good qualities of the Colored people and every one could look for better times and more harmonious relation than probably some had expressed in the past.

"A letter was read from the Rev. J. A. Lindsay expressing his deep regret at not being present, but assured Mr. McGlohon that his congregation was praying for the success of the service. A gold cross was presented by Archdeacon Brown. Engraved on the cross were the words, 'To the Rev. S. B. McGlohon from the Negro citizens of Savannah'. The cross was, said the presenter, a symbol of love, service and sacrifice. After the singing of 'God of Our Fathers', the benediction was pronounced and over five hundred Colored people filed down the aisle and shook hands with the honor guest of the occasion."

Evangelical Conference.

Program of the conference on The Deeper Life in Christ, St. James' Protestant Episcopal Church, Fifty-second, below Master Street, Philadelphia, the Rev. John M. Weber, rector:

Sunday, January 22, 11 A. M. and 8 P. M., the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, Westport, Conn.

Monday, January 23 to Wednesday, January 25, 2:30 to 3:15 Bible Study. The Rev. Duncan Thomas, Monroe, North Carolina.

3:30 to 4:30, Missionary Hour. The Rev. James W. Morris, Washington, D. C., and others.

7:30 to 8:00, Young People's Hour and Song Service. Leaders: the Rev. Earle G. Lier, Washington, D. C.; the Rev. John C. Roak, Philadelphia, Pa.

8:00, Evening Service. Speakers: the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, the Rev. Duncan Thomas, and the Rev. Pembroke W. Reed, of Richmond, Va.

The purpose of these meetings is to deepen the lives of Christians, to exalt Christ, as the One who is more than sufficient to meet every need of the Christian life, and to emphasize the office of the Holy Spirit to empower for service.

Some of the speakers at the conference are open for dates for parish conferences along the same lines, and may be reached by addressing the Rev. Frank Cox, 249 West Forty-third Street, New York City.

Addition to Galilee Mission.

The new four-story and basement addition to the Galilee Mission, 821-23 Vine Street, Philadelphia, completed recently at a cost of $70,000, was dedicated January 14 by Bishop Garland. The program was in charge of Mr. Geo. W. Wilkins, Superintendent, and the Rev. Robert R. Windley, Chaplain of the Mission. The speakers included Bishop Garland, Benjamin H. Ludlow, Sherman C. Kingsley, director of the Welfare Federation; Samuel T. Barham and the Rev. L. N. Calely.

The new annex will be the Galilee Home and Industrial Department, including a printing plant, furniture repairs and rug weaving.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Church School Service.

The annual service and mass meeting of the Church Schools of the Diocese of Long Island will be held on Sunday, January 29, 1928, at 3:30 P. M. in St. Luke's Church, Clinton Avenue, near Fulton Street, Brooklyn. Bishop Stires will be the principal speaker. Reports will be given on the Christmas Box work, the Birthday Thank Offering, and the Little Helpers' Offering. Plans of the Church School Service Program for the coming year will be announced. This annual service, under the auspices of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, has come to be an occasion of importance, and a crowded church is to be expected.

Unusual Confirmation at Richmond Hill.

The largest class in the history of the parish—forty-eight persons—was presented for Confirmation at the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill. The Rt. Rev. J. Poyntz Tyler, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota, officiated for Bishop Stires, and gave also a very interesting account of the work of the Church in his diocese.

Bishop Tyler at the same service dedicated a new window in the north transept, the gift of William Cruwys and Emily Cruwys in memory of their mother, Anne Cruwys.

Girl Scout Leaders.

Five different courses for Girl Scout Leaders under the auspices of the Girl Scouts Association of the District of Columbia, are being conducted in Epiphany Parish Hall, during the month of January.

Lectures.

"Religious Education in the Family" is the subject of a series of lectures being given every Thursday in January at 4:30 P. M. in Epiphany Parish Hall, by Mrs. William F. Bowen, Educational Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary of this diocese. This course is being given under the joint auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Sunday School Institute.

Lace.

Two pieces of rare lace were presented recently to the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, by Mrs. Samuel Warren Miller, of Washington, for use as a portion of the communion linen in the completed Washington Cathedral. The lace, according to the donor, belonged at one time to Queen Caroline Dorothea, wife of George II., and later became the property of the great grandmother of Monsignor Charles G. O'Keefe, a Herbert of Muckross. The lace is said to have remained in the family of the Herberts for over two hundred years. Mrs. Miller is a former president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Washington.

The Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Easton, is visiting his mother at his old home in Anacostia, and on January 15 was the preacher at Emmanuel Church, Anacostia, where his father served as rector for twenty-six years.

Out of silence,
Out of space,
Came I hither
By a grace
Still unproven,
Still in doubt—
Save as sun and stars

By some force's
Will sublime,
Go I yonder.
Still in doubt?
Since the sun and stars
Shine out—

Hinduism, Christianity, or Atheism?

I called on a Hindu gentleman professionally a few days ago. After transacting our business, this man who holds a high and important position under the Government said to me, "Padre! What do you think will have happened to Hinduism fifty years from now"?

Not having met him previously, I felt I had to be cautious in my reply and said, "I presume Hinduism will reform herself from within as she has done before and thus adapt herself to the new conditions".

To this, he replied, "I beg to differ with you. Fifty years hence, Hinduism will be practically extinct".

"Why are you so pessimistic?" I asked.

His answer was that Hinduism could never survive the light which science was giving to the world. "Moreover," he said, "every succeeding year finds Hinduism more powerless and impotent. My father was a liberal Hindu, for his day; but he dared not defy Hinduism, as I can do in my day." Then said he, with a significant look, "I am stronger than Hinduism".

That phrase, "I am stronger than Hinduism", expresses the attitude of the intelligentia of India at the present time. It does not at all mean that they are abandoning Hinduism for Christianity. Rather, does it mean that they will become a people without religion, unless the Christian West sees to it, at this time of crisis, that we do not relax our ability to present Jesus Christ as the only hope of satisfying their hearts and their intellects.

I cannot take as optimistic view of the attitude of the intelligentia as some. I fear that discarding Hinduism, they are more likely to become atheists and materialists than Christians; hence, the need for more emphasis in presenting evangelical Christianity to them and for maintaining Christian schools.—Rev. C. B. Hill, in Exchange.

Leadership.

Jesus was a surprising, and, to many of His day, an unbelievable fulfillment of a long hope for spiritual leadership. Some seemed to see it clearly. "We have found the Messiah" was the eager announcement of an early disciple, and his declaration quietly echoed through other spirits of that day. Through the centuries since, Christian faith has given a larger emphasis, be it right or wrong, that Jesus of Nazareth supremely manifested all the high qualities that "the anointed of God" was to have.

But Christianity is something more than a belief that this hope for leadership has been fulfilled. Followers of Jesus are still expectant. This expectancy can be found in a great variety of forms, some highly mystical and traditional, others less occult but perhaps more applicable to our human problems. But it is the entire element of expectancy that we point to here. Tersely it can be put in a statement like this: Christian faith is still seeking a fulfillment of a hope for moral leadership.

The world does not yet have the leadership that Jesus inspired our hopes to expect. We have come near to some great attainments, it is true. We have had some interesting examples of limited international efforts, like The Hague, to bring about a finer moral relationship between people of the earth. New efforts have been launched like a League of Nations and a World Court that have aimed at a wider establishment of order and concord in the world. The merits of these are not here discussed; we simply note them as instances of a hope that men have in some sort of a world leadership. Or they may represent approaches, with prospect of more efficient realization in the future.

At any rate we still are looking for a morally inspired humanity, and we wait in patience and work with faith for the coming of that day.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Doing and Planning.

A useful man to Stonewall Jackson was old Miles, the Virginia bridge-builder. One day the Union troops had retreated and burned a bridge over the Shenandoah. Jackson, determined to follow them, summoned Miles.

"You must put all your men on that bridge," said he; "they must work all night, and the bridge must be completed by dayilght. My engineer shall furnish you with a plan, and you can go right ahead."

Early next morning Jackson met the old bridge-builder.

"Well," said the general, "did the engineer give you the plan for the bridge?"

"General," returned Miles slowly, "the bridge is done. I don't know whether the picture is or not."

We want a few more men of the Miles order. They do not plan, but work. In the name of all humanities, let us have fewer plans and more bridges, shorter red tape and longer bits of flannel; and, if possible, less bitter cry and more wool on poor people's backs. Measureless oceans of talk are not equal to a single cup of cold water really given in Christ's name.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Christ in the Universe.

With this ambiguous earth
His dealings have been told to us. These abide:
The signal to a maid, the human birth,
The lesson, and a young Man crucified.

But not a star of all
The innumerable host of stars has heard
How He administered this terrestrial ball.
Our race have kept their Lord's entrusted word.

Of His earth-visiting feet
None knows the secret, cherished, perilous,
The terrible, shame fast, frightened, whispered sweet,
Heart shattering secret of His way with us.

No planet knows that this
Our wayside planet, carrying land and wave,
Love and life multiplied and pain and bliss,
Bears, as chief treasure, one forsaken grave.

Nor in our little day,
May His devices with the heavens be guessed,
His pilgrimage to tread the Milky Way,
Or His bestowals there be manifest.

But, in the eternities
Doubtless we shall compare together, hear
A million alien Gospels, in what guise
He trod the Pleiades, the Lyre, the Bear.

Oh, be prepared, my soul!
To read the inconceivable to search
The million forms of God those stars unroll
When in our turn we show to them a Man.

—Alice Maynell.

Carry your inadequate resources to Christ. In His hands they become sufficient. He multitplies them. He gives wisdom, strength, all that fits for the task to which He calls us. Bring your little faith in Him, He will increase it. Bring your feeble love to Him and ask Him to kindle it from the pure flame of His own, and He will make your heart burn within you. Bring your partial understanding of His Will and way to Him, and He will be to you wisdom. Bring all the poverty of your nature, all the insufficiency of your religious character, all the inadequacy of your poor work to your Lord. Feel it all. Let the conviction of your nothingness sink into your soul. "Who is sufficient for these things," must ever precede and will ever be followed by "Our sufficiency is of God".—A. Maclaren.

Hunger.

R. S. Stringfellow.

I am hungry, Lord! for I have wandered far in barren field—
And I have sown for harvests of only empty yield,
And now I am hungry, having spent my "All"—
I turn to Thee, with halting steps, with weak and human call.

I am hungry, Lord! O give me food, and bread! as thou didst break,
In Galilee, for hungry ones, beside the lake—
Call me to Thy table, Lord, which Thou hast spread,
And with Thine own hands break Thou the bread—
For I am hungry.

And I am thirsty Lord. The stream of life which flows so swiftly by,
Is all but spent. The springs have all gone dry—
And I languish, thirsty, beside the empty rock-strewn bed—
Where dreams have perished, and cherished hopes are dead.

O give me water, Lord! as Thou didst offer to the women at the well—
Living water! that I may drink and live,
Thy love to tell—
And then, the springs of life so long
gone dry,
Will bubble forth again, and flowing by—
Other thirsty ones may stoop, and drink, and live
And know the solace which alone Thy love can give.
At Thy bidding deserts bloom, rivers flow—
And o'er the barren field rich harvests grow.

---

Dignity which must be always defended had better be entirely disposed of, or rather does not exist: it is very often a very thin disguise for a bad temper. I have seen clever young people made almost worthless for life because their parents taught them that a bad temper was a very dignified piece of peculiarity. Strife is as old as the Tower of Babel, and as common as the row which broke up that pretentious building. But if you want a peculiarity which stands out above all surroundings, take that friendship between David and Jonathan, where each was in the other, and which held through all the dangers of war.—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

Fiat Voluntas Tua.

M. E. Norris.

"Thy will be done," O Father, can it be
This is the life that Thou hast planned for me?
For these are stones, and I have asked for bread.
Alone, uncherished and uncomforted,
I "stand and wait". One step ahead
I cannot see. The lonely path I tread
Is not illumined by one ray of light.
But in the darkness Thy most wondrous might Doth compass me about, and in Thy strength
I have no fear. For who can tell the length
Or breadth or height of Love that comes from Thee
To animate our poor humanity,
And draw us nearer Thee from sun to sun;
And so we say again: "Thy will be done."

"His Father's Business."

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

I often think of Nazareth,
Where Jesus lived as a little Boy:
Where perfume of lavendar breath
Clung fragrant to His every toy:

When Mary cleansed the Christ Child's clothes.
And all the bushes where they dried,
Ever since of heaven did smell,
While the winds in the trees sang and sighed:

Where little Jesus taller grew
In the Nazareth He loved so dearly:
Where He worked in the carpenter shop,
Helping Carpenter Joseph so cherily:

Where once the sunshine made a cross
On the floor with the boards Christ clasped so warm:
The Nazareth where Christ worked and played,
In the innocence of His youth and charm:

The shop where, the legend says, there was found
One day a board too short in length
For the work old Joseph must use it for
And the Child with the force of His heavenly strength

Pulled till it came to be long enough
For Joseph to use it, and finish his work:
I think of the times when Jesus helped
Mary,
And the smiles she would give—for He did not shirk

I think of the times, from childhood till death,
When Christ oft took the Nazareth road,
And forgot in its quiet, familiar scenes
The terrible weight of His load:

Then gathering strength from the memories of home
He back to the stress of His life could go,
Entreating the weary to cast all their cares
On the heart that with love did o'er-
flow:

What a beautiful life was Christ's on earth!
He died for us all, for you, and me!
He gave to us all that we have of worth:
And He died that we, too, might sinless be.

The Baby Moses.

Down by the river bank in the far-away country of Egypt grew many long, strong reeds, and one day, many, many, many years ago, a woman gathered a big bundle of them. When she brought them to her house she began weaving them into a basket, and as she worked I am quite sure that her little son Aaron watched her fingers as she pulled the reeds in and out and back and forth.

Little Sister Miriam was a bit older than Aaron, and I suppose that she took care of the baby while her mother was busy.

"Keep him quiet, Miriam, dear," mother said, and Miriam would cuddle him very close in her arms and try to keep him from crying.

"Isn't he a pretty baby, mother?" Miriam would say over and over again as she looked into his face; and mother would answer, "Yes, my dear; he grows prettier every day."

Then Miriam would remember the command of the cruel king. "All the little boy babies of the Hebrew people must be killed".

She would shudder as she whispered, "The king must not find our baby"!

Father had to spend all his time working for the king, and he was very tired when he came home. Sometimes, too, he had a sad story to tell of how the overseer had struck him when he could not work fast enough. The king's overseers were very cruel to all the Hebrew people who were building his great buildings for him. They often forced the brick makers to gather their own straw to mix with the mortar, but they demanded that just as many bricks be done at the end of the day.

Father would sigh! "How long! How long," and then mother tried to comfort him.

By and by the little cradle was finished, and it was just big enough to hold baby brother.

Mother made it quite water-tight by covering it on the outside with pitch. Then she placed baby inside, and carried both baby and cradle down to the river; quietly and gently she hid it among the tall grasses that grew at the edge of the water.

"Watch him carefully, Miriam," she said. "Do not go too near the place, because some one might see you. I will go home. But if harm comes to baby brother, be sure to come and call me."

How the little "mother-sister" watched that tiny basket. She did not mind tired back and aching feet. As she stood just where her mother told her to stand, she thought of mother's words, "God is good. God is strong. He loves little children." Then she would whisper to herself, "Surely He will take care of little baby; surely He will save him from the king".

Presently the faithful little sister heard a sound. Some one was coming! She strained her ears to listen; then her heart seemed almost to stop beating! The princess was coming to the river! What should Miriam do?

The royal lady and her attendants came close up to the river bank. Then the princess spied the tiny basket. "What is this?" she cried.

One of the maidens lifted the basket for her mistress to see.

"Open it!" she commanded.

The maiden opened it, and there lay the helpless baby.

"It is one of the Hebrew children!" she said.

Then God did a wonderful thing. He put it into her heart to be kind to the little slave child.

"What a beautiful little baby!" she exclaimed.

The baby looked about; mother was not there; he could not see Sister Miriam. He cried.

"Poor little baby!" exclaimed the princess.

Miriam came nearer. Then she heard the princess say, "I shall keep this beautiful baby for my own. Carry him to the palace."

What a marvelous thing for the princess of Egypt to say! Could Miriam believe her own ears? But she had heard aright.

It was a hard thing for a little slave girl to speak to the royal lady, but brave little Miriam spoke. "Would you like a good nurse for the pretty baby?" she asked timidly. "I know some one who would take care of the baby so well!"

The great lady looked down into the sweet face of the little girl. "You may go bring her," she said.

Then Miriam ran as fast as she could right back to her mother. "O Mother, Mother!" she panted. "The princess has found the baby! She loves him! She is going to keep him! She wants a nurse to take care of him! Come!"

Mother ran to the riverside. The princess put the little baby into her arms. "I want a nurse for this dear little baby. I shall call his name Moses. You shall take care of him."

This was God's wonderful way of taking care of a little baby who was in great danger.—Selected.

The Candle-Tree.

O hush, little brother, step soft on the stair
This Christmas morning; for waiting there
Is the candle-tree, with its flowers of light
All shining and blossoming bright, so bright.
Isn't it good to bloom for us so,
When all other trees are asleep in the snow?

Only on Christmas day it comes
While the white snow flies and the north wind hums;
When the spirit of giving is in the air,
Then we are sure to find it there.
O hush, little brother, step soft and light,
Lest it fade like a dream-thing away from our sight!

For under its branches are sheltered here
The things we've wanted through all the year;
The doll I dreamed about long ago,
The scarlet horn that you wanted so,
New books and pictures, all waiting, see,
Under the care of the candle-tree!

And over its branches and all about
Peace and contentment and joy shine out,
Making the world a beautiful place;
Making me say, as I lift my face,
O wonderful, wonderful candle-tree,
The light of the Christ-child is over me!

—Miriam S. Clark.

In the Rose Garden.

Nina was out in the garden one bright morning—the beautiful rose garden with many colors and kinds of roses blooming everywhere, and the long, white path that led under arches and past drooping bushes up to the great house. Nina had thought it the prettiest and most wonderful place in the world when she first came with her mother to stay at Uncle Anson's, but she was growing tired of it now.

"There's nothing to do, and nobody to talk to," she said this morning, as she walked up and down. "I'm tired of just roses."

"Oh-h! I wouldn't ever be tired of 'em!" said a small voice near her.

Nine turned quickly, and there, looking over the gate, was the little round face of a boy.

"Why, where did you come from?" asked Nina in surprise.

"From home—'way down the road," answered the boy. "I come here 'most every day to see the roses, and then I go home and tell mother 'bout 'em. You see she has to make the sewing machine go all the time, so she can't come herself, but she says it rests her to hear about 'em—bushels and bushels of 'em and the green grass. She says when I tell her about them she can most see and smell 'em."

"Well!" said Nina, wondering at that way of enjoying roses. "Didn't you ever take any home? Of course you couldn't, though, unless— Wait a minute and I'll get you some. Yes, I can," she added quickly, as the little boy seemed half frightened. "Nobody cares how many I pick."

Pink roses, white roses, great crimson roses and yellow roses—Nina picked all kinds to fill the eager hands held out for them. "I want your mother to see them all," she said, "and tomorrow there'll be fresh ones for you."

Nina watched every day for her little visitor, and they grew to be good friends.

"They don't wither all in one day," said the boy, touching the pretty leaves lovingly, "so my mother divides 'em into smaller bunches and gives 'em to folks that don't have any. Mother says that's what we ought to do with things —pass 'em on."

Nina went slowly into the house that day busy with a new thought.

"Mrs. Harris, don't you think I might tie up some roses every day when we drive into town, and give to the children we see in the street?" she asked the housekeeper. "When people have good things they ought to pass them on, don't you think?"

"Bless the girl!" laughed the housekeeper. "Yes, indeed, honey, do it. It'll be good for the roses, good for the children, and good for you."

In that way Nina found a flower path to new friends and something to do.—Ruth Cody.

HIS TENTH CHRISTMAS.

It was an ideal Christmas morning. The roads were covered with a thick layer of snow which had fallen during the previous night; the trees, with their ice-covered branches, glistened in the radiant sun, and the crisp morning air invigorated the people walking along, who all seemed inspired with the spirit of Christmas.

Inside the large house on the hill it was also merry. The children, who were grouped around the gigantic Christmas tree which stood with an air of majesty in the center of the room, were busily engaged in unpacking their presents and joyously exhibiting them to grandfather.

"Did you get toys for Christmas when you were a boy?" asked Willie, who always seemed to ask a question that would need a descriptive answer and, perhaps, a story.

"Yes," replied grandfather, "but my presents were quite different from yours. I shall always remember my tenth Christmas."

"Tell us about it," begged Helen, who had by this time grown attentive.

"Well," said the old gentleman, as he settled himself back in his armchair, "if you are not too busy with your presents, I will tell you."

The children forgot their toys for the time being, and gathered around his chair.

"When I was a boy," he began, "I lived in the country. It was very desolate there, especially in those days when vehicles were scarce and when walking was the most popular means of transportation.

"Well, Christmas morning dawned. I was anxious on this particular Christmas, as a kind lady who lived in the next village had promised me a present which, she said, would gladden my heart to possess. I could not guess what it was, but, bidding my mother good-bye, and being wrapped up warmly, I set out for the lady's house where my promised gift awaited me. When I got on my way the snow was falling considerably, and the skies seemed still heavy with more snow; but I trudged on, as a snow-storm was frequent in those days.

"I reached the lady's house, covered with snow, but happy and not in the least tired. She greeted me with a 'Merry Christmas', and after handing me a square box, told me not to open it until I had reached home. So with a light heart I set out homeward.

"By this time the snow was falling fast, but I thought nothing of it and pushed on. But I soon had cause for alarm; for, after I had walked about a mile, the snow became heavier and fell in blinding thickness. Also I discovered that I had lost my course in the road and was traveling in another direction.

"What could I do? The deep snow made walking very tiresome and I soon felt fatigued. But I kept moving and soon distinguished a dark object loom up before. It was a cabin where hunters were accustomed to stop, and I made haste to get there. I had often heard my father speak of it at home. With numb fingers I opened the old creaking door and went inside, where a couple of rough chairs and a rude couch were the only furniture. With care I laid my present on one of the chairs and stood at the window, watching the steadily falling snow and wondering how my parents must be getting alarmed at my absence.

"But the storm seemed not to have the slightest sign of ceasing; so, after crying a little, I settled down on the couch and was soon fast asleep. How long I slept I do not know, but I awoke to the sound of voices.

" 'Here he is,' I heard, and, sitting up, I saw my father and uncle standing beside me. With a cry of joy I flung myself into their arms.

"The snow had stooped, so we immediately started homeward, after I had carefully taken my present under my arm. Naturally, my mother was overjoyed at my appearance, and I learned that I had been absent from home for practically a whole day. I had spent my Christmas in the cabin in the woods."

"And what was in the box?" asked Harold.

"The cutest little puppy you ever saw," replied grandfather, with a smile. "He was cold, hungry and tired after his experience, but grew up with me and lived to the old age of eighteen years. I taught him to beg and to do many other tricks and I shall always remember him with pleasure."

The children dispersed to renew their interest in the bright toys, while the old gentleman gazed thoughtfully out of the frosty window.—American Messenger.

What Happened to Lazy Ant.

Lazy Ant, so all her neighbors called her, because she'd take all day to do what any other ant could do in a few hours.

The meadow-folks said that Lazy Ant, rather than go out and hunt food for herself, would call on her neighbors just about meal-time, and in that way she wouldn't have to work for her food.

This soon became a nuisance, and finally some of her neighbors told her she must go out and get her own food.

"I'd just like to know where Mr. Bee gets that lovely honey," Lazy Ant thought, so the next time she saw Mr. Bee fly by she followed him and hid behind a bush while he sipped from the white cluster blossoms.

"During his remarkable tour of the United States and Canada, in his eighty-first year, Dr. Meyer gave several of the addresses embodied in this book. They were listened to by eager multitudes, who give great testimony to their resultant blessing, and now an audience world-wide in extent is permitted to read these God-given messages. By means of this book the reader may find in God's "MUSTS" a blessed compulsion that will energize and vitalize the whole of life."

When Mr. Bee had filled all his tiny pockets with pollen and honey and sailed away, Lazy Ant crawled up the stem road that led to the white blossoms.

"I can't see why some of us have to work for what we get and others don't," She grumbled to herself. "And I'll just bet I'll not be silly and load my pockets down with pollen bundles, either. It's getting to be a bore. Every cafe-keeper that gives you a bit of honey seems to think you've got to carry her old pollen bundles to pay for the sip.

"Goodness, how careless of me! I must have stepped on something sticky," and Lazy Ant lifted her little legs one at a time and ran them through her mouth to clean them off. But the more she would clean, the stickier they became. First she'd lick one leg, then the other, and by the time she got the first three legs clean, the other three were sticky. And the first thing she knew, she was so sticky from the tip of her silly little head to the soles of her lazy little feet that she couldn't move, and she began to cry as hard as she could.

Mr. Bee saw her plight, and stopped to help her, but he found his own feet growing sticky and had to give it up.

"You see, Mrs. Starry Campion, the keeper of this blossom cafe, doesn't cater to crawling insects, so that's why her stem roads are so sticky," he buzzed. "We bees don't have to touch that road. We just light right down in the blossom cafe. I guess Mrs. Starry Campion heard you say you didn't care to help her distribute her pollen bundles, so she didn't warn you. I'm sorry; I wish I could help."

Just then something bumped into the plant. Mr. Bee lost his balance, but caught himself and sailed away as quick as he could. Lazy Ant closed her eyes, for she thought the keeper of the plant cafe was after her. But when she landed on the ground she opened her eyes, and there sat a big yellow cat eyeing a fluttering butterfly.

Lazy Ant crawled through the grass as fast as she could, and when she reached her home she jumped into a tub of water and had to soak a long time to get the horrid, sticky stuff from her head and feet. But you can believe it or not—Lazy Ant is lazy no more. She set to work the very next day and she has the loveliest ant hill in the whole meadows and is raising a great big family.

"It takes work to keep one out of mischief," she always says when any one reminds her of the days when she was called Lazy Ant.—Christian Sun.

The Winding Road.

Mary Saunders Hawling.

I know a road, a winding road,
That hurries on its way,
From velvet night, with stars agleam,
Into a joyous day.

A road that's fringed with leafing trees
Against a cloudless sky;
A wind that has a scent of pine,
A spring breeze rushing by.

A little road, a golden road,
A road that sings a song;
A road that lifts an eager hand
And beckons me along.

A little road, a winding road,
Where many feet have trod—
A road that leads through valley land,
And climbs the hills to God.

Three hundred and twenty-five dollars was collected to bring happiness to the lepers' Christmas. This is their reply:

"Dear Friends.—We are sure you would like to read these words voiced from the thankful hearts of patients in our leper homes, where gifts such as yours have brought the brightness of Christmas. And that cheer continues throughout the year as they use the blankets, dolls, jackets, sandals, food bowls and other needful things, as well as the welcome food provided.

"We thank you, virtuous friends, across the seas, for the big donations and for all your loving kindness engraved on our hearts. We, the lepers, do not know how to recompense you for your kindness. May the Lord repay you. We wish you peace and long life. Accept the lepers' hundred-hundred salaams."

We thank you, too.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. MARIA BROOKE ARMAT, passing from us, leaves a place that will not readily be filled, for it is the breaking of one of the links with a past that is beautiful, prized more as it recedes. "The tender grace of a day that is dead," and that shall not return.

Yet assuredly the serenity, the gentleness, the charm of such Virginia women as Mrs. Armat and her like, while it endeared them to us unspeakably during life, shall abide perpetually in memory, a monument more enduring than bronze.

One would not be fulsome in praise, especially of this dear lady whose fine simplicity of character was so repugnant to the spirit of pride or display. But may I not, for myself at least, say that I believe Mrs. Armat to have been the most perfect Christian, the most essential lady with the most loving and loyal heart that I ever knew.

She was born in Stafford County, Va., the home of so much that is historically distinguished. Her father, Samuel Selden Brooke, was the son of John Taliaferro and nephew of Judge Francis and Governor Robert Brooks. The fourth brother in this noteworthy group, Dr. Lawrence Brooke, who was surgeon on the Bon Homme Richard. Mrs. Armat's brother, Colonel S. S. Brooke, of Roanoke, worthily carried on the family legend, winning his spurs as a gallant and daring figure in the War Between the States. And so on down the generations has this family distinction been carried into the present; much of this through the noblesse oblige, the generous hospitality ,the culture and sterling good sense of this lady of the old regime.

Mrs. Armat was early left a widow. So strong, however, was her executive ability and so devoted her motherly instinct that she not only supplied the place of both parents to her own little family; she was looked up to by a generation of nieces and nephews and cousins as the embodiment of high-minded, capable and kindly womanhood.

She has rounded out the fourscore years of her peaceful and lovely life, surrounded by children and grandchildren, her nearest and dearest around her. Her long days of usefulness are finished; the lips that spoke no evil are closed; the heart that looked faithfully into eternity has found fruition in that beautiful land where all that distresses, that troubles or disturbs is forgotten, and where such spirits as her own, "the loyal hearts and true—

"Stand ever in the light,
All rapture through and through,
In God's most holy sight."

ASHLEY B. MINER.

Resolutions.

Whereas, God has called unto Himself the soul of ASHLEY B. MINER, a follower of Christ and a faithful and loyal member of this church and of its vestry, who departed this life on the 29th day of December, A. D., 1927.

Ashley B. Miner was a man of the highest type, endowed with many Christian virtues and noble ideals which were exemplified in his life. He was generous, without ostentation; always ready to lend a helping hand and give comfort to the needy, and a generous contributor to the church and to all good causes. He was modest and unassuming, and at the same time possessing the God-given faculties of an able mind, and with noble vision and strong faith, which culminated in success here and equipped him for eternity.

He will be greatly missed in the church, in his home, in the community and in the vestry, where his counsel and advice were always sound and helpful.

By his death God opened his eyes to behold the beauties of the heavenly home.

Now, therefore, be it resolved, by the vestry of St. Paul's P. E. Church of Suffolk, Va., that our heartfelt sympathy be and the same hereby is extended to the bereaved ones, especially his wife, his sister and his brother; and we pray that God, in His own way, may comfort and console them in their deep sorrow and great loss.

Be it resolved, further, that a copy hereof be sent to the wife of the deceased, a copy each to his sister and brother, a copy be spread on the records of the vestry, and a copy be published in the Southern Churchman.

Faithfully submitted,
W. E. HINES,
J. P. WHEDBEE,
S. M. LAWRENCE,
Committee.

HERBERT N. TUCKER, Rector.
Suffolk, Va., January 10, 1928.

Christ Church Parish, Little Rock.

Christ Church Parish, Little Rock, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., rector, held its annual meeting the second Monday of January. This was the largest annual parish meeting ever held here. Encouraging reports from twenty organizations, showing a variety of unusual activity among the adults and the youth of the Church were read. The General Chairman of the Group Organization in the parish gave a report as to the effectiveness of that system, showing an active cooperation of twenty-seven groups. This organization has contributed in a helpful way to every phase of life in the parish during its existence.

Another report was made by the Chairman of the Annual Every Member Canvass, showing that subscriptions had been received in the campaign in December which increased the amount of the pledges by a little over seventy per cent of what it was last year. It will enable the parish to meet all of its obligations and to pay the apportionment for the Program of the Church in full, which is a new record particularly as the apportionment this year is the largest that it has ever been. The congregation also unanimously passed a resolution requesting the rector to appoint a committee to report to the congregation on plans for a modern parish house and on ways and means of raising the necessary funds for the erection.

The Rev. Elwyn Henry Spear Resigns.

The Rev. Elwyn Henry Spear, for the past ten years rector of the Church of the Atonement, Tenafly, is spending a year in travel and study abroad, including a term at Oxford University. Dr. Spear is a fellow of the Royal Society of Oriental Research. During his ten years' rectorship at the Church of the Atonement, Tenafly, he built up a strong following, materially improved the equipment of the parish, the number of communicants increasing from 173 to 360, and the annual income of the parish increasing from $4,000 to nearly $20,000 during his rectorship. His resignation came as a surprise to his congregation in Tenafly, as well as to his many friends in the Diocese of Newark. The vestry and members of the congregation endeavored to prevail on him to take an indefinite leave of absence, which he refused to do on the ground that it would not be fair to the parish. When his resignation was finally accepted the vestry, as a mark of appreciation, presented him with his salary for two months after the time his resignation took effect and recorded their deep regret at his leaving.

At the annual parish meeting a unanimous vote of appreciation was extended to Dr. Spear for his invaluable work in building up the parish during his pastorate.

Dr. Spear's present address is Berkeley Bank Ltd., 33 Rue du Quatre Septembre, Paris, France.

Women Vestrymen.

Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, took a rather unusual and significant step at its parish meeting on the evening of the Epiphany, when by spontaneous and unexpected action three women were elected on the vestry to succeed three men whose terms had expired. This election is for a term of three years, and makes one-third of the vestry consist of women.

It was Bishop Hare's practice to permit the election of women and their appointment on mission committees; representation in the district convocation has always been without distinction of sex; but this is the first time that the cathedral congregation has acted upon that principle.

The Rev. Francis J. Wilson, formerly rector of St. James' Church, Leesburg, Fla., will on January 15, be missionary-in-charge of St. Luke's Church, Hawkinsville; Christ Church, Dublin, and Grace Church, Sandersville, Diocese of Georgia.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

was organized in 1816 for the sole object "of encouraging a wider circulation of the Holy Scriptres, without note or comment". In 110 years it has issued 174,121,599 volumes of the Scriptures.

This world-wide organization engages more than three thousand Christian men and women, who carry the Scriptures forth to the people of their respective races, selling at cost and giving freely to those too poor to pay.

During 1925 the Society issued 9,214,423 volumes of the Scriptures in over 150 languages. This is considered a creditable achievement, but our efforts must be multiplied many times if the needs of the world are to be met.

Financial support of Christian people make possible this fundamental work of girding the globe with the Gospel.

The Life of Mary.

Four journeys Mary made,
In Holy Writ set down—
To Bethlehem, to Egypt,
To homely Nazareth town;
And last to high Jerusalem,
That gave her Son His crown.
But Holy Writ it hath no smallest part
Of the far loving journeys of her heart.

Four griefs Mary knew;
The mean birthplace; her fears
When Pilate spoke the Young Man's doom;
Her townsfolks' laughing sneers;
And last the day He dragged His cross—
End of her hopes of years.
But of her greatest grief there is naught said—
That He, her firstborn, darling Lad, lay dead.

Four joys Mary held:
Her baby's smile; the day
She found Him in the temple
Among the rabbis gray;
The feast He blessed at Cana;
The palms that strewed His way.
Her greatest joy—the day she fell asleep,
And found again her Son—hers now to keep.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"The mystery of Christ is the solution of all mysteries."

God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.

"I will follow the upward road today,
I will keep my face to the light,
I will think high thoughts as I go my way,
I will do what I know is right."

When we have the fear of God in our hearts there isn't any man living who can make us afraid.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

"Reflecting on God leads to reflecting Him."

He who is willing to guide a child is preparing to lead a nation.

He cannot trust God for his past who trembles for his future.—Selected.

The best way to abide with Him is to break the day with Him.

For Christ's sweet sake, come give us that argument against which the cleverest skeptic remains silent—a life led under the life of Christ.—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

New eyes for the sorrows of others come from the experience of sorrows of our own.—Selected.

Thou lovest and Thou knowest, Lord,
A fount of trust, that shall not cease,
Be this blest thought in my tired heart,
And keep it filled with peace.
—Amy Parkinson.

Souls are built as temples are,
Based on truth's eternal law;
Sure and steadfast, without flaw,
Through the sunshine, through the snows,
Up and on the temple goes;
Every fair thing finds a place,
Every hard thing lends a grace,
Every hand can make or mar,
For souls are built as temples are.
—The Civitan.

There is a fullness of the Spirit in Christ; and it is not like the fullness of a vessel, which only retains what is poured into it; but it is the fullness of a fountain, for diffusion and communication: which is always sending forth its water, and yet is always full. —Thomas Boston.

"Character is not measured by deeds and words alone. It would be comparative easy to gain a strong and clean character, if that were only a question of the control we could exercise over what we say and do. Every man ought to know that his attainments in character are measured by what he is when he is alone with his thoughts. To what does his mind turn when not bent upon the daily work? Does he cherish thoughts that would ruin him if expressed? Does he have a subtle enjoyment, a secret pleasure, is seeing or hearing what he would not wish to disclose to his most respected friends? Character is as deep as the man himself, alone and unchallenged by the opinions of others."

"WISDOM"

During the two weeks following Christmas the American public was beset, through the daily press, with a deluge of drivel, laboriously devised, ludicrously divergent. Using the holiday time, scientific and philosophic associations and societies assembled in Washington and elsewhere and heard, or were supposed to hear, prepared papers, essays, treatises, compositions, enunciations. Sociologists, biologists, physiologists, psychologists, psychiatrists, savants, literati, exceedingly deep professors of many things mysterious and awful, sallied forth from crypts in various colleges and universities to bask briefly in the glory of an inch or two or column or two of newspaper publicity. The shortest and surest way to this luxury is to be startling and shocking. The easiest way to startle and shock, in this country, is to assail and deride the Almighty and the Christian religion, as far as editors dare allow. Along this road to bliss a number of the learned fared forth.

This "Bible belt" of the South was but scantily represented in the array, for which deprivation let us be earnestly grateful. The majority of the talent came from the Northwest and the East. Thin lines of vague theory, surmise and assumption preceded names which were followed by strings of degrees and the serious conclusion of all the free thought was curious confusion. An explorer in the high realms of intellect from a Michigan institution won nearly two whole columns of space with proclamation that according to teachings of biology the one purpose of the human race is to reproduce itself indefinitely and scientifically. All the emotions, hopes, aspirations—love of men and women for each other, mutual love of parents and children—he tells us are artificialities, unnatural burdens imposed upon us by the unwholesome, fallacious customs and doctrines of religion and man manufactured theology. The whole duty of man is to divest himself of even so much of the instinct of loyalty and affection as marks the character of a good dog and the duty of woman to deprive herself of the devotion to offspring and fierce courage in its defence that temporarily ennobles a she wolf. Our one concern in life is to produce and mechanically rear and dismiss our own kind. But then came another prodigy from an Eastern centre of civilization with evidence that the entire scheme of creation and reproduction is wrong and that without companionate marriage and birth control we human creatures in a given number of years will be starving and shoving each other overboard for lack of capacity of the earth to feed its inhabitants and permit them elbow room. Yet another professor, with many degrees, has written a book to prove that man is not, never has been and never can be a free moral agent, responsible for his own acts, but is the helpless result of heredity and mental diseases and, therefore, must not be punished for crime or misdeeds nor rewarded for virtue or good works. Evidently viewing himself as original and a valiant pioneer and discoverer in the depths of investigation, he probably never has condescended to consider a writer so commonplace and earthly as Shakespeare, who tells us that in his day, three and a half centuries ago, there were expounders of this same doctrine—"The excellent foppery of the world. . . . . We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, the stars; as if we were villains of necessity; fools by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves and treachers by spherical predominance." Then came other profundities to instruct us that man is a being so high, so magnificently and perfectly endowed, that there is not, cannot be, anything higher and that belief in Power above him and life beyond this here is childish and baseless superstition.

So the flood of wisdom and learning, of speculation and deduction, of theorizing, generalizing and specializing, poured copiously. And what did all the labor of delving and painful weaving together of words accomplish? What good did it bring? Some harm, perhaps—here or there a floating, unguided mind led as far afield and astray as the minds of the professors and variously degreed doctors, drawn from comforting faith and living hope to doubt and the death brought by despair. Fired by the example, the Association for the Advancement of Atheism rushed to the front in some cities with demand that its propaganda and agencies be admitted to the public schools—and some of its representatives achieved the triumph of seeing their names in the newspapers. Now the deluge has subsided and disappeared, the sensational sheets are busied with the emotional processes of various murderers and murderesses. The vast and dominant majority of the nation continues to worship and believe, as before, and goes on peacefully about its business and the professors have relapsed to their crypts.

There should be one large consequence. Parents should learn to scan more closely and anxiously than ever before the instructors and instructions before committing their sons and daughters to them, to be more than ever faithfully intent on thorough grounding and training in the principles and meaning of Christianity in the homes. Literally, powers of darkness are in high places in our educational system—unfortunate men and women blinded by their own vanity, mistaking information for understanding, their own mental vagaries for wisdom, publicity for eminence, contradicting each other absurdly, blundering and stumbling in obscurities and bewilderments. They lead themseves into rayless night and strive to distribute through the world its gloom and horror and hopelessness. The poorest, lowliest, most illiterate, servant of God, doing as he can to alleviate miseries, to reclaim from vice and degradation, to comfort death and console bereavement and incite thought and purpose to live in the infinity of God's mercy and love, is a shining, beautiful, incomparable contrast to the precise, pedantic highly cultured teacher, cultivating atheism and anarchy, destroying character, sending forth foes to the public peace and welfare and menaces to decency.

Go, take your stand on the Monument there,
Along with the other old codgers.

With Washington, Jefferson, Henry and such,
Who sinned with a great transgression,
In their old-fashioned notions of Justice and Right,
And their hatred of wrong and oppression!

You come rather late to your pedestal, John,
For sooner you should have been here,
For the volume you hold is no longer the law,
And this is no longer Virginia.

The old Marshall-law you expounded of yore,
Is now not at all to the purpose;
And the martial-law of the new Brigadier,
Is stronger than habeas corpus.

So keep you the volume shut with care,
For the days of the law are over:
And it needs all your brass to be holding it there,
With "Justice" inscribed on the cover.

Could life awaken the limb of bronze
And blaze in the burnished eye,
What would you do with your moment of life,
Ye man of the days gone by?

Would you chide us, or pity us, blush or weep,
Ye men of the days gone by?
Would Jefferson tear up the scroll he holds,
That Time has proven a lie?
And Marshall shut the volume of law,
And lay it down with a sigh?

Would Mason roll up the Bill of Rights,
From a race unworthy to scan it?
And Henry dash down the eloquent sword,
And clang it against the granite?

And Washington seated in lofty grace,
On the charger that paws the air,
Could he see his sons in their deep disgrace,
Would he ride so proudly there?

He would get him down from his big brass horse,
And cover his face at our shame;
For the land of his birth is now "District One",
"Virginia" was once the name.

"THE SUPPER OF THE LORD AND THE REAL PRESENCE"

Reverend E. L. Langston

An Author of note and Rector of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, England.

I SUPPOSE there are few controversial subjects more bristling with real fundamental difficulties than that of the Lord's Supper, especially with regard to the doctrine of the Real Presence.

But as Christian men and women, and at the same time strong Churchmen, what we want to know is the Truth, and knowing the Truth to fearlessly proclaim it, and at the same time to "contend earnestly for the Faith once delivered to the Saints".

Many of us believe that the subject that we are now considering lies at the very root of vital religion. If we are led astray with regard to our doctrine on this matter, we may be hazarding, not only our Eternal Salvation, but that also of others, consequently we must be more than careful in our study. The Bible is our only guide, therefore we shall try and find out what the Bible says concerning the "Real Presence".

1. Of God Himself.
2. Of the Lord Jesus Christ.
3. Of the "Real Presence" and "The Lord's Supper".

I. The Real Presence in the Bible.

Concerning the Presence of our God, the Bible is very clear and specific. We are told that God is Omnipotent and Omnipresent; God is everywhere. There is no place in the Heavens or upon earth where He is not present and where He cannot manifest Himself.

Proverbs 15:3—"The Eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the Evil and the Good."

Job 34:21—"His Eyes are upon the ways of man, and He seeth all his goings. There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves."

Psalm 139:2-12—"Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it. Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into Heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in Hell, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee."

In spite of the fact that God is everywhere—strange paradox—the most High—Omnipotent—Omnipresent God dwells in the heart of every true believer.

II. The Real Presence of Our Lord Jesus.

What we want to understand is the doctrine concerning "the Real Presence of the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity".

The New Testament is quite clear and explicit on this matter. He is manifested in a twofold manner—Bodily, spiritually.

1. The Real Spiritual Presence of the Lord Jesus is always with His Church—the Body of Christ as its Head.

St. Matthew 28:20—"I am with you alway" even unto the end of the world. This "Church" is not confined to any one denomination, but to "the Blessed Company of all Faithful People" (P. Bk.).

2. There is again a Very Real Spiritual Presence of the Lord Jesus in the hearts of every true Believer. Eph. 3:7—"Christ dwelling in the heart by Faith."

St. John 14:23—"We will come unto Him and make our abode with Him."

3. There is also a very Real Spiritual Presence of the Lord Jesus, wherever Christians meet in His name for Prayer and Worship.

St. Matthew 18:20—Wherever two or three are gathered together in My Name—there am I in the midst. This is in itself a wonderful reality; not many great or noble or wealthy may be present, yet the Lord Jesus, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, loves to manifest Himself, wherever people are gathered together in His Name.

They may not meet in the grandest of Cathedrals or in one of our stately parish churches, it may even be in a barn or in some lowly place; but He is there, and that after all is what matters.

4. There is a very Real Spiritual Presence of the Lord Jesus promised to all Believers undergoing special trials, distress and pain. There are numberless illustrations of this in Church History as well as in our own experience:

Where Then Is Christ's Bodily Presence?

God manifest in the Flesh lived in Palestine for thirty-three years. That Divine Body was Crucified, buried and raised; this was the first real Bodily Presence of Jesus Christ. He ascended in that Risen, Glorified Body into Heaven, and now sits "on the Right Hand of the Father". Therefore, now, the Bodily Presence of our Lord is not on this earth, but in Heaven as our Great High Priest, interceding on our behalf.

He cannot, therefore, be at the one and the same time Bodily in the Sacrament or Holy Communion, under the form of the Sacramental Bread and Wine on ten thousand altars, and also in Heaven. There is not one single text in the Scriptures to support this view. There is not one word to suggest that God's Real Body and Blood are miraculously transformed into Blood and Wine or vice versa in the Holy Communion.

Christ Bodily is once again to visit this earth at His Second Advent. Acts 1:11—Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven? the same Jesus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven

III. The Scriptural Teaching Concerning the Real Presence of Christ and the Holy Communion.

What was our Lord's intention when He instituted the Lord's Supper? There is no better answer to this question, than that which is found in the Church of England Catechism.

Why was the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper ordained?

"For the continual Remembrance of the Sacrifice of the death of Christ and of the benefit we receive thereby."

There is no doubt whatever that our Lord intended this Feast to be a continued reminder of His Atoning Death on the Cross. The Bread broken, given and eaten, is to remind us of His Bodily Suffering and Dying on Calvary for our sins, and those of the whole world.

The Wine poured out is intended to remind us for all time of His Blood shed on our behalf.

But some one may say, "But why should we need such a constant spectacular reminder"?

Because the Lord foreknew men through and through. He foresaw how prone we are to forget and wander from the truth. He knew the hardness and the callousness of our fallen nature, therefore He took care that the Church should ever have a spectacular object lesson with visible signs, under the form of Bread and Wine at a special ordinance.

So we see this service was ordained of our Blessed Master to be a standing provision against man's forgetfulness. So long as the Church exists upon this earth, the Lord's Supper is a continuance of the shewing forth of the Lord's Death "Till He comes" (Cor. 1:26).

The Church of England Catechism teaches this very clearly. To the end that we should always remember the exceeding great love of our Master Jesus Christ thus dying for us, and the innumerable benefits which by His Blood shedding He hath obtained to us. He hath instituted and ordained Holy Mysteries as pledges of His love, and for a continual remembrance of His death, to our great and endless comfort. The Communion Office also teaches this same truth. "He did institute and in His Holy Gospel command us to continue a perpetual memory of His precious death until His coming again."

"Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee." Every time that we kneel down at the table of the Lord, we are reminded of Calvary, and all that Calvary meant to our Lord, who thus suffered and died to save us from the guilt and doom of our sin.

The New Testament makes it very clear that our Lord therefore never meant the Lord's Supper to be in any sense regarded as a sacrifice; we are not intended to believe that at the consecration of the Bread and the Wine there is to be any change in the elements of Bread and Wine, or that in any material sense whatever Christ's Corporal Presence is in this Sacrament.

In the New Testament there are four accounts of the Institution, viz.: St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke and one by St. Paul to the Corinthians. Not one of them teaches us that this ordinance is sacrificial. There is no thought of sacrifice, and the word Altar is not used, and the idea of Priest not mentioned, and certainly there is no change in the Bread or Wine.

Then what did our Lord mean by the words:

"This is my Body." This is my Blood?"

The Greek word for "is" is "Esti" not "Gigneti". Esti meaning "Represents", whilst "Gigneti" means "Becomes".

We must remember that our Lord instituted the Lord's Supper during the Feast of the Passover. This Feast has been kept by the Jews ever since the days of Exodus XII, in grateful remembrance of their Deliverance from Bondage in Egypt. At the Passover Table in the days of our Lord, as well as today, are three Passover Loaves of unleaven Bread, and early in the Feast it is the custom of the Head of the Table whilst saying the Blessing, to break the bread.

The words used are most significant in the light of the controversies surrounding the Holy Communion. "This is the bread of affliction which our forefathers ate in the land of Egypt; whosoever is hungry let him come and eat."

Now the question is: What did the Jews of our Lord's day mean by the phrase, "This is the bread of affliction"?

Did they believe when the bread was broken that it was miraculously changed into the same bread of affliction which their forefathers ate in the Land of Egypt?

The Jews would say, "Of course not". We break bread for the two following reasons:

Firstly, it is the bread of reminder, in that it reminds us of "the bread of affliction".

Secondly, it is the bread of thanksgiving; for we break bread in thanksgiving for redemption of the bondage of Egypt.

Therefore, having these words so interpreted in our mind, we now approach the words of the consecration in the Lord's Supper, "This is My Body"; This is My Blood". What would our Lord's Disciples have understood by these terms?

They would have interpreted them in the light of the Passover. In other words, our Lord seemed to say: Up to this time, whenever you break this Bread it reminds you of the Bread of Affliction which your forefathers ate in the Land of Egypt; but from henceforth, whenever you break this Bread, let it remind you of the "Breaking of My Body". Heretofore, whenever you broke this Bread you thanked God for your redemption from the bondage of Egypt. But whenever you break this Bread, thank God for your redemption from the bondage of sin, it's guilt, it's power and it's doom.

This do no more in remembrance of Egypt, but in remembrance of Me.

But some one says: Are we not told by our Lord in St. John, Vl. 53 and 54:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you—Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of Man—drink His Blood, ye have no life in you—Whosoever eateth My Flesh and drinketh My Blood hath Eternal Life, and I will raise him up at the Last Day.

V. 55. For My Flesh is meat indeed, and My Blood is drink indeed.

V. 56. He that eateth My Flesh and drinketh My Blood, dwelleth in Me—and I in him"?

Now few passages of Scripture have been so painfully wrested and perverted as this.

A sense and interpretation have been placed upon these words which they were never intended to bear.

The late Bishop Ryle of Liverpool says: "Fallen man in interpreting the Bible has an unhappy aptitude for turning meat into poison, the things which were written for his benefit he often makes an occasion of falling."

What these verses do not mean:

The eating and drinking of which Christ speaks certainly do not mean literal eating and literal drinking.

Above all, these words do not refer to the Lord's Supper at all.

N. B.—Most important. We may go to the Lord's Table and yet not eat or partake of Christ's Body or Blood, and the converse is also true—we may eat and drink Christ's Body and Blood, and yet not partake of the Lord's Supper at all.

The thought of a literal eating of the very Body and Blood of Christ must have been most revolting to the Jews. Such a view—as this literal interpretation of these words proves too much, viz.:

1. It cuts off from Eternal Life all who have not received or do not receive Holy Communion.

2. All who die in infancy or childhood—as well as the penitent thief on the Cross. All are lost for ever in hell! If this chapter refers to the Lord's Supper—every man, woman and child who receives Holy Communion is saved Eternally, there would, therefore, be no need for conversion or for Holy Living. This service, then, becomes the chief service of the Church, and in consequence in itself conveys a passport to Heaven.

Then what do these verses signify?

"The Flesh and Blood of the Son of Man" do refer to the coming sacrifice on Calvary, when the Lord Jesus became the Atonement for man's sins.

"The Eating and Drinking" of His Flesh and Blood—not literal—but spiritual. It is an inward and spiritual act of the heart, and has nothing whatever to do with Christ's literal Body or our literal bodies.

Our physical bodies are never enjoined to eat Christ's Physical Body, or to drink His Literal Blood.

Whenever a man feeling his own guilt and sinfulness lays hold on Christ and trusts in the Atonement made by Christ's Death he spiritually eats the Flesh of the Son of Man and drinks His Blood.

Then and there by faith, the special things, the man eats by Faith, and gets benefit from, is the Atonement made for his sins by Christ's Death for him on Calvary.

The lesson of this passage is:

No man can be eternally saved and raised to glory—who does not thus by faith appropriate His atoning work on Calvary.

To partake of the Lord's Supper does not necessarily confer Grace, it cannot of itself convert, justify, or sanctify or convey blessing.

Cor. 11:27-29—It is possible to eat and drink unworthily —and thus—we may eat and drink damnation to ourselves.

To sum up: The Roman Catholics and Anglo-Catholics in spite of this clear Scriptural teaching, teach in the following words of Archdeacon Denison:

"Christ's Body and Blood are really present in the Holy Eucharist. The act of consecration makes the Real Presence. Oh, priest of the Church of God! to us it is given to be the channels whereby the Holy Ghost doth there make the Body and Blood of Christ to be Really, though invisibly and supernaturally, present, under the form of Bread and Wine in the Lord's Supper. Oh! priests and people of the Church of God to us it is given to take and eat under the form of bread and wine in the Lord's Supper, the Body and Blood of Christ."

In the little Prayer Book for children and young people we read, Bow reverently to the Holy Altar, for it is the Throne of Christ—the most sacred part of the Church.

At the words, "This is My Body, This is My Blood, you must believe that the Bread and Wine become the Real Body and Blood with the Soul and God-head of Jesus Christ. Bow down your heart and body in deepest adoration when the priest says these awful words, and worship your Saviour, there, verily, and indeed present on His Altar".

Such is the teaching proclaimed from thousands of our so-called Protestant and reformed pulpits.

The Church of England is most Scriptural in its doctrine as declared in Article XXVIII., and the Black Rubric:

"Whereas it is ordained in this office for the Administration of the Lord's Supper, that the communicants should receive the same kneeling (which order is well meant, for a significance of our humble and grateful acknowledgment of the benefits of Christ therein given to all worthy Receivers, and for the avoiding of such profanation and disorder in the Holy Communion, as might otherwise ensue); yet, lest the same kneeling should by any persons, either out of ignorance and infirmity, or out of malice and obstinacy, be misconstrued and depraved; It is here declared, that thereby no Adoration is intended, or ought to be done, either under the Sacramental Bread or Wine there bodily received, or unto any Corporal Presence of Christ's natural Flesh and Blood. For the Sacramental Bread and Wine remain still in their very natural substances, and therefore may not be adored (for that were Idolatry, to be abhorred of all faithful Christians); and the natural Body and Blood of Our Saviour Christ in Heaven, and not here; it being against the truth of Christ's natural Body to be at one time in more places than one.

Conclusion.

In the light of the above study, both of the Bible and of the Prayer Book, we have seen that it cannot be right to make the Holy Communion the particular and most important service in Church worship.

We cannot think it is right when studying the simplicity of the Lord's Supper to surround this memorial service with extravagant ceremonies, genuflexions and postures.

I know many will not like, what we feel we must say, that this practice savours of Idolatry; consequently tens of thousands of our fellow Churchmen are being induced to idolatrous worship of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who is now Bodily our Great High Priest, at the Right Hand of God the Father in Heaven, as if He were miraculously present upon the Holy Communion Tables and Altars of tens of thousands of churches.

In the circumstances those of us who believe in the simplicity of the Memorial Feast are bound for Truth's sake as well as for conscience sake, to do all in our power to resist the inroads of idolatry and Romanism in our churches.

Topic—The Scriptural Forecast Concerning the Closing Days of this Present Age.

While we know not the day or the hour of that wonderful event referred to in Lesson Eight, as the closing scene of this age (1 Thess. 4:16), the Word of God assures us that the "end of time" will be characterized in such way, that believers then living will know that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh". "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief" (1 Thess 5:4). "None of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand" (Dan. 12:10).

En route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the intelligent traveler knows by the landmarks over which he has traversed along with present surroundings, whether or not he has crossed the final mountain range of the West, and is nearing the end of his journey. In like manner, the believer who looks to the Word of God as marking out the Divine plan of the ages for this world, readily discerns by Divine history the events and landmarks of the past, and that "the night is far spent", having advanced nearly two thousand years from Calvary into this present age of Grace.

As to whether our present surroundings correspond with the forecasted closing days, of the Church Age through which the world is now passing, we leave to the reader's most solemn and serious consideration.

ONE DAY NEARER HEAVEN.

When I was a little child, my uncle, the late John L. Williams, sent our family a Christmas box, in which, amongst other things, was a motto which he had evidently made himself. The background was a bright blue and the letters of gold read, "One Day Nearer Heaven".

It made a very deep impression on me, as it hung on the wall, and caused me to spend much time thinking of the meaning of this motto. Now, since I have grown older, I have thought it was just like dear Uncle John to look thus brightly toward the future, with the smile of heaven on his face. Isn't it lovely that instead of dreading old age, and death, we may go joyfully forward knowing "the best is yet to be", and realizing that we are really "one day nearer Heaven"?

VICTORY IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

IN publishing this account of the rejection of the Revised Prayer Book by the House of Commons we do not wish to weary our readers with repetition, but believe that this is a fuller account than any we have seen. The victory for Evangelicals is cause for gratitude to God for all who are in the same fight in this country. Our only comment at this time is to remind those who love our old Church that the victory was won by much prayer, long and persistent opposition to the Anglo-Catholics—for years a vigorous campaign of education and warning has been conducted by periodical, tract, public meeting, etc. What are we doing in America? Are we to sit idly by and see our Church robbed of its Protestant principles and Romanized? Awake, Evangelicals, and rally to the fight! Watch our columns and cooperate in every way possible.—Editor Southern Churchman.)

IN recent months readers of The Sunday School Times have written deploring the situation in the Church of England occasioned by the proposed Revision of the Prayer Book. A sudden and unexpected gleam of light came when, on December 15, the House of Commons rejected the Revised Prayer Book. The vote, according to corrected figures, was two hundred and thirty-eight against. two hundred and five for, giving a majority of thirty-three votes against the proposed changes in this historic Christian document.

This is the first time in two hundred and sixty-five years that any revision of the Prayer Book has been presented to Parliament. For twenty years the Church leaders have been working on the revision. The changes proposed are far-reaching, serious, unscriptural, sinister. It would take a long article to explain them, but the Evangelical clergymen and laymen in the Church of England have been distressed by the threatening proposals that were being welcomed and urged by the Anglo-Catholic and Modernist elements in the Church. Scriptural allusions were removed from the Prayer Book, unscriptural positions were incorporated.

Prime Minister Baldwin had urged the adoption of the revision, saying he "thought it would be tragic if the Church of England ever became so narrow that two streams of opinion could not flow side by side". This is the fallacious position taken by Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, President of Princeton Theological Seminary, when he says he wants Princeton to represent "the whole Presbyterian Church", by that meaning both the conservatives and liberals, the sound and the unsound. Such a position can be tolerated by Modernists, but not by those who recognize the teachings of Scripture, and the necessary exclusiveness of sound doctrine.

The Associated Press reported that the Archbishop of Canterbury, clearly anxious over the fate of this measure, remained in the gallery throughout the entire eight hours' debate in the House of Commons.

The following is a portion of the great address of Sir William Joynson-Hicks, who has long been known as a true Christian man, standing in his place of great importance in the Government for sound and central positions of Christianity and the Scriptures. He said:

"I hope nothing I say will in any sense create hard feeling among those who differ from me. I have never made a speech in this House under a greater sense of responsibility and anxiety than I do this afternoon. I was one of the witnesses before the Royal Commission in 1905. From that time onward I have always conscientiously believed in the Protestant Evangelical side of the Church of England. I want this House to realize that, just as I believe in my views, I accord to those differing from me the same honesty and sincerity.

"When my right honorable friend dealt with the question of doctrinal decision in the new Prayer Book and quoted the opinion of others, including the Lord Primate, I accepted his view as being held as strongly, clearly, and conscientiously as it possibly can be. But, on the other hand, I find a great ecclesiastical lawyer, Lord Parmoor, saying quite distinctly that the new Prayer Book does not institute as an alternative a change of doctrine. I heard the Bishop of Worcester saying definitely, strongly and equally conscientiously that in his view there is a definite change of doctrine embodied in the Prayer Book. That is the difficulty for all of us in this House.

"We have the authority of both sides on this question. We must get back to main principles.

"It is the opinion of vast numbers of lay men and lay women who stand by the Protestant character of the Church of England, who hate the idea of any alteration being made in that particular service of the Holy Communion which will bring it nearer to the mediaeval idea abolished by use at the time of the Reformation. . . . It is quite clear that the doctrines of the Church of Rome, and any doctrines approximating the Church of Rome, are not the doctrines which were established for us by the Reformation. They are not the doctrines of our Church.

"There are many things done in our Church today that are on the Roman side of the dividing line. One would like to see many changes in other parts of the Prayer Book, but the real trouble is in regard to the service of Holy Communion, in the proposed authorization of the reservation of the Sacrament, which has not been part of the law of the land or the Church up to the present moment. It is now proposed to authorize that, under conditions which do not permit of adoration. I won't discuss the niceties of transubstantiation or the change that takes place in the consecration of the sacred elements. But if you believe that some change is effected which brings the Body and Blood of our Lord, spiritually if you like, into the corporeal presence of bread and wine, and you reserve these in aumbry or tabernacle—it is difficult to say that you shall not worship it as thousands of men and women are doing today.

"Those on my side say that it is much safer and better for the preservation of the true doctrines of the Church of England that reservation should not be legalized or sanctioned, even though it be put in an aumbry on the north side of the chancel or in the chapel. If only for the comfort of the sick, why should it not be reverently put in a cupboard where nobody can worship it? Although only reserved for the purposes of the sick it is in a specific spot in the Church itself, where it is known and men and women do, and probably must, from their own religious point of view, use it as an object of worship. It is being done today. You can go into church after church. In St. Martin's, Plaistow, there is this announcement under the porch:

" 'The Blessed Sacrament is perpetually reserved on the north side of the altar; it is hoped that no one will leave the church without an act of homage to the Presence which is in our midst.'

"A pamphlet, headed 'The Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament', says: 'We would urge that all priests immediately start public services for the adoration of the reserved Sacrament.'

"The House, no doubt, can take it from me that there are many churches where that is being done. At St. Thomas, Charter House, London, a few months ago there was a children's service. During the service and before the tabernacle was opened, the priest said to the children: 'Jesus is our King, and we are going to see Him when the tabernacle doors are opened in a minute.' Then the doors were opened and the Host elevated, and the children were told by attendants to bow.

"If you want another authority as to the change in doctrine, Father Woodlock said the new alternative in the Order of Communion included elements previously lacking which quite definitely brought it into line with the Mass. We are told that the Bishops are going to allow access to the reserved Sacrament for the purpose of private prayer. Private prayer in the presence of the reserved Sacrament is dangerously near private prayer to the reserved Sacrament. Unless a man believes in something more than mere corporeal bread and wine why should he wish to make his prayers in the presence of the reserved Sacrament; why not in any part of the church?

"I am not disputing the honesty of those people who desire this, but I am saying that up to this time it has not been part of the doctrines of the Church of England, and we are now asked to go back to mediaeval times."

No one can predict what will follow this significant action of the House of Commons in rejecting a measure that was inimical to the true testimony of a great communion. A later Associated Press report from London said: "Seldom has a decision of Parliament thrown this great community into such confusion as did the rejection in the House of Commons of the Revised Book of Common Prayer. Rejection seems to have been a possibility which no one contemplated in view of the fact that the Revised Book had been endorsed by the Bishops of the Church of England and had been approved by the House of Lord. Consequently, chaos reigns in Church circles and even high dignitaries appear nonplussed. . . . Preparations were completed for printing millions of copies of the new Prayer Book in the coming year, and now all this work has suddenly closed, throwing hundreds of men out of employment.

"Sir William Joynson-Hicks, the Home Secretary, who is credited with delivering one of the best speeches of his career in opposing the Revised Prayer Book in the Commons, is quoted by the Evening Standard as saying: 'I have always been convinced that the great mass of English people were Protestant to the core. The Bishops have completely mistaken the view of the ordinary man in the Church. The decision is clear, and it is time for us all to work together to consolidate the Church on old lines, putting away the new doctrines of Anglo-Catholicism and working wholeheartedly with the great Nonconformist Churches for the good of the whole land. The book is dead now.' "

During the week following the reversal in the House of Commons, conferences of the House of Bishops were held at Lambeth Palace, and the Archbishops of Canterbury and York isued a joint statement announcing that the Revised Prayer Book would again be submitted to Parliament for approval after certain changes have been made which will "tend to remove misapprehensions". It is plain, however, that those who are against these sinister changes in the historic Church document have no misapprehension as to their import, but see clearly what they mean. Sir William Joynson-Hicks is quoted as saying now that separation within the Church is inevitable, letting the Anglo-Catholics go their way toward Rome, while the Evongelicals hold to the Protestant Christian faith.

The fight for the faith is not over. The Adversary will not stop his determined efforts to bring apostasy as widely as possible into the professing Christian Church throughout the world, in all its branches. It is a crisis the import of which we cannot know. And this means it is a time for importunate, pleading prayer on the part of God's people, especially prayer for the world-wide revival in the true Church of Christ which will flood out error anu sin, and bring in a great harvest of souls while there is yet time before the Lord's return.—The Sunday School Times, January 7, 1928.

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

WHEN the question of recruiting men for the ministry is up for discussion we hear frequently the most peculiar reasons given for the shortage of men. Some say that salaries are not large enough, and other reasons wide the mark are given. The following convincing words spoken by Bishop Selwyn on the subject of finding men to man the mission fields will apply to the ministry and its increase everywhere.

There is another cry—"Where are the men?" Dear friends, when our Lord said, "Greater works than these shall you do, because you believed on Me", He left a little band. That band of one hundred and twenty that gathered in that upper room, that little band of five hundred that saw Him in Galilee before His Ascension, that was the sum total of the men to whom Christ gave that great commission, this stewardship of the souls of all mankind. "How was it fulfilled? The Spirit who came down from Heaven so filled them with power from on high, that while, in the infant state of the Church, men required signs to induce them to believe, "God's Spirit working with the Apostles confirmed the word with signs following". When these extraordinary gifts of the Spirit were removed, then came the Divine promise in the ordinary course of the fulfilment of the words of Christ that He would be with His Church always, even to the end of the world;

That is a promise which knows no exception. It was in that spirit and in that power and in that faith that St. Paul commissioned Timothy to deliver the Gospel which he had received from him, to faithful men who should be able to teach others also—five generations of the Christian Church comprised in two short verses of the Epistle to Timothy. It was in that strength and in that spirit that St. Paul directed Titus to go to Crete and to ordain him elders in every city. And who were those Cretans? Always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies; and yet those liars were to be preachers of the Gospel truth; those evil beasts were to lie down with the Lamb of God; out of those slow bellies were to flow forth rivers of living water.

Never tell me, then, that there is a race upon the earth, out of which, by God's providence and by the gift of His Holy Spirit, there cannot be raised faithful ministers, able to serve God in the holy offices of His Church. It has been so in Africa. It has risen there even to a higher grade. A poor boy, taken out of a slave-ship hold, trained in the schools of the Church Missionary Society at Sierre Leone and sent to England for the ministry of the Church, has since returned to England to receive consecration as a Bishop of the Church, and gone back again to the heart of Africa, there to preach to his countrymen the unsearchable riches of Christ.

The same is seen everywhere. India has its band of native pastors. Ceylon has its like company of preachers. New Zealand out of a race never exceeding in number one hundred thousand souls, has yielded to Bishop Williams and myself seventeen ordained missionaries, not one of whom—in the midst of troubles of war, in the midst of the relapse of many to heathenism—has ever swerved from his faith in the Lord Jesus.

I say then, dear brethren, that there is no lack of men. God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham. Only let us go forth to our work with a living faith—a wide, a world-wide faith—a faith resting upon a hope which enters into that which is behind the veil. Let us go forth in the name of the Lord of Hosts to bear the banner of the Cross."

It has been plain always in the history of the Church that where men have been called to danger and to hardship they have been more than willing to respond. These words of Bishop Selwyn's show where the emphasis should be placed. If in the call to the ministry we stressed the Holy Spirit and His call, and pointed men to fields of service and of sacrifice for the sake of Christ—if these points were given prominence over the prudential and time-serving considerations that are presented too often today, we would find a greater response to the call.

The men who come for worldly and merely professional considerations are worse than useless, they are a positive detriment to the cause. Only those whose hearts God has touched, who are willing to turn from all for the sake of Christ, are of any value to the service of Christ. Pray that we may have more candidates who are willing to suffer the loss of all things that they may gain Christ.

IGNATIUS OF ANTIOCH

IGNATIUS was, according to Origen, the second bishop of the great city where the first Gentile Church was established by Barnabus and Saul, whence they were sent forth as missionaries and where believers were first called Christians. He was consecrated rather late in life, as we learn from Eusebrius, and was together with Papias and Polycarp, a disciple of the Apostle St. John. He became bishop in 69 A. D., and thus his witness is of one who knew the times of the Apostles. He was condemned while in Antioch to be thrown to the wild beasts, but was sent to Rome for the execution of the horrible sentence, which was carried out.

On his way to Rome to suffer, Ignatius stopped awhile at Smyrna, where he was allowed to commune with his friend, Polycarp, bishop of that city. From Smyrna, he wrote four epistles, which are still extant; later he wrote three more from Troas, one of them being a personal letter to Polycarp.

For a long time, it was supposed that only three of these letters were genuine; but it is now conceded that there are seven genuine letters. The great conservative critic, Zahn, proved this, and his work was popularized in England by the famous Bishop Lightfoot.

These epistles are most valuable, o fcourse, in themselves; but written as they are in the shadow of a stern martyrdom and by a man who had known St. John, they possess unusual evidential value. There should be no doubt in any fair-minded student, that in Ignatius' day episcopal government was universal. The New Testament was in existence and honored as God's Word, and the deity of Jesus Christ was unhesitatingly accepted. These letters cut the ground from under all the contention for the late writing of the gospels. They make impossible that a supernatural Christ was conjured up by the credulity and pious enthusiasm of His followers, and substituted for a simple human teacher from Galilee.

We should not expect a man of the time of Ignatius, to quote the Scriptures after the fashion of a modern writer. And we should think it probable that a companion of the Apostles would cite or refer to many acts and deeds not recorded in the New Testament. The fact is that, while not quoting the New Testament directly, Ignatius shows his familiarity with the same book in nearly every line that he writes, while nothing additional to the gospel record is put forward by him.

References, therefore, to the written Word are particularly forcible. He says in his epistle to the Philadelphians, "I exhort you that you do nothing out of strife, but according to the instruction of Christ. For I have heard of some who say, Unless I find it written in the originals, I will not believe it to be written in the gospels. And when I said in reply, It is written, they answered, what lay before them in their corrupted copies".

Even at that early date disputed matters were to be decided by reference to the written word. What Ignatius blames in the people referred to in this passage is that they insisted on demanding unreasonably the original writing, and were unwilling to accept authoritative copies of the original. What was written was decisive at that time, and authentic and accepted copies of the original writings were to be received as giving a sufficient and satisfactory record of what was written.

"LOURDES, HEALER OF BODIES."

Mr. Editor:

February 26, 1927, is almost a year ago, and everybody who read my article on "Lourdes, Healer of Bodies", may have forgotten all about it, especially the sentence which said, "A Christendom that has come to look upon an exceptional wonder, or a miraculous event as the preferred method of Church work has tended to push moral service and spiritual development into a background that is half hidden by superstition and fear". But I was out of the country when my article was published in your columns, and it was only in Europe very recently that I read the courteous and justifiable criticism of Mr. F. B. Stone, of Clifton Station, Va., who says he does not understand what I mean by the sentence quoted, and seems to resent my reference to miracles as "heavenly intrusions". He combats what he takes to be my slurring of miracle by a list of the wonder workings of Jesus or concerning Jesus.

May I say, even at this late day, that Mr. Stone completely misunderstands my contention, and, as I look now at my concluding paragraph, I do not wonder that he does. As a literary article it would have been better to end with the mere description of Lourdes and the admission that its ratio of successful healings is probably as good as any modern Anglican or Protestant effort to heal. But I had more than a literary purpose, therefore, I dragged in a paragraph or two from another article which I have in mind, wherein there would be an effort to show that other ways of healing body and soul are not only more common, but far more successful in the long run, and probably as heavenly in origin. In expressing this moral warning, I had no intention of denying the New Testament miracles, which seem to come quite natural to Jesus; but I think I was right in drawing the inference that Jesus Himself looked upon other ways of working in His Kingdom as greater and better than what He called, rather contemptuously, "signs and wonders". The whole intent of our Lord's teachings was that His followers in all ages should do "greater works" than any He had attempted, and that those greater works were not what we call "miracles". Hence the truth of my words in the disputed sentence, "The preferred method of Church work—" as against "heavenly intrusions". Preferred is its important word.

My mind was exclusively at the moment centered on the lamentable waste of spiritual and moral effort, as well as hygienic and sanitary endeavor, made by the medieval Church and its successors in their various "miracles", three fourths of which were probably frauds and much of the rest the incidental results of a credulity which God and nature chose to use for the good of unhappy souls. I repeat again my closing sentence with this historical application: "In the long run the body is helped more by the continuous miracle of good living than it is by heavenly intrusion." In other words, God seems to prefer to help those who try to help themselves through their natural endowment; coupled, of course, to a prayerful spirit modeled upon the Lord's own attitude in Gethsemane. Waiting for what, perhaps unwisely, I called "heavenly intrusions", became its chief means of throwing religion into the sluggish and superstitious and unproductive condition Christianity now stands in many parts of the world.

I hope this makes my meaning clearer. While somewhat a defender of the rights of heretics, I happen to be amongst those of childlike and orthodox mind when it comes to the One we call Author and Finisher of the Faith. Almost any miracle is conceivable of Him; but that is an effect of His character—not a cause thereof.

GREETINGS FROM THE UNIVERSITY OF CHINA.

Mr. Editor:

This brings to you our New Year's Greetings for the year, 1928. May the Lord graciously bless you with His presence, and keep you, and prosper you in every good work during this new year.

We wish also to thank our friends for their kind help given the school during the past year, whether this has been manifested through financial contributions, through sending names of other friends, through prayers, or otherwise. All help. And all are appreciated.

God has been with us. He has graciously blessed our school during 1927. In the year 1928, in our effort to stand for the old-time, orthodox faith among the multitudes of China in their great need, we have the faith to expect still larger blessings at His hands.

At this time, also, especially do we desire to express our devout gratitude to God who has led us day by day, and who has provided for our needs out of His infinite grace, and mercy, and love. He has indeed been good to cur school. And we thank Him gratefully for His countless loving kindnesses—for all His goodness in the past.

May our God grant to you great joy and a holy peace in Him during the year 1928.

Yours in the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. Editor:

In a recent issue of The Southern Churchman I noted under the above title a letter by Mr. James L. Smiley in which he attempted to prove that the Scriptures taught the doctrine of annihilation instead of eternal punishment. Annihilation is an old-time theory, the converse being the theory of universalism, or the final salvation of all depraved beings, including also Satan.

As usual, each party appeals to the Scriptures to substantiate their particular theory.

In Mr. Smiley's letter I note some textual misapplications and in other instances omissions; also, the misuse of certain words frequently so applied; for instance, the words "Immortal", "Immortality", where "perpetual existence" would be in strict harmony with the teaching of Scripture. God alone is Immortal or deathless, all human beings apart from God in Christ, being inherently mortal, in spirit, soul and body. See 1 Tim. 6:14-16. They who are in union or oneness with God in Christ are thereby rendered immortal, "neither can they die any more" (Luke 20:35, 26).

Mr. Smiley refers to the doctrine of "everlasting torment" as a product of the dark ages and as "repugnant to the doctrine of Christ", asserting that Christ referred to hell as a "garbage dump" outside Jerusalem, "where the garbage was annihilated, but the "worm and the fire were continuous". How does it happen that the worm and fire are "continuous", when the garbage on which the worm and fire fed is annihilated or extinguished? Is not the continual existence of the garbage essential to the existence of the worm and the fire? This indeed is the point Christ emphasized by the words when referring to the everlasting punishment of the radically impenitent—

"Where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched" (Mark 9:43, 47, 48). Why? Because the radically depraved are not annihilated, but suffer the "eternal (age during) fire" (Matt. 18:18). Further, Mr. Smiley quotes Matthew 10:28, where Jesus says, "Fear Him who is able to destroy body and soul in hell", as teaching annihilation. Certainly not. The word "destroy" simply means a condition of deterioration or injury. A magnificent picture may be destroyed by daubing mud over it, but does that annihilate the picture? Of course not. Again the word "perish" (John 3:16), does not imply annihilation; nor in Luke 15:17, where we read of the Lost Son complaining of "perishing with hunger", while he was very much alive, though suffering punishment. No, that young spendthrift was not annihilated. In 1 John 5:12, the word "life", refers to the Supreme, Immortal Life derived from union with God—Supreme, Immortal, Spirit-Being—in Christ, in contrast with the statement "has not life"; that is, suffers the everlasting death, through perpetual existence in the future spirit state, the "wrath of God continuing to abide on them" (John 3:36).

Revelation 20:14, 15, Mr. Smiley calls "complete annihilation of God's enemies". This is said to be the "second death", but death is not annihilation or extinction. In Revelation 14:9-11, we read the "smoke of their torment ascendeth for ever and ever—(unto the ages of the ages). See also Matthew 25:46, . . . "these shall go into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life".. Note the exact contrast. The punishment and the life are both declared to be eternal; a word not only expressive of duration but also quality. If the former condition ceases, so also must the latter condition cease.

Mr. Smiley's conclusion is rather unique and illogical. He says, "Everlasting punishment does not mean everlasting pain, but everlasting exclusion from heaven". If everlasting punishment means annihilation, as Mr. Smiley asserts, how can those who are non-existent be excluded from heaven or from any other locality?

We do not learn from the Scriptures, directly or by inference, or from nature that God ever annihilates anything He has created. What is the nature of the eternal punishment, of this we are not informed, but we surmise it will be spiritual remorse intensified by a virulent hatred and hostility towards their Creator-Father. Does God inflict eternal punishment on any one? Absolutely NO. God is essentially LOVE, not "willing that any one should perish", but man, naturally depraved and hostile towards his Creator, by rejecting the offered salvation in and through Jesus, continues a rebel and an outlaw subject to eternal and everlasting banishment from God—this is "the second death".

BOY AND GIRL SCOUTS.

Mr. Editor:

The Boys' and Girls' Scouts of America are wonderful organizations. They give to the young self-confidence, obedience, charity and usefulness.

These organizations should not be in any way connected to any church in our beloved land, because they appear as a military aid, look like one, teach many things that is addible to the United States Army. The boys and girls have the thought instilled that they are ready for our country's call. I believe Christ Himself would not endorse such in His house of worship. The proper place for such should be in our public schools of America. The writer of this article, a lifelong citizen, has interviewed many business men, lawyers, ministers, Churchmen, scout instructors and others. They all agree that the public school should be the place for such organizations.

Mr. Editor, this is a big question, yet it is the truth.

EXPANDING HORIZONS: By Cornelius Woelfkin, D. D. Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn.

We are frequently reminded of late that we are living in a marvelous age. This is quite true, especially of the last quarter century. Dr. Woelfkin, the able pastor and preacher of Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York, is among the group of men who have kept up with the great facts of an enlarging world. No one man can interpret the advance movements of even his own time with perfect accuracy, but some men give us much food for thought in endeavoring to do so. Dr. Woelfkin has done a good piece of work in these six lectures delivered at the Vanderbilt University in 1926 on the Cole Foundation. The dean and Faculty of the School of Religion of the University speak very highly of them and ask for a careful reading.

Space does not permit of an analysis of these very thoughtful addresses, but the titles themselves give us a very good clue to their contents:

"The Universal Kingdom,"
"Dissolving Fictitious Lines,"
"The Wider Evangelistic Message,"
"Catholicity in Worship,"
"A Divine Consciousness,"
"The Quest for Immortality."

"The Universal Kingdom" is an examination into the most intimate and vital teachings of our Lord, ending with a striking illustration to show the sin and folly of present quarrels and divisions in His Church.

"Dissolving Fictitious Lines" does not refer so much to denominational differences as to the true place and purpose of the Bible, and the supernatural element in the Christian faith.

"The Quest for Immortality" concludes the book.

Like Mr. Gladstone, we always examine a wise man's thoughts on Immortality. Dr. Woelfkin introduces the subject well and then argues for it from reason, conscience, the heart (the home of all love), the human will, science (which does not prove it) and Christ, who does.

The whole lecture is fine, especially the middle and last parts. We feel quite safe in saying that it alone is worth the price of the book, $1.50.

CONFIRMATION: OR, ARE YOU READY TO SERVE CHRIST? By the Rt. Rev. Ashton Oxenden, D. D. Longmans Green & Co. Price, 30 cents.

We welcome the republishing of this helpful booklet, so spiritual and evangelical. The author has been a blessing to many by his writings and the public have shown their appreciation of his sound, clear teaching by the fact that eight hundred and thirty-four thousand copies of this booklet have been printed. In a few pages the author has stressed the main points and presented the subject in a manner especially adapted to the young.

We hope that it will find its way into the hands of many who are to be confirmed.

Conference on Church Unity.

The first American Conference of the Christian Unity League, an attempted sectional "follow-up" of the Lausanne Conference on Faith and Order of last summer, was held at the First Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, on January 12 and 13. More than six hundred and fifty persons were enrolled, representing twenty-five different Christian communions. The speakers included: Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Pittsburgh; Bishop W. A. Guerry, Charleston, S. C.; Dr. C. C. Morrison, Chicago; Dr. Wm. Adams Brown, New York; President G. W. Richards, Lancaster, Penn.; Dr. Finis S. Idleman, New York; Dr. Fred. Lynch, New York; Dr. Robert A. Ashworth, Yonkers; Dr. John M. Moore, New York; President W. A. Harper, Elon College, North Carolina; Dr. Robert Bagnell, Harrisburg, Penn., and Dr. Robert A. Hume, India. The United Church of Canada appointed a special representative in Dr. Theodore Ross, Port Elgin, N. B.

The conference was conducted along the lines of Lausanne, with prepared addresses on designated subjects at the morning sessions and group conferences for discussion in the afternoon, followed by a general conference to determine the "findings". The conference closed with a joint celebration of the Lord's Supper on Friday evening, in an attempt at unity of worship which Lausanne was not able to bring to pass. Unfortunately, this was not completely attained, for the Episcopal clergy, though invited, were conspicuously absent in the conduct of this communion service. Nevertheless a number of Episcopal laymen did assist in the service and clergy sat in the congregation and communed.

Among the general findings it was affirmed (1) "that the flagrant sins against brotherhood which threaten to disrupt the national and international, industrial and social life of our day, contributed a challenge to all communions of Christianity to come together in an organic unity for the weal of mankind"; (2) "that, recognizing the important differences of conviction, partly as to the nature and authenticity of the church, we urge those communions which are closest together to seek the closest possible form of unity as a step toward the fully inclusive unity for which we hope".

One important statement was made which touches on present-day theological controversies. It was affirmed "that, while recognizing that the statements of doctrinal formulae of the churches and their modes of government and worship were largely based upon the results of Biblical interpretation as held at the time the statements were made, nevertheless in the light of the discoveries of new sources and the use of sounder and more trustworthy methods of Bible Interpretation, and in the light of the historical study of the origin and valuation of Christian creeds and institutions, representative scholars of the different churches be appointed on commissions for the study of these great issues from this modern point of view."

On missions it was asserted "that, recognizing that peoples in mission fields, know little of, and care nothing for our divisions, all churches urge and expect their representatives to promote church unity in every feasible way". On education, "that denominational colleges seek practical methods towards making all denominational colleges gradually interdenominational so that the control will be in several communions rather than in one communion; and that the ministers of the various communions be educated together rather than in separate, and frequently isolated seminaries". On Church papers, "that the denominational papers carry more contributed articles and news items from other communions in order to widen the outlook of their readers, that they may think in terms of the whole Church and thereby hasten the United Brotherhood of the Lord's Disciples".

The next conference of the Christian Unity League will be held in a Western city in the fall of 1928.

Society of the Nazarene.

The Rev. John Gaynor Banks, D. S. T., National Director of the Society of the Nazarene, with headquarters in Mountain Lakes, N. J., announces the appointment of Commander C. T. Jewell, of Washington, D. C., as press representative for the Society. Until recently Commander Jewell was employed as executive secretary for publicity of the Diocese of Washington.

Dr. Banks points out that the new officer will have broader duties than those connected with the newspapers. He will get in touch with the work of the Society and its sixty guilds throughout the country and will cooperate with guild leaders and with diocesan and provincial directors in the dissemination of information. It is a part of the creed of the Society that the Church as a whole, through the centuries, has been negligent in preaching the whole Gospel, which includes the commandment to heal as well as to preach, teach and baptize. To awaken the Church to this ideal the Society of the Nazarene feels that an extensive campaign of education must be organized.

In order to place its beliefs squarely before the Church, the Society publishes monthly a convenient and attractive magazine known as The Healing Evangel, and also publishes and sells books and pamphlets on subjects akin to the work of the Society. Prospectuses and book-lists can be usually found with the diocesan representatives and guild leaders.

Realizing that the spiritual welfare of the whole man is involved in Christian evangelization, the Society of the Nazarene conducts, from time to time, in various parts of the country, preaching and teaching missions on the lines of the recent Bishops' Crusade. Healing services are frequently added, but the missioner is careful to require definite instruction and devotion on the part of the supplicant before the laying on of hands.

Eugenics Branded Peril to Genius.

Philadelphia, January 16.—Men like Abraham Lincoln would have been lost to humanity if the strict principles of eugenics had been applied and only the strong and the intellectually great permitted to have children.

This was the contention of Prof. Edwin G. Conklin, professor of biology at Princeton University, in addressing the American Philosophical Society. Professor Conklin entitled his lecture, "Some Recent Criticisms of Eugenics".

Summing up his position in brief, the speaker said that years of study has convinced him that never will humanity be able to evolve a practical program for the application of the principles of eugenics. He explained his position by reference to numerous experiments and researches that have been attempted.

Professor Conklin also delivered a plea for the recognition of both heredity and environment in determining the destiny of mankind. In their zeal to prove one thing the eugenicists have cast environment overboard and have laid everything to heredity, he said, while, on the other hand, opposing factions have thrown heredity aside and have pinned their entire faith in environment. One set is as wrong as the other, he declared.

"I think that the good eugenics can do is very limited in its scope," he said. "If we had the power to breed human beings as we do animals, something might be done, but there are too many influences governing us—the right of selections for one thing and the fact that any restrictions along these lines must of necessity be self-imposed. Eugenics can possibly weed out the entirely unfit, but the best it can do is maintain a bottom level of society. It can never lift the world to the new humanity that is so much talked about. we must preserve a sane balance in the matter of heredity and environment, and in advocating the importance of one, should not decry the other."—Washington (D. C.) Star.

Touching Russia's Pocket Nerve.

Although no apprehension is felt on the score of the actual destruction of the American social foundations by the Russian Communists who are seeking the subversion of institutions in this country, the persistence with which the propaganda is conducted by the Third Internationale at Moscow is disquieting. It is known that most, if not all, of the agitations conducted here by radicals against the established institutions, economic and political, are inspired by the organization at the Russian capital. which, though thinly camouflaged, is no less than the Russian government itself. The relations between the Third Internationale and the groups of commissars who constitute the administrative authority in Russia are intimate, are in fact those of actual identity.

Matthew Woll, a high official of the American Federation of Labor and acting President of the National Civic Federation, has inaugurated a movement calculated to check the propaganda conducted at Moscow. He has addressed a letter to the American-Russian Chamber of Commerce asking that the Russian Soviet government be called upon to discontinue the campaign of propaganda now being conducted in the United States. He requests that the chamber appoint a committee to meet with the National Civic Federation's committee on Russian affairs in order that documentary evidence may be presented to prove the existence of a Soviet program to stir up trouble in every avenue of life where it is possible. The program is prompted not only in the labor field, but in all the foreign-born and Negro groups for the purpose of inflaming them against this Government and American institutions. This evidence shows further that the Soviets are prompting plans for boring into the Army and Navy, the schools and churches — every institution in this country, in short. This is done largely through such organization as the Workers' or Communist Party of America, the Trade Union Educational League, the Children's Section of the Communist International of Youth the American Negro Labor Congress, the American Council for the Protection of the Foreign Born and various other organizations.

Citing a resolution adopted at the recent annual meeting of the National Civic Federation, which noted the "unspeakable effrontery" with which the Russian Soviet government is working for recognition and the establishment of trade relations, Mr. Woll's letter to the American-Russian Chamber of Commerce at Moscow asks that organization to use its powerful influence in demanding and in causing the Russian government to cease the propaganda campaign which it is carrying on in this country. The practical measure proposed as a means of persuasion is the cutting off of credits and loans which the Soviet government is continually seeking here. Mr. Woll says:

"I need only point out to you that any one granting a term of credit on a tractor, mining machine or cotton, may find it difficult to realize that he is helping to finance Communist propaganda here. The facts are that through her exports of manganese, wheat, lumbers, furs, etc., Russia is building up large credit balances abroad which she has to use for the purpose of the raw materials and machinery to keep the country going. If, therefore, she can obtain credit with which to make these purchases a like amount of her foreign balances is released and can be used for propaganda purposes. Therefore any one who grants credit to Russia, even though it may be in forms which cannot be directly used, is opening a way for the indirect use, and that use is quite apparent."

Touching the pocket nerve of the Soviet government may cause a reaction which will check the course of world conquest through subversion.—New York Times.

Decrease in Budget Quotas.

The reports so far received from the dioceses as to what they expect to pay on their budget quotas for 1928 indicate a decrease as compared with 1927 of about $150,000. At its first meeting in 1927, the National Council was compelled to reduce appropriations $254,313. From the figures now in hand, the Council at its meeting to be held February 8, will be compelled to cut appropriations to the amount of $400,000 in order to comply with the orders issued by General Convention in the adoption of the Pay-As-You-Go Plan.

In the hope that this situation may be improved prior to the meeting of the Council, the Presiding Bishop has written or telegraphed the Bishop of each diocese which has told us to expect less than its budget quota figure, urging them to use all possible efforts to supplement the report already made and thus preserve missionary work which must otherwise be sacrificed.

To the Missionary Bishops in the Domestic Field telegrams have been sent warning them of a pending reduction of ten per cent in their appropriations. To the foreign field cables have gone indicating that the cut must be equal to six per cent of their budget appropriations. When it is realized that a large proportion of the budget of these Missionary Bishops is for salaries of missionaries, that these salaries are based on the minimum cost of living and, therefore, cannot be reduced, it is evident that the reductions in appropriations for work other than salaries must be far greater than the percentages indicated. The officers of the Council will recommend, of course, that the first cut, and probably in the largest percentage, will be made in the expenditure at the Church Missions House.

In contrast with this somewhat gloomy outlook it is encouraging to learn that of the $896,942, which the Council notified the Church must be paid in December on the budget quotas, there has been received about $826,000, leaving a shortage of only $70,000. The exact figure being subject to final adjustment. There is good reason to hope that this amount may have been saved by an equal reduction of expenditures and that the year 1927 can be closed without a deficit and without using any of the undesignated legacies. If this happy result is achieved our satisfaction must be tempered with the remembrance that at the beginning of the year 1927 there was a reduction of a quarter of a million dollars in appropriations.

Church Mission of Help.

Church Mission of Help will hold its eighth annual three-day Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio, on February 14, 15 and 16, 1928. Holy Communion will be celebrated each day in the chapel of Christ Church. The sessions and luncheons will be in the Parish House of Christ Church. A cordial invitation is extended to all church workers, interested persons, and representatives from other social agencies. Members of the Girls' Friendly Society, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and diocesan social service commissions are urged to send delegates.

Out-of-town delegates are requested on arrival to register at the Parish House of Christ Church so that they may be directed to such places of entertainment as have been provided.

There will be no sessions on the afternoon of February 14 or the evening of February 15. The Institute closes with the Intercessions on February 16.

Special luncheon will be served each day of the Institute, at one o'clock. The cost will be seventy-five cents. Reservations may be made in advance through the office of the Church Mission of Help, 223 West Seventh Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, or tickets may be secured at the registration desk, Christ Church Parish House.

Delegates are asked to bear in mind that continuous attendance on the sessions of the Institute is desired.

European Tour is Prize for Soul Saving Motto.

Believing that religion can be advertised just like paint or cigarettes, the Lutheran churches are looking for a soul-saving slogan, says The Associated Press.

"It would be difficult to compute the selling power of the florists' 'say-it-with-flowers', the Rev. Oscar Feucht, pastor of Calvary Lutheran Church, of Kansas City, writes in the current issue of the magazine, "American Lutheran".

The "American Lutheran" announces that the author of the best slogan submitted before April 1 will get a free forty-seven-day European tour.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Asserts Liberalism Fails.

Liberalism in religion is a failure, according to the Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Shoemaker, Jr., who preached yesterday at Calvary Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-first Street.

"I challenge any of you," he said, "to find a parish in which the liberal gospel has held undisputed sway for a generation which is now a powerful spiritual factor in the community, a contributor of lives to the mission field, a Bible-reading, Bible-loving congregation, or one where the generality of the parishioners feels a personal obligation to acquaint men with Jesus Christ."—New York Times, January 16, 1928.

Bishop Stires Asks the City to Reform.

Immodesty in dress on the part of New York women, the use of cosmetics by them to a degree that makes it impossible to discern a good woman from others, and postures in dances by New York girls, against which wholesome boys and men are rebelling, were condemned by Bishop Ernest M. Stires of the Episcopal Diocese of Long Island yesterday afternoon in St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street. He said there were those who had already found the bottom of the abyss because of these practices.

The occasion was the tenth annual service of the National Society of Colonial Dames in the State of New York. Bishop Stires, who for twenty-five years was rector of St. Thomas, addressed his remarks to more than 1,500 men and women of New York's old families, including not only Colonial Dames, but delegates from thirty-nine other patriotic societies.

The Bishop also denounced as "an insult to God" the practice in New York of holding Saturday night dances which lasted into Sunday and the giving of dances and amateur theatricals by New York society people on Sunday afternoon and Sunday evening. He said it was the duty of New York to lead in a reform in all these matters.

"Let it be conceded that it appears to be impossible to arouse in all the people, in every part of the country, and at one time that cleanness of vision, that devotion to duty, that unselfishness of purpose which are essential for a prompt moral victory," he said. But a beginning may be made where the good effect would be immediate and far-reaching.

"The effort toward a higher plane of thought, of conduct, of service, of example should begin conspicuously in this city, which in its influence for good or for evil is the most powerful community on the earth.

"In my opinion the general conditions of life in New York City today are such as to prevent our answering the question as to whether this city is to be a great inspiration for a nobler America, or whether it is to be added to the list of those 'to whom much has been given', but in the day of opportunity 'were weighed and found wanting'.

"Do not misunderstand me. There are able men in Wall Street, not a few, who are devoted workers with God for the fulfillment of His wise purposes. There are women well known in the social life of this city, who are the equal of any on earth for ideal womanhood. I am not able nor am I worthy to describe the nobility of character of these women and men, though it is my privilege to know them and to honor them. And yet, as we look over the field, they are exceptional. For the most part they are assembled in God's houses this day, giving their allegiances to God and country, but they are only a fraction of the influence of this city. How shall the other be reached?

"I shall suggest no extensive program. It may be that a preacher of power, of burning directness, could bring us to our knees. But for today I shall urge upon you only two definite courses of action.

"The first is absolute loyalty to your Church. This is a particularly definite way of being loyal to God. Be in your place on Sunday; kneel regularly at the altar; utilize every opportunity for active service in the associations and guilds, making your interest and influence felt, and offer to lead in planning and organizing for some new and needed undertaking.

"There is a second definite suggestion, which touches a subject that causes me more heartache than any other. Do you know that the younger generation is dangerously undisciplined? I shall not go into details. Sometimes they are very unpleasant. And they make right-thinking people very unhappy. Nor shall I name the established conventions which have been frankly discarded, and without which no society has ever survived. I merely urge you to recognize the condition and the peril. More prodigal than your waste of money is the waste of the soul-power of your girls and boys.

"It is idle to regret that you have no influence, as it is idle at this hour to scold for the sins of ten years ago. Your influence must be re-established for their sakes and for yours, for the sake of God and this country."—New York Times.

The Church Club of New York.

The Forty-first Annual Dinner of The Church Club of New York will be given on Thursday, February 2, at seven o'clock at the Waldorf-Astoria, in honor of the Bishop of New York. Other speakers: The Rev. Canon James Gilliland Simpson, D. D., of St. Paul's Cathedral, London; the Hon. Charles H. Tuttle, United States District Attorney. The Bishop of New York and Mrs. Manning will receive in the Astor Gallery beginning at seven o'clock. The price of covers will be six dollars each. Tables for eight or more may be reserved. The dinner is for men and women.

Twelve Hundred Attended.

The Adult Bible Class, which Dr. Phillips has conducted with great success for more than a year, at Epiphany Church, at 9:30 A. M., on Sundays, has been changed to eight o'clock Sunday evenings.

More than twelve hundred men and women attended the class, which met at the new hour on Sunday, January 15. The subject of the lectures at present is "The Parables of the New Testament".

St. Paul's Day.

St. Paul's Day is always celebrated at St. Paul's Church, by a special service and later a reception in the Parish Hall by the members of the parish, when the Bishop of the diocese is present. This year confirmation was planned, and on account of the necessary absence from the city of Bishop Freeman, the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., was expected to administer confirmation in his place. St. Paul's Day marks several anniversaries, including the consecration of Bishop Harding, first Bishop of Washington, and former rector of St. Paul's Church.

Lectures Postponed.

The course of lectures, scheduled to be given at St. Andrew's Church by Dr. Christopher Sparling from January 30 to February 10, has been indefinitely postponed, on account of illness of Dr. Sparling. These lectures were planned as a part of the program of the Department of Religious Education, and were for teacher-training purposes.

The Pre-Lenten Conference of the College of Preachers just ended at Washington Cathedral, was attended by representatives of nine states, with the Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall, Bishop of Vermont, presiding, and assisted by the Rev. George L. Richardson, D. D., of Burlington, Vermont.

Dr. Mitchell is Made Canon of St. Andrew's.

The Rev. John Forbes Mitchell, rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Brooklyn, was inducted into office as canon of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland, at special services held yesterday at St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street. The ceremony was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Frederic L. Deane, Bishop of Aberdeen, and was witnessed by officials of the Episcopal Church. The Very Rev. H. C. Robbins, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, represented Bishop William T. Manning.

Dr. Mitchell is the first priest of the Episcopal Church in America to be received as a canon of St. Andrew's Cathedral. He is a native of Aberdeen and a brother of the late Rt. Rev. Anthony Mitchell, Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney.

As chairman of the Seabury Memorial Committee, 217 Broadway, Dr. Mitchell has been active in raising a fund in this country for the reconstruction of St. Anthony's. Bishop Deane recently completed a four-month tour under the committee's auspices.

Others who participated in the ceremony were the Rev. William Montague Geer, formerly vicar of St. Paul's; the Rev. Thomas C. Johnson, of Floral Park, L. I.; the Rev. Joseph P. McComas, vicar of St. Paul's; the Rev. T. J. Lacey, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, and the Rev. E. Robert Newton, curate of St. Paul's.

Bishop Deane recalled the historic incident which he said linked St. Andrew's Cathedral to the Church in America. In 1783 the Rev. Samuel Seabury, of Connecticut, after his election as Bishop, went to England to be consecrated, but found that, under the English law of the time, a Bishop had to swear allegiance to the English King.

Dr. Seabury then went to Scotland, where at St. Andrew's Cathedral he found "non-juring" bishops, who officiated as his consecrators, thus making him the first Bishop of the Episcopal Church in America. The reconstruction of St. Andrew's by funds raised in America is to be a memorial to this event.—New York Herald-Tribune.

The Bishop's Bricks.

January 14 about three hundred children of the Sunday Schools in this diocese attended the annual devotional and presentation service of the Bishop's Bricks Fund, in historic old St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, and presented to Bishop Garland their Advent Offering. The proceeds of the fund have been designated by the Bishop towards the new mission which the Church has recently started at "Englewood" in the northeastern section of the city near the site of the old Forrest Home.

A Messenger From China.

Fresh from the centre of civil war in China, the Rev. S. Harrington Littell, who has given twenty-five years of his life to missionary service for the Episcopal Church in China, has been in Philadelphia delivering a series of addresses before congregations and groups of Episcopalians on conditions in China. Mr. Littell has gone through three Chinese revolutions, including the recent outbreak.

Appointment.

Announcement has been made of the appointment of Mrs. Brian C. Roberts, of Marlborough, Mass., as assistant to Head Deaconess Gertrude Stewart, at the Church Training and Deaconess House, at 708 Spruce Street, Philadelphia. Mrs. Roberts, who is a graduate of the training school in the class of 1907, is the widow of the late Rev. Brian C. Roberts, who was rector of Holy Trinity Church, Marlborough, at the time of his death. Mrs. Roberts' appointment, which was made by Deaconess Stewart, follows the recent announcement by Bishop Garland of the selection of Deaconess Stewart as Head Deaconess.

Work Among Indians.

January 15, at St. James' Church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Robert Pearsall Frazier, of Rosebud Mission, South Dakota, preached on work among the Indians. Mr. Frazier and his wife are members of a Philadelphia family, who have given their lives to missionary work among Indians in South Dakota, where he is assisting Archdeacon Ashley. The Archdeacon for the past fifty years has lived and worked among the American Indians and has known intimately all the famous Indian chiefs and braves in his half century of missionary service.

The Seventy-sixth Anniversary of the Protestant Episcopal Brotherhood.

Four Bishops participated in the services marking the seventy-sixth anniversary of the Protestant Episcopal Brotherhood of Baltimore, which is a beneficial organization for men communicants of the Episcopal Church. A Corporate Communion of the active and honorary members of the organization and their guests was held on the morning of January 15, at St. Michael's and All Angels' Church, with the Most Rev. John Gardner Murray as celebrant. In the evening the sermon was preached by Bishop Harry J. Mikell, of the Diocese of Atlanta, while Bishop Fiske, of Central New York, and Bishop Helfenstein, Coadjutor of Maryland, also took part in these services. On the evening of the sixteenth, a dinner and reunion was held in the Parish House of the same church. Mr. Wm. Ingle, Treasurer of this diocese, was toastmaster, and the speakers included Bishop Edw. T. Helfenstein, Governor Albert C. Ritchie, and Edward C. Bendery, Esq., of Philadelphia, and others.

Series of Bible Lectures.

The Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, and recently elected Chaplain of the Senate, is conducting a series of four lectures on the Bible at Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore. The dates are: January 13, 20, 27 and February 3.

Final Services in Old Building.

Final services in the old edifice of St. John's Church, Mt. Washington, the Rev. R. S. Litsinger, rector, were held on Sunday, January 15. The present frame church building, which is fifty-nine years old, will be torn down and replaced by a new structure of stone, admirably located in a flat-iron created by the construction of a new road and beautiful bridge which connects with the Failsway, one of the through arteries of the city. Pending the completion of the new church the congregation will worship at the Mt. Washington Casino.

Chinese Church School Gives Dinner.

The officers and teachers of the Chinese Church School of Emmanuel Church, and the Rev. Hugh Birckhead, rector, were guests of the members of the school for a dinner at a Chinese restaurant. There were forty pupils in all, and for each pupil a teacher, which is the practice in such schools. The address of welcome was delivered by Lee Lang, who has been a pupil of the school for more than thirty years. Such Chinese Schools have been a feature of the Christian education of Baltimore churches.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Preaching Mission.

According to plans recently announced at conferences conducted in Washington and Kinston, a diocesan-wide preaching mission covering every parish and mission in East Carolina, will be conducted during Epiphany and Lent. Bishop Darst says: "I consider the preaching mission the most important step that has been taken in the Diocese of East Carolina since I became Bishop." The objectives of the evangelistic movement are to gather souls into the Church, reclaim and restore those who have "lapsed", or have been "lost" and to deepen the spiritual life of the whole diocese. The actual beginning of the movement will be marked by services conducted by the Church Army in the United States in the Wilmington churches and in St. Peter's, Washington. National Crusaders, Bishops and outstanding preachers of the Church, will conduct the services in Elizabeth City, Fayetteville, Greenville, Kinston, and New Bern, and Goldsboro. The local diocesan clergy will hold meetings of eight days' duration in all the other places in the diocese.

SHANGHAI

Rt. Rev F. R. Graves. D. D., Bishop.

Rev. Cameron F. McRae to Retire.

The Shanghai District of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, and indeed the entire Mission in China, is filled with regret by the announcement that within a few months the Rev. Cameron F. McRae, D. D., of Shanghai, will retire from the Mission, family circumstances having made necessary this decision. Dr. McRae has made eminent contributions to all the forms of work in which the Mission has expressed itself. He was for some time the guiding hand in the development of the Wusih station at its beginning. He has served as Acting President of St. John's University, in which he had taught for some years. He has taught also in the Theological School; has long acted as Chaplain to St. Luke's Hospital; has built up a congregation of Americans in Shanghai; has been President of the Standing Committee of the diocese and Chairman of the Synod; and served many years upon the Bishop's Council of Advice. His main work, however, has been in the field of evangelism, where no one has built more solidly than has he. Besides the superintendency of much country work, he brought to the stage of self-support St. Peter's Parish in Shanghai, and then passed on to other and new work. His latest achievement was the creation of a new parish in the French Concession and the building of the noble new All Saints' Church, consecrated last year, which has already attained a prominent place among the city parishes. I recall that during the anxious days of last spring, at which time Dr. McRae was absent on furlough, Bishop Graves took occasion to refer to him as one of the greatest of the steadying influences among the clergy of the District. No one could be more missed than he will be, or more universally regretted. To whatever form of activity in America he may transfer his abilities, he is entitled to take with him the consciousness of fine achievement here, of duty well performed. I can think of no other whose activities have touched the Mission at more points, or been more universally successful.

Annual Meeting of Council.

The Bishop and Executive Council met on Monday and Tuesday, January 16 and 17, 1928. Notwithstanding the hard economic struggle in the anthracite region which covers over half of the Diocese of Bethlehem, the Treasurer reported all bills paid, including the full quota of the National Church and a balance in the treasury.

The Archdeacon, who is the Chairman of the Field Department, reported pledges for 1928 over three thousand dollars in excess of those for 1927. The full quota for 1928 for the General Church work was pledged to the National Council.

The Incorporated Trustees of the Diocese met at the same time and reported a prosperous year. It was voted to increase the salaries of both the Bishop Coadjutor and that of the Archdeacon very materially, beginning with January 1, 1928.

A Fellow's Mother.

Douglas Waddell.

A fellow has a lot of friends
Of boys and girls to play with,
And aunts and uncles that he spends
An afternoon or day with.
I like the folks across the street,
And men with smiling faces,
A daddy's good, so big and tall,
A sister, or a brother,
But one friend is the best of all—
And that's a fellow's mother.

The other friends are nice to know,
To visit and to chatter,
But, oh! you want your mother so
When something is the matter.
Perhaps a finger you may hit,
Because the hammer misses;
Your mother always fixes it
With tape and thread and kisses.
A mother takes the hurt away,
She can somehow or other;
One friend you need; need every day,
And that's a fellow's mother.

If Christ Had Not Come.

The folly of the notion that there are inherent forces that work for the uplift of humanity and the perfection of human society is demonstrated in world conditions before the birth of Christ in Bethlehem 2,000 years ago. A glance at world conditions then and for four centuries before shows the steady decline of the finer things. For centuries the power of religion through its prostituted forms and ceremonials to meet the needs of sin sick humanity and stem the tide of moral degeneracy that threatened to submerge all decency a thousand fathoms deep had been ebbing as blood from a heart stab. Four hundred years even before Jesus was born on earth, Plato had said that only (1) Love to a divine person; (2) the desire for the respect of the good; and (3) the love of moral beauty could reform conditions, and he despaired of such.

When the Angels sang their annunciation song, and the star appeared in the East, four hundred years after Plato, conditions were ten fold worse than when he wrote. The world was seemingly reeling hopelessly to ruin. Earnest, devout souls, here and there, in all but hopeless misery and with aching hearts walked aimlessly on over the cinders and laws ashes of a morally burnt out world.

But suddenly there was a strange expectancy in the air. A new star appeared in the sky and Wise Men of the East interpreted it as fraught with hopeful meaning to the world. Then there was a song in the air. Shepherds heard, saw and understood. Shepherds and Wise Men came seeking the Saviour, the Saviour of the world. What would their feelings have been had the Shepherds found no cradled Christ in Bethlehem? What of the Wise Men had the star failed to guide them to the spot where lay encradled the infant Son of God born to be King in the realm of truth? What would the world have come to without the influence of a transcendent personality? But Jesus was more than a transcendent human personality, more than a great character that should inspire and bless the world as great personalities always have blessed. Jesus was a part of creation's plan. The dormant hopes of the centuries looked to Him. The instincts, moral conceptions and spiritual longings of the world found their origin in the as yet unrevealed Christ. The whole Jewish system was predicated upon Him. The Christ and His atonement were grained into the structure of the universe and inhered in the first atom, running "with increasing purpose" to the final revelation in the fulness of time. In Him, the Incarnate Son, all would find fulfilment.

Analogy is to be found in the world without the physical sun. All life, all power is simply transmuted sunshine. Without the sun there would be no life, no power, and the darkened world would become a horrible charnel house frozen to its center. So without Christ as that to which the world looked before He came and whose coming was the one hope of the world. He is the moral and spiritual light of the world. Without Him there could be no virtue, no morality, no ideals; no sympathy, no love, no self-sacrifice.

Thank God He came. The Shepherds found Him and returned glorifying and praising God. For them henceforth the commonplace is transfigured. Indeed there is no such thing as commonplace. The Wise Men found Him, and worshipped, presenting their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh, and returned with understanding of the true measure and meaning of wisdom—"the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and to know the Holy One is understanding". Simeon and Anna, devotees of the Temple, recognized Him when He was presented in the Temple as the fulfilment of their hopes and dreams.

True the world had no standards by which to measure Him. There was no room for Him in the inn. The Sanhedrin repudiated and crucified Him. But there He lay: the transcendent personality; the incarnation of all ideals; the source of all moral power; the Son of Man and the Son of God; the divine Saviour of the world. Life was made hard for Him. Herod sought to destroy Him. Through the silent years He came, at last appearing as the Lamb of God announced by John. Then there was that wonderful ministry of three short years. He gathered a few followers; lived as never man lived; spake as never man spake; wrought as never man wrought; suffered as never man suffered; died as never man died; rose again, victor, bearing at His girdle the keys of earth and hell; and ascended to Heaven with the scepter of all moral and spiritual power.

He brought everything that is good. He is today the source of all virtue. He inspires all progress. He is, Christ in you, the hope of glory. He is the Way, the Truth, the Life. Gathering around that manger cradle in thought we worship as did Shepherds and Wise Men. To Him we present our treasures. We crown Him. We follow Him. —Southern Christian Advocate.

Learning Who Jesus Is.

A few years ago, one of the best known German scholars, one of the world's great organists, and said to be the foremost interpreter of Bach's music, abandoned the world of letters and of art, and went out to Central Africa as a missionary. The whole world was impressed by the decision of Dr. Schweitzer to leave a secure place in his own country to go out as a medical missionary, paying his own expenses. In one of his books, which provoked considerable discussion, he said of Jesus: "He comes to us as one unknown, as of old, by the lakeside, He came to those men who knew Him not. He speaks to us the same words, "Follow thou me", and sets us to the tasks which He has to fulfil for our time. He commands, and to those who obey Him, whether they be wise, or simple, He will reveal Himself in the toils, conflicts, the sufferings, which they shall pass through in His fellowship; and as an ineffable mystery, they shall learn in their own experience who He is."—Exchange.

The River of God's Presence.

You who wake suddenly in the depth of night, with your heart pounding against your ribs, and oppressed by an appalling sense of some hidden danger; who try to call out for help and cannot speak, and who fear lest you must die, ere you can call. In the midst of those dark hours of terror, the river of God's Presence is flowing unseen, beside you. Stretch out your trembling hand, and sprinkle your throbbing, bursting breast. The tumult and the fear that is choking you will subside; your heart will begin to beat slowly, softly, regularly; the fear and the hidden danger will vanish—and you shall sleep—in peace. For underneath are the Everlasting Arms.

And you who walk all day long amidst small irritating fears that beset every inch of your daily path—fears of your own incompetence, of your inefficiency, of your failing powers of application and success; fears about your body and its functions; fears about your mind and the way it works or refuses to work; fears of infection, of serious illness, of a helpless, hopeless old age. And who seek to hold off these fears a little by all sorts of mental makeshifts—by countings and arrangings and numberings and touchings. Give over these harmful helps. There is only one sure help—one sure release from your servitude. And it lies near at hand. Sit you down, in quiet, by the side of the river of God's Presence.

And, as a boy tosses stones into a pond, so cast your fears, one by one, into the waters of God's love. They will disappear. You shall never see them again and you can walk on, a free man, once more. Only—only, in the future, do not wander too far from the river-bank.

And you who have been, suddenly, unexpectedly, brought face to face with the thought of death; who, after a long life of perfect health, have been abruptly confronted by some serious impairments of this material body; and who cower back, with hands covering your eyes, unable to look at the presence that stands beckoning before you, and clinging, clinging, in ever-increasing terror, to every shred of life and its varied interests. Come—first be a man. Man enough, or woman enough, to stagger as far as the river. Its water has great power for such as you. Drink—And your trembling hands shall fall from your terror-stricken eyes. You shall see death that has been there, before you always, although you would never acknowledge it. But—you shall see it, not as it looked a moment ago, but transformed and transfigured. So transformed that even its name has changed in your own mouth, and as you pronounce it your own ears shall tell you that that name is not death", but "life". So you shall find yourself not facing a blank, hopless wall, the end of everything, but looking forward through a wide gateway into the true beginning. And, like Socrates, standing condemned before his enemies, you shall be "of good hope toward death".

You, also, who are afraid of your secret self, that part of you which the world never sees, but which you yourself know and dread, lying below the level of your conscious thought, and stretching forth its head, every now and then, like a deadly snake in the grass. All your life you have fled from it. All your life you have feared it. And it has grown fat and strong upon your fear. It has been the cause of almost all your unhappiness, of all your failures, of all your disgrace and shame. And so you walk softly through life, fearing its next attack, hoping to escape it somehow—by pretending that it is not there. But often, in the early morning, when you wake suddenly and cannot fall asleep again, the ghosts of all your past unhappiness come back to haunt you, and you see your whole life, past, present and future, colored and poisoned by this one hidden enemy. So you go, all your days, in fear. But for you, too, the river of God's Presence flows close by. Give over with pretense; drink of its waters; and—face your enemy. You shall find it a poor, weak thing, after all. A snake, if you will, but a snake whose poison-fangs have been drawn, and who has no longer any power to terrorize or to harm.

And you—God help and strengthen you—upon whom the black cloud of depression has descended; you whose mind no longer seems to function freely and happily, but is frozen and blocked by constant fear; you who cannot concentrate upon a single line of simple print, cannot make even the simplest decisions of everyday life, and to whom the slightest mental activity is difficult, impeded, almost impossible. You who are tormented by feelings of utter unworthiness, of having committed some unpardonable sin, of having forfeited God's mercy and being eternally cast out from His love. You who seem to be alone—unprotected, unbefriended, desolate—in a land of terror and of unreality. And who endure such intense mental anguish that, in comparison, the most grievous bodily suffering seems welcome and of little account. You, whose inner self seems to be sinking—losing touch, somehow—losing control—losing the power to do or to think anything—except that one thing that you must not do, but that is ever before your mind—tempting you, calling you on, telling you that "This way alone lies peace". For the love of God, close your ears to that voice. If you are so fast bound in misery that you cannot move yourself, beg of some one to lead you to the bank of the river of God's Presence, and sit down there with whomever has guided you, asking that he hold tight—tight to your hand—and with his other hand, give you to drink. And you shall drink, perhaps not healing immediate, perhaps not sudden all-sufficing peace; but you shall drink strength—and patience—and courage. Courage and patience enough to tarry here by the river, until for you the darkness is overpast, and the sun of happiness shines upon you once more.

For there be, indeed, thirsts many and grievous. But of all grievous thirsts, most grievous is the thirst of fear.

And there be waters many, some deadly, some refreshing. But the thirst of fear, there is but one water that refreshes—but one water of eternal healing—the water that flows in the great river of God's Presence, the water of the love of God.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the water.—From "Fear—The Autobiography of James Edwards", by Dr. J. T. Oliver.

Afterward.

Elise M. Baker.

"Nevertheless afterward it yieldeth fruit of righteousness . . ."—Heb. 12:11.

Like a rainbow flashing through our tears,
Or a shaft of sunlight in a cold
Dark room, comes this refreshing word,
God's promised afterward. Retold
When our disasters grieve, confuse,
It is a comforting refrain
That sings exultingly of love
In life's low threnody of pain.

Amid the avalanche of woes
That overwhelms us with such force,
The Tempter's subtile promises
Prove so alluring that the Source
Of light seems suddenly withdrawn;
And in the chill of loneliness
We feel that mercy, too, has flown
And left us struggling in duress.

Then from the depths resounds the strain,
"Nevertheless, afterward".
The glow of His presence soon returns
Our helplessness to curb and guard,
That the germs of good within ourselves
May still develop into sweet
Maturity, and fill our lives
With willing service, grace replete.

Being Fair to the Child.

Elizabeth was a little girl who was brimming over with high spirits and the joy of life. One day when she was about three years of age, on being corrected by a maid for making a room very untidy, she gave a witty but very saucy reply. This was received with shouts of laughter from the family, the members of which repeated it in the presence of the child to all who came to the house. Delighted with the result, Elizabeth never lost an opportunity for a "smart" answer. For some time these sayings continued to be considered remarkably brilliant by her parents and were duly repeated to all who would listen. She was a bright child and was encouraged to "show off" by reciting very dramatically, dancing and playing the piano, and later the violin. It was not long before she began to expect a great deal of attention, delighting in flattery, and consequently her manner soon became objectionable.

One day after giving what she considered a clever back-answer to her mother who had corrected her, she was astonished and mortified to receive a stinging slap in the face. Seething with a sense of humiliation and injustice, she asked the reason and was told she had been very rude. As she had answered only as she had always been encouraged to do, she was quite at a loss to understand the sudden change.

From this time on the slaps became very frequent, and were sometimes administered in the presence of other members of the household. Often the child had no idea she had been rude, and she continually smarted under a keen sense of injustice. Almost unconsciously she drifted away from the mother she had hitherto adored. She was hurt and humiliated repeatedly by having her shortcomings related to relatives and guests, who now condemned her as much as they had formerly applauded her.

"Girls are far more troublesome than boys," the mother would complain, "I'm sure I don't understand my girl; she has changed so. She used to be such a bright happy little thing."

Hearing the remark so frequently the child unconsciously adopted a pose. She was "misunderstood". She became sulky and morbid. The rift between herself and her mother widened, until at an early age she left home, and struck out for herself. She was decidedly gifted and was able to do a dozen things brilliantly but her training had been superficial and she found herself unable to turn any of her accomplishments to a profitable account.

She married while very young. Her own home life still being vivid in her mind, she determined always to play fair with her own children. Her second daughter was named for her, Elizabeth, and developed characteristics so similar to hers that the unfoldment seemed like a repetition of her own childhood. She realized that great care and sympathy were needed to bring out the finest and best in her. The child's quick wit was often directed against herself. Often when corrected little Elizabeth would insist she had not meant to be rude, and the mother knew the child was speaking the truth. Very gently she would point out the mistake of making smart answers at other people's expense, and would teach her the respect due to older people. It took years of careful watchfulness and patience to develop the unaffected, charming Elizabeth that so many people later admired. Those years bound mother and daughter very close together. They were happy years and their happiness endured.—Ruth Valerie.

The Value of Limitations.

If only it were not so difficult; if only the temptations were not so hampering; if only I could get freer from my limitations, how much higher the soul would rise! Are you quite sure? Have you ever seen a kite with a broken string? It is released from the strain that held it to earth, but it does not soar higher and higher, it comes down, broken, battered, to the earth. The very restraining pull of the string that bound it to earth was one element in its flight. Some of us know it is equally true that the tug and strain of the flesh is one element in the uplift of the soul towards God.—W. Charter Piggott.

For the Young Folks

Morgenlied (Morning Song).

From the German by John Gottfried Seume.

Translated by John G. Hellner.

Father, in whose gentle care,
Did I last night so peaceful dream,
That now, refreshed, I gaze on high
And greet the morning's radiant beam!

Where'er I glance I hear Thy voice,
Proclaiming blessings for my good:
Oh! be my first thought of Thy praise
And my last breath my gratitude.

Grant that throughout this day
I happy be in Thy sweet care,
But should misfortune cloud my path
Grant patience, Lord, ward off despair.

Thine hand alone dispenses good;
Send blessings on my humble home;
Let me be kind to every one
And help where'er good can be done.

I know this world's most priceless jewel
Is a heart glad in purity;
Give this to me, I pray, oh God,
Until in peace I come to Thee.

And then, when after Death's dark night
In Thy bright light mine eyes shall see,
Still greater joy may then be mine—
In that far-off land—Eternity!

Good Measure.

He had camped opposite the little, weather-beaten house out on the plains for one whole summer. The doctor discovered the symptoms of an ailment that the clear, pure, invigorating air of the West might help.

If it didn't, there was not much hope.

However, it did help, and, before the close of the season, Allen was very much better.

But, from the little, weather-beaten house out on the plains, so near to his own tent, he received such a harvest of blessings that he could not be grateful enough.

He did not understand very well the art of cooking, and many a nourishing dish came to him to help out the frugal food he had prepared. Fried chicken there was, and baked potatoes, biscuits, light, flaky and brown, homemade bread, honey from the hives, soup and apples cooked in different ways.

Allen realized what all these things meant to him, for he began to gain as soon as the dishes were brought in. Two people lived in the little weather-beaten house—an old man, white-haired and feeble, and his wife, a little, slender, active woman, with threads of gray in her hair.

She was always pleasant and she always smiled. It did not matter if her face were wrinkled; to Allen it became a sweet face and a kind one.

Other things found their way to the tent, too. Cool sheets, clean and white, and soft blankets.

He was sick for a week or two, and it was her nursing that brought him out. Allen did not realize all, but he understood enough to know that it took a remarkably cheerful spirit to keep up under the discouragements the little, active woman faced. Her husband was old and could do nothing. The land that went with the place needed tilling. The chickens that scratched about and the eggs they laid, could not bring enough to buy her provisions for the table.

And yet she was always brave and helpful. Always neat and always busy.

Autumn came, and with it the cold, chilly nights. Allen realized he could not stay longer. He was well enough to go back. Well enough to do a real man's job now. Well enough, as one of his friends said, to hit on twelve cylinders.

He packed up his things almost half-heartedly. More than anything else he was reluctant to say "Good-by" to the little, active woman who had been so kind to him all summer; to the ailing, feeble, white-haired man, who had been his friend.

What would she do if she were left alone? Allen wondered about her, for he could not forget all her kindness to him in his hour of need.

He went back home and picked up the threads caused by his long illness. He could not keep his old friends out of his mind. Their name was Acton, she had told him. Hers was Barbara, his was William.

She had told him, in the course of their friendship that summer, that in her younger days she had not been used to hardships. But long ago they had come to this place and had stayed on, putting money into it until now they were too poor to get away. They got along, she said, after a fashion, but now that her husband was old and infirm, the living devolved upon her.

"I'm only sixy-four, she acknowledged, and that isn't old these days."

Allen looked at her.

He knew women no older than she in homes where nothing was expected of them. He wished she had some security for her old age.

In the months after his return home, he still remembered her. And, then, in the summer of the second year he went back.

He realized, more than he had, the trouble he must have been to her, his gray-haired friend. She must have sacrificed to give him the appetizing dishes she cooked for him. It must have been hard for her to have, him, in a measure, upon her hands.

But how generously she had ministered!

Allen remembered suddenly a certain passage of forgotten Scripture: "I was sick and ye visited me." That was it. That was real Christianity.

He would go back and see how things were with her. He owed her that much.

He found the little, gray, weather-beaten house without any difficulty at the end of a two days' journey. He looked across at his old camping ground. An old cow was browsing on it. It looked as though no one had camped there since.

He started toward the little house.

How quiet everything looked. He wondered if they were both dead and gone. But, no, there were a few chickens there still.

The door was ajar, and he knocked softly.

There was a slow step, and his old friend stood before him. She was a little older, a litle grayer, but she had the same welcoming smile.

"Allen!" she cried, her faded eyes lighting.

"Mrs. Acton!" he cried, as he took both trembling hands.

He sat down in the little living-room and she told him her story. Her husband had been dead these twelve months, and she was left alone.

A wave of chivalry stirred in Allen's heart as he sat there. She had been so good to him when he was sick. The things she did for him were of such importance at that time. The nourishing dishes she prepared helped him to recover. Her kindness and her ministry had given him strength, courage, and hope.

Allen listened until she had finished.

Then he said quietly, for it had come to him what he would do: "Let me stay with you and till these barren acres. I'll plant wheat, and you shall have the harvest."

Allen did not give her time to protest.

"It will be an opportunity for me as well as you. The city is no place for a young man constituted as I am. I love the wide and open stretches. I understand farming. I know that better than anything else. I know I can grow wheat. Let me pay pack."

And so it ws arranged.

He went to ploughing the next week. He had saved some money, and he invested it in the things she needed. Every morning he was up and at his task.

Things in the little weather-beaten cottage took on a new aspect. Allen was at the helm and Allen knew how.

With the wheat in the ground came the cold winds and the snow. But in the little weather-beaten house Allen kept the fires going.

Spring came at last and the wheat was up.

There was little money left, but there was hope.

May, June, and July came and the wheat grew tall. August came, and, with it, threshing-time. Could they hold out until then? But all the time he knew they would.

How busy were the days cutting and stacking the wheat! And, as the number of stacks grew, Allen felt the Providence of it. There would be wheat enough to pay off the mortgage and put money in the bank to the credit of his gray-haired friend. Her future must be secured. As for himself, he was young and could work.

The threshers came, and out of the great machine tumbled the golden wheat—the wheat that was to make Mrs. Acton's old age a golden one, too.

In a certain lull the man at the threshing-machine looked at Allen.

"You put this wheat in last fall, I understand?" he said.

"How came you to undertake so hard a job," the man went on. "You've got results, though, I will say that."

But all the explanation Allen gave was this: "The hard work doesn't matter. Mrs. Acton was kind to me when I was sick."

And then one great and glorious day the wheat was sold. Allen came from town with the check. And, when his gray-haired friend saw it, she wept.

"Oh, Allen," she cried, "I owe it all to you! I had such fear of the future, and I prayed and God sent you. What is it the Bible says? 'Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over'. That is my portion today, because of you. Allen, why did you do it?"

Allen took the thin hand and stroked it.

"You quoted the Bible, and I will quote some too, which will be my answer: 'I was sick, and ye visited me.'"

A Little Boy's Complaint.

I do get so discouraged
When, hungry as can be,
I hustle home at mealtime
An' through the door I see
Shortcake, or peaches, it may be,
A-waiting there for me.

I slip in kind o' quiet,
But sis begins to stare,
An' if I don't move pretty quick
My mother says, "Why, there,
What dirty little boy is that
A-sittin' in the chair"?

Now when my kitty's hungry
You'd be surprised at how
They jump and run to feed her
When she just says "Meow"!
Nor make her wash before she eats—
But you just watch her now!

She scrubs like she got sticky,
As I do when I eat.
She even rubs behind her ears
Until she's just as neat!
If I could wait till after meals
They'd never have to speak.

I think to be a kitty
Would be a lot of fun,
With no one saying, "Willie,
Go wash your face, now run"!
But still, I'd rather wash with soap
Than do it with my tongue!
—Ada M. Stearns, in Selected Poems.

A Good Deed Comes Home.

Carl and Jenny were sitting by the kitchen range looking very sad. It was a perfectly splendid winter morning with shining ice just ready for skating and sliding, and the sun making the air fine and crisp, but it was that same ice that was making the children look so unhappy. They had been invited to Jimmy Dolliver's birthday party, and now they could not go because the horses could not stand up on the road and they had no chains for the automobile.

"Something must have gone wrong," said jolly Burton Dillon, coming in on an errand. Burton was a big boy, and both children thought him the best big boy in the neighborhood. "Nice bright day like this ought to make you feel cheerful."

"We can't go to the party," said Carl.

"And we've got our presents all ready," said Jenny.

Burton whispered a minute with Mrs. Gray and then he said, "Yes, you are going to the party, and it's a surprise how you are going to get there. Both of you be ready by two o'clock and I'll have you there before they play the first game".

At one-thirty along came Burton and he had a curious sort of strap or harness over his shoulders. Also he had his skates dangling over his back.

"All set!" he cried in a big voice. "All right. Pile into your sled and wrap up well. I'm going to scoot you across the pond in no time."

The children had guessed all sorts of plans but had never thought of the pond. Jimmy lived three miles away by the winding road, but only half a mile over the slick, shining pond.

"O Burton, you never can pull us!" they cried. "And besides it will take all your holiday because the party won't be over till five."

"Never you mind about me," said Burton. "Don't you remembtr last summer when those bad boys were trying to steal my dog and you called him into the house and saved him for me? You know when you do a good deed for somebody there is a chance that it will come home to you later on. This is your good deed coming back to you."

"That wasn't anything!" cried Carl. "We wanted to do it. We were afraid they would run off with Jack."

"And I want to do this," said Burton.

"But you are not invited to the party," said Jenny, "and you can't stay outside and wait for us. It will be too cold."

"Now, don't you worry about me, little girl," laughed the big boy. "Of course I'm not invited, but I have an aunt who lives near and I'll have a good time. Now we must start."

How they went skimming over the ice that afternoon! "Isn't it nice to be big," said Carl. "How easy it is for Burton to pull us!"

Burton brought the sled up to the place where the little boats landed in summer, and was about to skate away when Bob Dolliver came to the door. "Hey! Burton! Just the fellow we want to see!" he cried. "Our cousins from Lennox came over, and we're having two parties instead of one. Come right in."

"Goody! Goody!" cried Jenny jumping up and down. "There's your good deed coming home to you. I'm so glad."

"Why, yes, that's so," said Burton. "If I hadn't brought you children over here I'd have missed the party. That's just the way when we do nice things for each other. There seems to be really no end to them."

"It looks that way," said Carl, "but I never thought of it before."—Hilda Richmond, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

The Under-Water World.

Jean and Helen lived on a mountain lake far from other little folk. The lake has another name, but they call it the "Lake of Clear Water". Mountains shelter it on three sides and dozens of little streams rush down to empty into it.

The two girls live in a house-boat. When the winds are still the water is as clear as glass and they can look down into it for ten or twenty feet. They have discovered a whole new world under the water. The bottom in places is covered with moss and the tall water weeds seem like big trees. If they look very closely they can often see fish swimming about.

In the deep water trout with their beautiful speckled bodies dart to and fro, and in the late summer and fall salmon can be seen. They have come up from the ocean to spawn in the little creeks that feed the lake. When they first come into the lake they are a deep bluish color. Then they change to purple and as the spawning time draws near they turn quite red. One moonlight night the little girls were allowed to stay up late to see the salmon jumping. Their dripping bodies shone like silver in the moonlight. It was a sight the children will never forget.

Near the shore great numbers of small fish live. Helen and Jean like to feed them. Have you ever helped to feed the chickens at the farm? Well, feeding the fish is very much like that. They crowd near the top and try to snatch the biggest crumbs. There are dace, which never get more than four or five inches long, little squawfish, baby trout, and sometimes even baby salmon.

Of course some of the crumbs fall past the feeding fish right to the bottom. But usually there is an old sucker waiting to get what sinks past the more active little fish. The sucker has always been known as a scavenger of the lake bottom, but Helen and Jean have given him a new name. They call him the "vacuum cleaner". Indeed, he is very much like one only he draws up water instead of air. He keeps the carpet of moss on the bottom quite clean. He swims close to it and with his mouth sucks up bits of food. The water is strained off through his gills and the food remains.

One day their Daddy called Helen and Jean to watch a stickleback. They knew this little fellow very well, but they had never seen him build a nest. They call him the "Knight of the Waters", because he has weapons to fight with and wears a suit of armor. His weapons are spines or stickles on his back and his fins, and his armor is made of litle bony plates overlapping on his sides. This little knight builds a fine castle for his fair lady.

He spends many days gathering tiny sticks and bits of sand which he fastens together with glue from his body. The nest is all one room, but has two doors so he can go in one way and out the other. This is where the eggs are laid. They are about the size of a pin head and there are several hundred of them. All the time he is building his castle, Sir Stickleback is very much on guard. Let another fish come too close and he will drive him away, even if the other

The Christmas Rose.

Catherine Brooke Tunstall (age 10).

It was a freezing day in December. The snow lay about the highways in great drifts, and the wind howled so that the houses shook; but in the warm mansions of the city folks, the wood crackled in every fire place, great feasts were spread on every table, and merriment reigned over everything, except one place.

On the outskirts of the city in a tottering little shack, lived a poor widow and her three children; there they sat huddling around a scant fire, the mother reading from a book.

"I know a boy who will get a toy on Christmas!" exclaimed Hans, the youngest of the three.

"I know a boy who will get a ball on Christmas!" cried Fritz, who was the oldest.

"But I know a girl who will get a white rose to wear on her best frock," said little Grettel.

The mother shook her head sadly.

Out in the frozen garden, something very queer was happening. A beautiful warm star was shining on an old rose brush, and a beautiful white rose was slowly opening. Soon it was quite wide open, and as it grew bigger, and grew brighter and brighter, and inside was seen a white cradle, with a tiny baby boy wrapped in white linen garments and with a halo of gold around his head.

The next morning the babe was gone, but in his place was a circle of solid gold, which the widow took and bought presents for her children; but the white rose, Grettel wears on her dress to this day.

WILLIAM BAILEY SIMS.

On Friday, December 30, 1927, at "Black Walnut", the ancestral home of the Sims family, in Halifax county, near Clover, Va., entered into life eternal, WILLIAM BAILEY SIMS, son of William H. Sims and Sallie J. Wilson.

He was born in 1856 at "Black Walnut", the birthplace of his father and grandfather. In early manhood he married Miss Annie Ruffin, of Wilson, N. C., who, with three children, Janie and Annie Ruffin Sims, of Richmond, Va., and Dr. William B. Sims, of Washington, D. C., survive him.

To know him was to love him, for he was genial, kind and courteous. A devoted husband and father, a loving brother and a true friend; possessed of many traits of character which endeared him to those who came in contact with his life. He was for many years a regular attendant and an interested vestryman of St. Luke's Church, Clover, Va.

After a protracted illness he "fell on sleep" and was laid to rest in the family cemetery adjoining the old home.

"The strife is o'er, the battle done,
The victory of life is won,
The song of triumph has begun,
Alleluia!"

ice each Sunday afternoon during the summer.

A schedule of such services has been arranged for the coming year, from July 1 to September 10, inclusive. This State Park is being made more attractive and accessible each year, with a corresponding increase in visitors. This chapel, too, is the only non-Roman place of worship for miles around. The diocese is to be congratulated on having this chapel; its importance cannot be too highly estimated.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

Cornerstone Laid.

Elizabethtown, Pa.—On the first Sunday after the Epiphany, Bishop Darlington, assisted by the Rev. Charles E. Berghaus, Vicar, and Mr. Albert Judd, of Harrisburg (representing his father, the Rev. A. M. Judd), laid the cornerstone of the new St. Elizabeth's Church. This mission was started in 1911 by the present Vicar, who at that time was rector of Mount Joy. The ground for the new church was broken last November, and the building operations have proceeded as satisfactorily as anticipated.

New Parish House.

Marieta, Pa.—A new parish house was recently opened for St. John's, Marieta, the Rev. Charles E. Berghaus, rector. The new building, exclusive of equipment, cost about $5,000, and represents the biggest achievement of the parish in a great many years. During the incumbency of the present rector new life has been infused into the parish. Among the organizations are a strong Chapter of the Order of Sir Galahad, and a Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society with forty members.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop.

The Diocesan Council.

The ninetieth annual Council of the Diocese of Louisiana will be held in Lake Charles on January 25 and 26.

On Wednesday at ten A. M. the Council will open with a celebration of the Holy Communion, with sermon by the Rev. Dr. G. L. Tucker. Immediately afterwards the Council and the Auxiliary will assemble for organization. At 7:30 P. M. the Council assembles to hear the Bishop's Annual Address. Then proceeds the election of Standing Committee, and the delegates to the General Convention, to be held this year in Washington, D. C. This Convention should end the revision of the Prayer Book for our Church. The Standing Committee assist the Bishop in matters pertaining to the diocese, very much as the cabinet does the President of the United States, and is a very important body.

On Thursday there will be Holy Communion, and Council and Auxiliary convene at 9:30 with sessions until one P. M. lunch, and resumes 3:30-5:00 P. M. and 7:30 P. M., to adjournment.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Luther A. Cook, formerly rector of Holy Trinity Church, Wallace, Idaho, has accepted a call to Grace Church, Nampa, Idaho, with address at 307 Twelfth Avenue, South, Nampa, Idaho.

The Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., rector of the historic Calvary Episcopal Church at Fletcher, near Asheville, N. C., will leave his parish for New York on January 18 to sail on the "Scythia" on January 25 for a three months' trip in Europe, Africa and Asia.

ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. Davis Johnson, rector of Christ Church, Towanda, Pa., was ordained to the priesthood on December 15, 1927, by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, LL. D., Coadjutor of the Diocese of Bethlehem. Although Christ Church is eighty-six years old, this was the first ordination held within its walls. The act created much interest in the town and vicinity. A number of the ministers of the churches of the community were present, as well as a large congregation. Clergy of the Church were present from Troy.

The Rev. Mr. Bennett preached the sermon and presented the candidate. Mr. Johnson served most of his diaconate under Mr. Bennett in Christ Church, Williamsport. The Rev. Mr. Walter read the Litany. Mr. Day was the epistoler and Mr. Stowell the gospellor. The Bishop celebrated. All of the clergy joined in the laying on of hands.

Mr. Johnson was in business up to a few years ago. He is now selling the Gospel, he says, and applies the same energy and tactics as good business demands.

In Emmanuel Church , Baltimore, Md., the Most Rev. John G. Murray, D.D., Bishop of Haryland, advanced the Rev. Harry S. Weyrich to the priesthood on December 4.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead of Emmanuel, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown of Baltimore. Mr. Weyrich will continue on the Emmanuel clergy staff, where he spent his diaconate.

On December 19, 1927, in Holy Apostles' Church, St. Clair, the Rev. Messrs. Alan Henry Tongue, of Christ Church, Frackville, and Henry Grant Mershon, rector of Holy Apostles, were advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Sterrett.

The Rev. J. C. Ayer, Ph. D., of the Philadelphia Divinity School, preached the sermon. Dean Howard W. Diller presented Mr. Mershon and the Rev Franklin Joiner, of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, presented the Rev. Mr. Tongue. The Epistle was read by the Rev. Fred D. Johnson, of Tamaqua, and the Gospel by Mr. Briggs, of Shenandoah. The Rev. Dr. Archbold, of Ashland, read the Litany. The Rev. Mr. VonFossen, from the Church of Faith, Mahanoy City, was also present and united in the laying on of hands. Clergy from the Russian and Greek Orthodox Church were presented, but took no part in the service.

The new priests were lately graduated from the Philadelphia Divinity School. They served their diaconates in their respective parishes and will continue their services as priests. The work is prospering under their administration.

In St. David's Church, Bangor, Pa., on November 30, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, D.D., Bishop coadjutator of Bethlehem, advanced the Rev. Frederick Thomas Trafford to the priesthood.

The Rev. John W. Schmalsteig of Bethlehem said the litnay; the Ven. H. P. Walter read the epistle; and the Very Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson, Dean of the Pro-Cathedral, preached the sermon.

Mr. Trafford is the Y. M. C. A. secretary of Lehigh University at Bethlehem, and serves St. David's Church, Bangor, on Sundays.

In St. Luke's Church, Mechanicsburg, Pa., on December 11, the Rt. Rev. James Henry Darlington, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg, advanced the Rev. Stuart Franklin Gast to the priesthood. The Rev. A. M. Judd of Harrisburg read the litany; the Rev. George D. Graeff, of Chambersburg read the epistle, and the Rev. Harry G. Hartman, of Lancaster, read the gospel. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Allen R. Van Meter, of Philadelphia.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. John H. Schwacke, of Freehold, N. J., and has been appointed vicar of Mechanicsburg and neighboring missions with address at 8 East Keller St., Mechanicsburg.

was organized in 1816 for the sole object "of encouraging a wider circulation of the Holy Scriptres, without note or comment". In 110 years it has issued 174,121,599 volumes of the Scriptures.

This world-wide organization engages more than three thousand Christian men and women, who carry the Scriptures forth to the people of their respective races, selilng at cost and giving freely to those too poor to pay.

During 1925 the Society issued 9,214,423 volumes of the Scriptures in over 150 languages. This is considered a creditable achievement, but our efforts must be multiplied many times if the needs of the world are to be met.

Financial support of Christian people make possible this fundamental work of girding the globe with the Gospel.

His Will.

"'His will be done,' we say with sighs and trembling;
Expecting trial, bitter loss and tears:
And then how doth He answer us with blessings,
In sweet rebuking of our faithless fears.

"God's Will is peace and plenty and the power
To be, and have, and best that He can give;
A mind to serve Him, and a heart to love Him;
The faith to die with and the strength to live."

"It means for us—all good, all grace, all glory;
His kingdom coming and on earth begun,
Why should we fear to say 'His Will—His righteous,
His tender, loving, joyous Will—be done'?"

—Annie Johnson Flint.

He Met Me More Than Half Way.

A Swede by the name of Anderson, smitten with the "white plague", came to Southern California to regain his health. In his heart he held a deep-seated hatred for the church and the ministry because of a wrong he claimed he had suffered at the hands of a preacher. The home missionary pastor found him, but all his efforts to remove Anderson's prejudices brought forth only curses. One morning the missionary was so oppressed with thoughts of Anderson and of his spiritual condition that he could not study. He left the house and went to the home of the other man.

To his surprise Anderson was helpless in his bed, he had been working at his trade as watchmaker ever since he came to the city, having his bench in the front room of his home. As he saw the pastor enter he exclaimed, "I can't do any work today". The pastor answered, "I did not come to have work done this morning; I came over to talk to you about your soul". Immediately the sick man burst into tears, crying, "It's no use, it's too late; I've committed the unpardonable sin". The pastor sat beside him and said, "Let me read you a story", and he read him the account of the wandering son and loving father found in the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke, calling the attention of the sick man to the fact that the father ran toward the boy and not from him. After a short prayer he left. Returning the next morning and entering the room, Anderson greeted him with a joy not born of earth, his face "like the face of an angel", exclaiming, "He met me more than half way".—Home Missions.

Jesus needs His friends now just as much as He needed them in the long ago. I am sure we can find Him and be with Him and bear witness for Him in the teaching and preaching service of His Church, for He has said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them". I think Jesus must often be lonely in His Church because His friends are not there.—J. T. Stinson.

"There are two good rules which ought to be written on every heart:—Never believe anything bad about anyone unless you positively know it is true; never tell even that unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary; and remember that God is listening while you tell it."—Henry Van Dyke.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

It may not be the things we get so much as the things we give up that mark our real gain.

"There is no worship of God without work for men."

Men worship God by their motives in going to church as well as by their manner when there.

Circumstances may abase, but only sin can debase you.

Nothing punctures pride like a thorn in the flesh.

You can never froget the people who forget themselves.

Those who have suffered most in this world may in the life of the hereafter realize gloriously that it has been worth the cost.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

What you possess at your death will belong to another; but what you are will be yours forever.—Van Dyke.

Little do we know how we wrong the praises of God, or allowing them so narrow a room as we usually do, while we are copious enough in our confessions and petitions.—Richard Baxter.

Force is never more imposing than it is seen held in check by something even greater than itself.—Rev. G. H. Preston.

Error is none the better for being common, nor truth the worse for having lain neglected.—John Locke.

Lord, bless our Church, and help to arm
Our preacher's soul with might,
To charge the sinful ramparts of My empty pew at night.
—Michigan Christian Advocate.

The great secret of real advancement in the Christian life is, to bring the greatest motives against the smallest sins—to hurl the whole Heaven, so to speak, against some one little temptation, and crush it by the power of God. —Selected.

Christianity is not primarily a philosophy, but a crusade. As Christ was sent by the Father, so He sends His disciples to set up in the world the Kingdom of God. Hence when Christians find in the world a state of things that is not in accord with the truth which they have learned from Christ, their concern is not that it should be explained, but that it should be ended. —Olydham.

"What is the greatest temptation of a busy purposeful Christian? Is it not the temptation to take his life into his own hands and carve out a career of service for himself instead of being willing to search out God's plan for him and follow that? Especially when the work we want to do is good work, we find it hard to realize that our carefully thought out plans may not coincide with God's purposes. But the only success for a Christian is to learn what God would have him do, and to do that to the limit of his powers."

ANCIENT MODERNISM

"Many theologians whom much learning had made mad and who grew dizzy while elevated on the pinnacle of Reason and Philosophy, and lost themselves in the labyrinth of their speculations, have discovered their folly and, like humble penitents, have returned to the plain, simple doctrines of the Gospel and now proclaim those saving truths with all the power of their erudition and with all the fervor of their hearts warmed over by the love of God. Thus, things are taking a favorable turn. Rationalism is losing ground. Many who a few years ago had exalted Reason on the throne and made it sit in judgment on Revelation and the things of God that far transcended its circumscribed capacity, have come back, wept bitterly over their errors and are effectively fighting in the cause of Calvary.

"Let those divines of our country who also have departed from the simplicity of this Gospel and speak and write so much about rational Christianity and Biblical views and, in maintenance of their barren dogma, appeal so often to the literati of Germany, imitate the example."

The above was published in a Philadelphia secular newspaper of July 20, 1827, more than one hundred and one years ago, as coming "from a gentleman now in Germany".

Germany then was the home of the Rationalism cult, corresponding, in many respects, to the modernism of now, which spread far and wide and became quite fashionable. As will be noted, some of the clergy of this country had adopted it and evidently they were quite as vociferous and energetic as their imitators of today, made just as much noise, attained just as much publicity, caused just as much alarm among timid people. In a newspaper of about the same time rumors of heresies and disaffections had flown so widely that Elias Hicks, leader of one branch of the Quakers, found it necessary to publish a statement denying that he had repudiated belief in the Virgin Birth and reasserting his faith.

More than a century after all these busy assailants of the "plain, simple doctrines of the Gospel" were proclaiming and expounding and striving to lead others in their labyrinths of speculation and worship of Reason and when they are long dead and forgotten, the "Bible belt" continues, churches are being built, the believers are numbered by scores of millions and make the dominant influence and governing power in the dominant countries of the world. Judging the future by the past, we may faithfully believe that a century hence the modernists of this time will be where the rationalists of 1827 are, that Christianity will have gained even faster than it has gained since 1827 and the "Bible belt" will more than ever extend around the earth.

MALINES CONVERSATJONS

THE Report of the "Malines Conversations" between Anglican and Roman Catholics held under the presidency of the late Cardinal Mercier, caused widespread comment upon thaeir publication in England recently. In Toronto, Canada, the papers gave several columns to it and from the Toronto Daily Star we give the following from our esteemed contributor, Dr. Dyson Hague:

REUNION IS HOPELESS, VIEW OF DYSON HAGUE.

There is no more chance of the Church of England going over to the Church of Rome than there is of the Baptists joining the Presbyterians, stated the Rev. Dr. Dyson Hague, today, giving his opinion of the Malines conference, reported in yesterday's papers.

"The general public must not be deceived or misled by the report of the so-called Malines conversations, or imagine that because a few very eminent, able, and even brilliant Anglicans, have thrown out signals to the Church of Rome, therefore the Church of England as a Church is in the slightest degree going to be affected by their action or actions," he said.

"Three of these men have been notorious Anglo-Catholics, with strong leanings towards Rome, and though a great body of extreme High Churchmen have always protested against Rome's claim, there can be no doubt that a man like Lord Halifax, who has been at the back of this movement, is far nearer to Rome than probably even a majority of the English Anglo-Catholics.

"No one questions their sincerity, their earnestness, or the courage of their conviction, but union with Rome is simply a term of misguided men. For one thing Rome won't bend an inch. Rome won't yield one jot or one tittle. What sign has Rome ever given of compromise, conciliation, or official friendliness of approach? Rome's attitude has ever been 'No reunion without complete surrender'. Cardinal Newman found that out. Cardinal Manning was its notorious champion.

Speaking for Selves.

"It is all very well for these eminent Anglicans to agree to certain points, but they were speaking absolutely for themselves. Take, for instance, the point which says that by consecration the bread and wine become the body and blood of Christ, that is to contradict most violently the teaching of the Church of England.

"To say that the sacrifice of the Eucharist is the same sacrifice as that of the Cross is to use Roman Catholic and not Anglican language. In fact it is not the teaching of the Church of England that there is any sacrifice of the Eucharist in the Romish sense, for there is no sacrificing priest (sacerdos) in the system or teaching of the Church of England.

"To speak about the use of the 'sacrament of penance' and sacramental absolution is to use words that are unknown in the Church of England, and to make a comparison between the system of the confessional, which is almost the cornerstone of the whole Roman Catholic system, and the absolution in the 'visitation of the sick' is positively absurd.

"As to the supremacy of the Pope it appears that the rest of the Anglo-Catholics took almost as strong opposition as the only non-Anglo-Catholic, if not Protestant, Churchman among them, the Rev. Dr. Armitage Robinson, whose presence with the others has evoked not a little wonder among many English Churchmen.

"In fact the whole Malines episode reminds one of the deputation of English ecclesiastics that years ago went over to interview and fraternize with the Eastern Church in Russia. They gave such a fine and catholic exposition of the Anglican position that the Eastern bishops said, 'What you say agrees with all that we say and believe, but we have read your prayer book and your articles, and what you say does not seem to agree with them'.

"As a matter of fact it can be absolutely stated that the Church of England does not teach transubstantiation, which is contrary to its whole historical and doctrinal existence. It was in protest against it than Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer died as martyrs for the principles of the English Church.

Trusts England.

"In the next place Rome never will and never can allow Anglican orders. The papal bull of Leo XIII. made that clear. As to papal infallibility, it is doubtful whether any reasonable or responsible body of Anglicans or Englishmen would ever accept it. The decree of papal infallibility of July, 1870, shut the Pope forever out of England. We can trust the common sense of England. We can trust the Christian common sense of the English Church. A Church redeemed by the grace of God and by the blood of the martyrs from the errors and superstitions of the centuries and liberated by the freedom wherewith Christ set her free, can never go back again to the yoke of bondage."

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

"IN THE WORLD YE SHALL HAVE TRIBULATION."

JESUS is here speaking to His followers. The followers of the world and pleasure and self do not come within this characteristic of His followers. This is the Lord's own forecast of the stormy crossing which every one must expect who "takes up his cross daily". But He does not leave us to the violence of the waves or the madness of the people. He forewarns us, on the contrary, for it is a forewarning which here He gives, so that we may know what to expect, but He forearms us with the assurance of His presence and peace: "These things have I spoken unto you that in Me ye might have peace." "In Me." Here is the centre of perfect repose and the secret of all true peace—the peace of God which indeed passeth all understanding.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation." This is inevitable. There are many things which threaten our safety and mar our communion. There are terrible forces which assault the soul. There are ceaseless tumults which seek to disturb our serenity, but through all this tumult and strife of tongues, the message of God's peace breathes its benediction upon the soul, and as we listen to the voice of the Son of God and respond to His loving call we find the shelter of His side and we enter into the calm of peace.

In all places and at all times, the peace of God will garrison our hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.

God never guarantees immunity from trial but He does grant us strength to endure.

He does not take us out of the world but He keeps us from the evil.

He does not ask us to quit the world but He does provide armour to withstand "in the evil day".

He never promises the removal of the thorn in the flesh but He does say, "My Grace is sufficient for thee".

Let us then, as good soldiers, as good Churchmen and Churchwomen, as God's children, with glad hearts and grateful songs turn away from the din of distracting things, that we may find peace as we "dwell in the secret place of the Most High and abide under the shadow of the Almighty".

> Peace, perfect peace! With sorrow surging round?
> Yes. On Jesus' bosom naught but calm is found
> Peace, perfect peace! Our future all unknown?
> Yes. Jesus we know and He is on the Throne.

Have you ever noticed in this Hymn; how it asks the question, as it were, "Is it possible"? Perfect peace, with sorrow surging round? And then supplies the answer with a calm assurance and certainty. Peace belongs to God's control of us. It is in spiritual uplift that we find peace in Christ. No one outside of this can understand that peace. It is because it is between God and you, and only those "who trust Him wholly find Him wholly true".

AN APPEAL TO YOUTH

THE explorer, Stanley, in 1875, taught an African king, Mtesa, his first lessons in Christianity. He wrote in his Journal at that time: "Oh! that some missionary would come here!" Desirous of appealing to the Christian world at home, he wrote a letter asking for workers, the theme of which was, "Here, gentlemen, is your opportunity"! The letter was entrusted to a Belgian officer, making the journey home from the land of King Mtesa in Uganda. That officer was murdered by natives, the letter was found on his body, forwarded to England by General Gordon, and published in "The London Daily Telegraph", on November 15, 1875. One week later (they wasted no time in those days) The Church Missionary Society of the Church of England accepted the challenge, enlisted helpers, and in April 1876, Alexander Mackay with co-workers, started on the long journey to Uganda. . . . After eight years' work, there were thirty-eight Baganda Christians. . . . In 1927, in the whole protectorate of Uganda, there were 500,000 Christians. The Church of England has 2,000 places of worship, a great Cathedral, native clergy, six hundred schools, and 176,000 scholars. This great work is the result of the response of the Christian Church to the appeal of a great explorer.

There are today, similar kings in the far away non-Christian world awaiting your help. Are you, young men and young women, willing to offer your lives to give the priceless truth which you have in the Christian Gospel? This booklet presents the actual needs of the overseas work of the Episcopal Church in the year 1927-1928.

How the Unsettled Condition of China Affects Mission Work.

Our mission work in China has been greatly affected by the present revolution. Large numbers of our workers have had to leave their posts. No exact forecast can be given as to when workers will be needed in this field, for no one knows when it will be possible for the full work to be resumed there. The Church, however, immediately should be receiving offers of life from the choicest young men and women who desire to throw in the weight of their influence for the future up-building of a great, Christian Republic in China.

(The China needs can only be approximated. It is striking, however, that this approximate estimate calls for eight in Anking, fifteen in Hankow, and twenty-six in Shanghai, a total of thirty-nine.)

The following posts will have to be filled when work is resumed:

Anking.

Four clergymen (merely to replace those who have retired).
One teacher, man, at St. James' Boys' School, Wuhu.
One medical missionary, St. James' Hospital, Anking.
Two trained nurses, St. James' Hospital, Anking.

Hankow.

Two clergymen, Hankow and Wuchang.
Two teachers at Boone University, Hankow.
Three doctors, Church General Hospital, Wuchang.
Two evangelistic workers, Hankow and Ichang.
Two teachers, women, Hankow.
One doctor, woman, Church General Hospital, Wuchang.
Two trained nurses, Church General Hospital, Wuchang.
One Pharmacist, Church General Hospital, Wuchang.

Shanghai.

Five clergymen, at Shanghai, Yangchow, Paoying.
Six teachers, men, Shanghai, Soochow.
Four medical missionaries, men, Shanghai, Wusih, Zangzok.
Three Evangelistic workers, Shanghai, Wusih, Zangzok.
Four teachers, women, at St. Mary's School, Shanghai.
One doctor, woman, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai.
One hospital technician, woman, St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai.
Two secretaries, Shanghai, Wusih.

Who Should Apply?

Those who are in vigorous health in the early years of life, free from the responsibilities of home and family; not those desirous of seeing the world, but those eager to serve humanity.

The Future.

These posts call for immediate response from persons now qualified by study and experience in the work of their chosen calling. It should be emphasized, however, that year after year with changing variety, similar posts are open of which these are typical. Young persons now preparing for their life work may well have in mind the possibility of offering themselves for future needs.

As the risk of repetition and dealing in negatives, it should be clearly understood that these posts call for consideration from young persons free to go for a considerable period of years.

Short terms do not avail to allow the acquisition of a difficult foreign language or the understanding of a new race with the necessity of complete readjustment to difficult climatic and social conditions. The ideal is a desire to offer for possible life service. Those who have best served abroad know that an entire life is all too short for the important work of assisting in interpreting Christ to people who can only be brought into the Kingdom of God through slow stages of growth.

A difficult question is at what age persons are acceptable. Generally speaking, the most favorable age is before one reaches thirty.

Correspondence should be addressed to the Rev. A. B. Parson, Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

AT THE TOMB OF BISHOP SATTERLEE IN BETHLEHEM CHAPEL, WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL.

By Elizabeth Ellicott Poe.

O Master Builder of this Christian shrine,
In golden deeds you traced a promise fair:
That, high above the city, there should rise
The towered Fane, and, lo! I see tonight—
In beauty rare against the western skies—
God's story writ on stone in Gothiic rhyme.
How His Cross glorifies the glowing Apse—
Sign of a nation's faith, a witness that
Your visions and your dreams are realized
In soaring line and lacey pinnacle
The things you dreamed, we see, and day by day
The living stones of service shape the pile—
The dream was yours, the realization ours—
Your faith has been our beacon all the while,
New strength comes to us as we ponder here
The prophecy you made in other years,
That there should be on Holy Alban's Hill
God's House of Prayer for all who know His Will.

O Poet Bishop! sweet should be your rest
In this, the rich fulfillment of your quest!

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson.—No. 20.
Topic.—Assurance, or The Believer's Security.

(Commit to memory John 5:24; note carefully the threefold assurance.)

Believers should never question their own salvation. To do so after we have sincerely received the Lord Jesus as our Saviour, is dishonoring to God's Holy Word. The Christian life is a warfare (Eph. 6:10-18). If our salvation depended upon ourselves, we might well question our standing, at times, for as believers passing through a world that lieth in wickedness, there is great liability for defilements; hence the Divine provision for constant cleansing (1 John 1:9; 2:1; Eph. 5:26).

Sin interrupts fellowship with God, while confession restores it. Persistent sinning will result in chastisement and loss of rewards, but the true believer, after being born into the family of God, is still a son. The purchased redemption made on Calvary is not a matter of repetition, but "once for all" (Heb. 10:14).

A study of the following Scriptures will readily clarify this important subject for us:

The Believer's Sins.

1. Laid on the Lord.—Isa. 53:6.
2. His own self bare them.—1Pet. 2:24.
3. Removed far away.—Ps. 103:12.
4. Remembered no more.—Heb. 10:17.
5. All blotted out.—Isa. 43:25.
6. Forgiven.—Col. 2:13.

The Believer's Security.

1. None of them is lost.—John 17:12.
2. Justified by His blood.—Rom. 5:9.
3. Kept by power of God—1 Pet. 1:5.
4. Never perish.—John 10:28.
5. Having begun, will perform it.—Phil. 1:6.
6. Sealed, after ye believed.—Eph. 1:13.
7. He is able to keep.—2 Tim. 1:12.
8. Nothing can separate us.—Rom. 8:38, 39.
9. Members of Christ's Body, each with its peculiar function.—1 Cor. 12:12-27.
10. Hid with Christ in God.—Col. 3:3.
11. The Adam nature no longer reckoned against us.—Rom. 5:2-19.
12. Already "accepted in the Beloved".—Eph. 1:6.

What If a Believer Sins?

1. We have an advocate, Jesus.—1 John 2:1.
2. If we confess our sins—Forgiven.—1 John 1:8, 9.

What If We Fail to Confess and Continue Negligent?

1. Loss of fellowship.—1 Cor. 10:21.
2. Chastened of the Lord that we be not condemned with the world.—1 Cor. 11:31, 32.
3. Miss a full reward.—2 John 1:8.
4. Miss all reward.—1 Cor. 3:15.
5. Miss abundant entrance.—1 Pet. 1:11.
6. Miss the Lord's "well done".—Matt. 25:21.
7. Have crowns taken away.—Rev. 3:11.
8. Ashamed at His coming.—1 John 2:28.
9. Body destroyed to save the spirit.—1 Cor. 5:5.
10. Yet saved as by fire.—1 Cor. 3:15.

Behold what manner of love the father hath bestowed upon us."—1 John 3:1.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND THE WORLD

By Kenneth Mackenzie

THE comprehension of the scope of the Spirit's working is apt to be clouded in the minds of many, because of the emphasis upon His relation to believers. But we must observe that such relation is the precursor to a definite ministry which has been entrusted to us by our Lord Jesus.

Do we see anything in His words uttered in that memorable prayer (John 17:9), "I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast given me"? And why not pray for the world? Has His great heart of love been frozen? Are we to think of Him as devoted only to the elect few who are called by His name? Why, then, did He commission them to "preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15)? Why, as He predicted, the enduement of the Spirit, did He command them to begin at Jerusalem and witness to Him unto the uttermost part of the earth (Acts 1:8)? No. The Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world (John 1:29), is intensely concerned for the world. Only such an One could give us John 3:16. Only such an One could inflame a selfish bigot like Saul of Tarsus with the passion to preach the Gospel (1 Cor. 9:16).

Something lies beneath this strange statement of John 17:9. If we look into the depth of His heart, we shall see it. He had said (John 17:4), "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do". And on the cross He uttered the exultant cry as the testimony to a well-completed redemption, "It is finished" (John 19:30). In all this His prayer life had been outpoured, even to the interceding for His enemies (Luke 23:34). Now, another period of service is opened to Him.

If we turn to the Epistles, we shall find that His ministry at the present is for His own. "He is head over all things to the Church" (Eph. 1:22). "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. 3:3). "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, but into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us" (Heb. 9:24). Briefly, we may determine that He is our representative before His Father; and as such the Church has always held Him. Our hymns are frgarant with this sublime truth.

Now, can we not see that as He is our representative before His Father, we are His before the world? If He is committed to the ministry of intercession in our behalf, we are committed to the ministry of intercession for the unsaved. The measure with which we value His appearing in the presence of God for us, should be the measure of our concern for a lost humanity. He is faithful. Are we faithful to Him in this charge? For He has turned the world over to us. That is why He does not pray for the world. He should not need to, if we were loyal to the trust. Can we see Him in our spiritual vision beholding a careless, worldly Church, and saying, "Oh! if they could know what is being sacrificed by this neglect"? Are we needlessly stretching the truth by this paradigm?

To understand the Holy Spirit in relation to this ministry of the saints for the world in which they are the representatives of their Lord, we discharge our minds of the prevalent notion that God is partial to some and indifferent to others. Some He loves and cares for; others are beyond the pale of His thought. So long as we make our God a veritable despot, indulgent towards some, intolerant towards others, the right concept of the Gospel evades us. The very presence of the Holy Spirit in the world is to contradict this tendency to degrade and dishonor Him. He is in the world today to inspire men and to pour into their lives the very wealth of the divine compassion. He cannot do otherwise and be His true self. We should cherish every thought of Him which magnifies His great-heartedness. For He is the soul of the universe; as vast as all space; as intimately related to the need of the most abject being within the compass of His presence, as to the might and majesty of the most exalted angelic order.

The object of this appeal is to create in the hearts of those who read it a vital hunger for souls. For only as we apprehend the profundity of His matchless compassion, can we see with His largeness of vision stand with Him in the estimate He maintains for "all souls". Soberly thinking, we may well ask ourselves, How do I care? A limp and lazy Christianity is indifferent; such an estate can be marked by the condemnatory satire of the Apostle, "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die". God help us in this hour of apathy and complacent unconcern. The call is here, as the Spirit is, that souls are laid upon our hearts by our gracious Lord as a charge from Him.

Shall we accept that charge or relegate it to others?

But we must have some motive, surely, ere we assume this solemn obligation. He would not ask us to do anything which is not consonant with all that He is to us and all that He would do for us, and through us. In the first place, then, let us ask ourselves, Do I really prize my own salvation? Am I assuredly a saved man? Have I the testimony in my heart that I am walking in newness of conduct? Do I sincerely know the Lord Jesus? Is what I am and what I possess quite worth commending to others? And do I love them enough to cherish their having it, too? Am I sufficiently responsive to the behest of the Holy Spirit to permit Him to inflame me with His own burning zeal? Am I living the life of the Lord Jesus by His inspiring and energizing?

Surely we can see that this is no appeal to a canting religiosity. It is a vital matter. These things are so or they are not; they cannot half be and half not be. We are compelled to face the entire problem, not part of it. The Lord Jesus must be everything to us or He can be nothing. We may carelessly drift along, holding to the faith, hoping for eventual deliverance from the condemnation of an accusing conscience. Such as that we may be, and not lose our eternal salvation. But what a cowardly attitude, in view of what we have considered as our true calling to be ambassadors for Him. Courage, men, and divinely sought strength for valor and achievement. He waits to crown us with the panoply of conquest.

Then, we are to appraise our appointment to this life of intercession and service for a lost world on the basis of His own estimate of the value of a soul, by deeply appreciating the place and disposition in which men may be found. They are what they are as the result largely of birth, education, environment and impulse. If we are grieved and antagonized by the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism; if we are sincerely shocked over the formation of the Society of Damned Souls, let us be lenient. Back of the present attitude lie factors of which they may be ignorant, who profess an attachment to such a movement, one or more of which are due to the elements enumerated. It may take a deal out of us to love such people; but that is the province of the Holy Spirit to do. And He desires nothing so much as to give to His own His very thought of those who oppose themselves. If He can be grieved (Eph. 4:30), it may be more that He finds so little fellowship with His own in His universal throes of desire for the lost, than that such a lost condition exists.

Shall we take from Him His own perspective? Shall we offer ourselves as the media through which He shall love the world? May He, that Holy Spirit of promise, look through our eyes and breathe with our spiritual breath, the unfathomable tenderness that lies deeply unexpressed, for want of us; touch with our hands and reach with our dedicated personality, through service and especially through prayer, unfeignedly offered, this great world for whom our Lord would not pray, that we might accept that exalted ministry.

Then shall we dissolve all racial animosities or apathies in the blending of His love and our own; look cherishingly upon those who hate us, as He would have us do; find in the life of intercession the fullest joy of fellowship with Himself; reach out to the far corners of the earth and claim them as our very own, because they are His.

TWO-FOLD OBJECT OF PUNISHMENT

PROBABLY there are some people who imagine that punishment of crime is merely for vengeance. Getting even with a murderer by killinlg him, or her. But this is far from the object of punishment, as applied in modern times and in civilized lands. Punishment has a two-fold object, and the first and most important is the removal from society of one who is objectionable; dangerous and deserving of no freedom, having violated the laws and become an enemy to the people. The second object in punishing criminals is to deter others, who may be inclined towards wrong-doing, through illustration of the possible fate awaiting followers of evil ways. It is, of course, to be regretted that society must set up regulations and laws for the protection of man against man. There is no written law in the jungle; but humanity is given to tolerance, and undertakes to sway the impulses towards good deeds through proclaiming a penalty for evil.

And since the laws are made, for the protection of society and to warn the wicked and endeavor to keep the minds of the weak from going astray, it should be the general impulse to uphold the laws. Every wicked man or woman hates the law. It is something set up to keep them in check, and they transgress knowing that their discovery may lead to trouble. The surveys and inquiries made in the past years prove that the average criminal is intelligent and often well-read. He knows just what he is doing, and goes ahead, hoping to outwit the law. And then, too often indeed, having become entangled in the web of crime, he miserably endeavors to avoid the penalty set against his offense. And unthinking crowds, stirred by curiosity and then a sickly sentiment that seems to have no foundation in good sense or justice, surrounds the offender and assists in clouding the atmosphere of the courts.

The New York Evening World recently said: "No matter how brutal and deliberate the murder, on the eve of punishment many of the thoughtless among us consider only the murderer. They forget his crime. They forget his victim. They forget the misery he may have brought upon others yet alive. They forget the danger to society that lurks in any other man who has reached the point where he would kill if he dared." Here are the two points of crime punishment brought prominently forward. The criminal is a menace to society, and should be removed from the possibility of carrying forward a career which has no justificasion or desserts, and his punishment be made to serve as a warning to others, who are criminally inclined.

The World adds that our laws long ago outgrew the idea that vengeance was the primary reason for punishment. The punishment often takes form of restraint, where the offender may have time and opportunity to reflect upon things which brought him to prison. Where capital punishment has been prescribed it should be regarded as the means of putting away men or women who have forfeited their right to live among their fellows; even a right to exist in servitude alone. In some countries the murderer ends his or her life in prison, and the object served is the same as execution here. But the prison sentence in American courts frequently result in a relase in a short time, and the official records go to show that time and again these offenders are found later at their vicious practices.

Punishment should be prompt and rigid for offenses against the people, and the criminal should have merely the opportunity for setting up a plea of justification—if that can be argued. Avoiding the penalty of the law through feigning insanity is a miserable, contemptible subterfuge, and juries swayed by this most untenable defense are a menace in their position and unworthy of confidence. The insanity plea that the killer called Hickman is setting up deserves no consideration; he has been shown a criminal from early years, and had his deserts been given would have been removed from society before he could have killed and mutilated the little Parker girl. Punishment is not vengeance; it is protection for the people—protection even for the silly and the senseless who endeavor to interfere with the administration of justice.—Jacksonville Times Union.

THE REVEREND PEREGRINE WROTH, D. D.

"Therefore to thee it was given
Many to save with thyself;
And, at the end of thy day,
O faithful shepherd! To come,
Bringing thy sheep in thy hand."
—Matthew Arnold.

On December 9, 1927, at 2:30 P. M., after fifty-one years of faithful labor in the Church of the Messiah, Baltimore, the Rev. Peregrine Wroth ceased his earthly course and passed into Immortal Life. His illness was mercifully brief and he died as he had lived—trustfully, peacefully, safe in the hands of his Master.

Dr. Wroth was born in Kent County, on the Eastern Shore, in 1848, of an old Maryland family. He was educated at the Virginia Theological Seminary and ordained Deacon in 1872, and Priest in 1873 by Bishop Whittle. In 1876, after a three year ministry in Virginia, he came to Messiah, which was even then an old parish but had just become a "free" church under the Rev. C. C. Penick, and was already surrounded by business. When the Rev. Mr. Penick became Bishop of Cape Palmas, Africa, the work fell upon Mr. Wroth and for fifty years he bore it nobly. In 1880 he married Miss Mary A. Counselman, who has shared in the joys and trials of all the years of his rectorship. Even the destruction of the church in the great fire of 1904 did not stay his enthusiasm, for Messiah was rebuilt upon the same site. Not until 1922 did business finally prove too great a handicap in maintaining a down-town church. The property was then sold and the present splendid group of church buildings arose five miles out, at the corner of Harford Road and White Avenue, combining with St. Andrew's Chapel, but continuing the old name of Messiah and the traditions of both congregations.

The long rectorship of Dr. Wroth was notable chiefly perhaps for the close contact he maintained with his parishioners. Seldom has a clergyman been so devotedly loved. He was in great demand also outside his parish in his ministrations. In his fifty years as rector he performed more than nine hundred marriages, 1,400 baptisms, 1,600 burials, and presented 1,500 for confirmation. In the diocese he held practically every important office in the gift of the convention, including membership on the Standing Committee, Delegate to the General Convention, Secretary of the Diocesan Convention, and Archdeacon of Baltimore. For many years he was Agent and Vice-President of the Corporation for the Relief of Widows and Children of the Clergy.

In the religious life of the nation he will be remembered as having inaugurated the noon-day Lenten services, now so popular. For more than thirty years Messiah was crowded with men at these services.

In 1925, the work of the church proving too heavy for his increasing years, the present rector was called as Associate-Minister, and in June, 1927, Dr. Wroth resigned and became the honored Emeritus. For the five months preceding his death, he was present in the chancel practically every Sunday and continued to preach the first Sunday of each month and to call on his old friends as usual. Hardening of the arteries brought on a heart attack in December, and on the ninth of the month he died at the age of seventy-nine, honored and beloved. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Counselman Wroth; by two sons, Peregrine Wroth, M. D., of Hagerstown, Md., and Lawrence Wroth, of Providence, R. I.; by two sisters, Miss Martha Page Wroth and Miss Eugenia Lane Wroth, of Westminster, Md., and a nephew, the Rev. Pinckney Wroth, of Washington, D. C.

The body lay in state in the church on the morning of December 12, at the foot of the chancel steps, embowered in the flowers sent as loving tributes, while hundreds of his friends from all over the city passed by the bier. The funeral services were held in the afternoon amid a congregation which crowded the church to the doors. It is a tribute to his friendship and love for mankind, which knew no barriers of class and creed, that Episcopal clergy, Protestant ministers, Jewish Rabbis and Roman Catholic priests, joined in his final service, praising God for his life. The choir was augmented by many members of the old choirs of the church and by the St. Cecilia Guild. The service was one of Christian triumph, the whole chancel banked with flowers, and Easter hymns rolling forth their message of hope and victory. The Burial Office was read by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Church, the Rt. Rev. Edwin T. Helfenstein, Bishop Coadjutor of Maryland, and the Rev. Sewell S. Hepburn, of Kent County, Dr. Wroth's oldest friend. Forty of the clergy of the diocese were present in vestments and formed a double file through which the cortege passed from the church. The Vestry and Wardens acted as Active Pallbearers, while the Honorary ones included: Mr. Blanchard Randall, the Rev. Edwin B. Niver, Mr. W. W. Chipchase, Mr. J. Arthur Boehm, Mr. Fred. G. Boyce, Jr., Dr. Harvey Beck, the Rev. Pinckney Wroth, Mr. El Alan Lycett, Mr. Edward Guest Gibson, Mr. Edward Nichols.

The interment in a vault at Loudon Park Cemetery is temporary, for the Vestry have decided to honor his memory by burying him within the Church to which he devoted his life. The present beautiful church will thus stand as his monument, and his name and memory will be forever linked with his beloved parish. The details of the plan will be announced later by the Vestry.

HOLINESS BY FAITH IN GOD

AS the phrase of Miss Havergal's hymn denotes, our holiness is to be by faith in Jesus. This simple fact is so important that it demands clear and careful exposition.

The late Mr. Evan Hopkins never wearied of drawing a distinction between a seeking faith and a resting faith, and he constantly pointed out that faith not only seeks, but claims. We are to claim holiness as a definite promise of God. All the promises of God are Yea and Amen. They are given to the believer through faith in Christ, but it is necessary that the possessions should be claimed. The believer has to appropriate that for which he was appropriated by Christ Jesus.

This is clearly understood in regard to justification. Every Evangelical Christian knows that he was justified by faith. "By grace are ye saved through faith." And yet there has always been a tendency to neglect faith with regard to sanctification. The holy life is interpreted in terms of struggle rather than of rest.

This means that those who are seeking the life of holiness should look back for a moment to their early experience as penitent sinners. When they were convicted of sin, and heard the call of Christ, they made their surrender in simple faith. In a flash, they were conscious that their sins were forgiven. They had peace with God. They rose up from their knees with a new light shining upon their faces. They wanted rest and they pleaded Christ's promise, and they found it fulfilled in response to their cry.

This is exactly what happens with the blessings of holiness. Just as we receive justification by faith, so are we to receive sanctification. We take God at His word, claiming the promises and possessing our possessions.

What, then, is the difference between a seeking faith and a resting faith? A seeking faith comes to the Scriptures of truth in quest of victory and power: a seeking faith prays for the overcoming life. On the other hand, a resting faith begins by uttering praise to God for all that Christ is to the soul, and claims Him in all His fulness as a present Possession. A seeking faith assumes that the blessings of victory are in the ultimate future; a resting faith claims the privilege in the immediate present.

It should be pointed out, moreover, that a resting faith rests upon the promises of God, and not necessarily upon the immediate realization of the blessing. A resting faith is not led away by the absence or the presence of feeling. Having claimed the power which is in Christ Jesus, we can well leave the full realization of that blessing to the future. Enough for us that we have believed the promises of God, that we have claimed the deeper rest, and that we have praised God for answering our prayer.

It is of the utmost importance, also, that the believer should learn how to appropriate the spiritual blessings that are in Christ Jesus. "To as many as received Him to them gave He the authority to become the children of God." Faith is not only the eye that sees, but the hand that takes. "According to your faith be it unto you."

What a joyous prospect this opens out for those who will take God at His Word. They need not wait for some more favorable opportunity. They may claim complete victory here and now. Their empty vessels may be filled: their burdened hearts may be rested: their enfeebled wills may be strengthened. In a word, it is possible for each believer, through faith, to say with the Apostle: "I have been crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me."

Yet another important distinction should be observed. It is the privilege of the believer to go on to know the Lord. His capacity for spiritual blessing is to increase. The vessel will be enlarged. There is, therefore, a difference between capacity and reception. But all the time the same principle of faith is in operation. As our capacities increase, faith is still to receive. Our faith, like the faith of the Thessalonian believers, is to "grow exceedingly". What we obtain in faith is to be maintained by faith. We are to live by faith. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith." From first to last, we are to live the faith life. In the moment of the greatest surrender we may feel that our life is filled to overflowing, but as we grow in grace we shall find our capacity increases, so that we are able to receive more and more until we are filled "unto all the fulness of God".—Reprinted from "The Life of Faith", London, England.

"WILL ROGERS FINDS FLORIDA NEEDS NO SYMPATHY NOW."

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Jacksonville, Fla., January 22.—I never like to pick on anybody when they are down. That's why I have laid off the Democrats, and for over two years I have not told a joke against Florida. I knew the people and I felt sincerely sorry for them.

But I have just seen the state and noticed the condition down here now, and my sympathy is getting back to the old envy again. With this climate and this close to sixty million people, Florida needs the sympathy of no one, and the jokes of no one can hurt it. Game people, these Floridians! But you can afford to be game when you know you've got the goods.

A SHORT SERMON FOR THE NEW YEAR

And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.—St. Luke 2:21

I HAVE recently heard, three successive Sunday nights, radio sermons from the pulpit of one of our own great city churches, in neither of which did I hear (occasional static interfering, however) the Name or Person of Jesus mentioned. The last of the three was the Sunday before Christmas and concluded with "a bit of theology", in which the preacher declared that every one in whom the "Spirit of Christmas" should find expression was, ipso facto, "profoundly religious". No reference to the fact of Christmas nor to Him who was born in Bethlehem! These three preachers were no doubt seeking, broad-mindedly, to commend their message to the vast radio-listening public.

In those exigent days, when we were involved in the World War, we heard urgent appeal, from our Bishops and other clergy among others, that we should all participate in the allied effort on the basis of "The Ideals of Jesus". It was felt to be necessary to find common moral ground on which all elements of our American population might stand. The Name; the Person of Jesus is challenging and divisive.

In more recent days, we have many forms of community effort and organization; Community Churches and the like, in which again common ground is sought through a vagueness which easily makes itself as catholicity. Harold Bell Wright, in "God and the Groceryman", waxes fanatical for the destruction of all existing forms of Christian organization and the erection upon the ruins there of Community Churches, devoted exclusively to "The Teachings of Jesus". Dr. Galpin's "Empty Churches" has but one solution of the rural problem in religion: Community Churches. What community is there that does not contain its element of people who, calling themselves Christian, are offended at the cross; at the authentic Jesus of the Gospels?

We hear of a Conference on Liberal Evangelicalism which appears, in the meagre reports that have come to us, to urge "The Spirit of Jesus" as a substitution for the historic confession of the Creeds. True, the Christian religion must be interpreted to this present age and modes of thought, but interpreted, not reduced to vagueness. For, whatever the changes, Jesus Christ remains, Himself, the same yesterday, today and forever. Nobody desires to be illiberal, but we must beware how we seek to give away that which is the very substance of our trust. "Every enthusiastic Modernist," says the Rev. H. D. A. Major, D. D., in his just-published "English Modernism", "expects Modernism to make the Christian religion universal." The Rev. F. J. Bloodgood, reviewing this book in The Living Church, concludes: "He (Dr. Major) is yearning for 'simpler thoughts and a purer faith'. I am curious to know by what simple thinking Dr. Major is able to separate, in the Christian sense, faith in the Person of our Lord from faith in His incarnation, death and resurrection."

Now comes the New Year, with its commemoration in the Church of the first significant event in our Lord's earthly life: His circumcision and the giving Him a Name, according to Jewish custom, which should describe His nature and function among men. "A name which is above every name, that at the name of JESUS every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth—" For all of us who seek inclusion, here it is offered us! Our evangel is entrusted to us. The Christian Church exists specifically to "preach Jesus". Our clergy, in all three Orders, make solemn and explicit declaration of purpose to lead in the performing of this corporate function. However, therefore, this present age may differ from any that has gone before, it is not time for making equivocal separation between His ideals, His morals, His teaching, His spirit—whichever term you prefer—and His historic Person. Such a course may, indeed, obtain a temporary inclusion, along special lines, of some or many who reject Jesus as Saviour and may win wide popularity with theosophists, modern-minded Hebrews, Unitarians, any and all of the fraternal orders which are founded on the Christian ideal. Such organizations have their place and usefulness. It is a real service to invoke the ideals of Jesus in this age of materialism. But the Church has her place and usefulness which is distinctive and upon which the perpetuation of even the ideal depends. She is the body of Him who embodies the ideal. She flies the banner of a Name which embraces in its gracious purpose every person in the community, old and young.

If it seems possibly desirable to secure the adherence to the Church of the mere idealist we must go much further than these programs that have been mentioned. We must abandon the whole theology of the Incarnation. We must abandon the Sacraments and a very large part of the liturgy. Otherwise we shall find, as we do find, our friends praising perhaps our broad-mindedness and then turning away from Church to other forms of organization that are not so encumbered.

We are about to enter upon the second year of the Crusade of Evangelism. What is our evangel? Where lies the power to move this new and complex Church machinery. "Ye shall be witnesses unto ME," said the Risen Lord, when you have been "endued with power from on high." It is His Name, through faith in His Name that is capable of making this twentieth century whole.

The Great Commission

UNIVERSITY OF CHINA.

November 10, 1927.

Dear Friend:

The letter following is a reprint of a letter mailed in 1926 to about two thousand China missionaries, to which several responded with checks, and no single letter came, as I remember, questioning the statements made.

I know of no change of attitude since then on the part of any Church, or Mission, or school, except it may be for the worse. And since the letter sets forth a situation, it is reprinted and a copy sent you in the hope that it may awaken your interest to an active participation in our effort to stand for the Orthodox Christian faith in China. Should one say that since schools sometimes go wrong therefore he will not help to build another University in China, might it not be answered that consistent action upon this principle would stop all religious work, since Churches have gone wrong, too? We trust you will help our schools.

Sincerely,
Chas. W. Rankin, President.

August 18, 1926.

Dear Friend:

The purpose of this letter is to bring to your attention some evidences of a situation that it is hoped may serve to enlist your cooperation in building and maintaining the University of China as an orthodox school in China.

First. Dr. Hugh W. White, appointed by the Bible Union of China chairman of a committee on educational institutions, says:

"Of the fourteen colleges and universities built up in China with mission funds, if there be one that stands true, we do not know it, and of the thirteen theological institutions, four can be depended on. There are, however, numberless primary and middle schools true to the faith."

Second. So far as the knowledge of the writer goes, it corroborates Dr. White.

Third. The writer has just returned from a trip of four months in the States. There Dr. W. W. White and his brother, at the head of White's Biblical Seminary, New York, announced themselves to the writer as not opposed to evolution, and they defended this theory. Their school has heretofore been considered conservative. Hitherto, apparently, preachers mostly, from liberal seminaries, have defended evolution. Now representative laymen are beginning to do so. The Southern Methodist General Conference last May reelected practically a full quota of Modernist officials for the next quadrennium, the former liberal records of these officials being well known. Northern Presbyterians, Northern Methodists, and Northern Baptists, are apparently largely under Modernist leadership. Southern Baptists in their Convention "resolved" strongly for orthodoxy; but they refused to allow an attack upon a leading Modernist, and they remain partner in the Shanghai-Baptist College. The Southern Presbyterians remain associated in the Hangchow Presbyterian College, and in the seminary at Nanking with its Modernist learnings and reputation.

Assuming that Dr. Hugh W. White's view of the conditions in the colleges and universities as given above is correct; and further assuming that the attitude of the leaders of the denominations named is as is indicated, with probably a similar trend on the part of other denominations, and are we not driven to the conclusion that it will be a very difficult, if not practically a hopeless task, to try to make the present mission colleges and universities in China soundly orthodox again, soon? To make them orthodox would either call for a revolution in the faith of such missionaries—and generally missionaries do not easily change their faith—or it would necessitate the recall of these missionaries by Boards of whom at present this may hardly be expected with reason.

Then what is to become of the next generation of students—the future leaders in China, when their only hope for getting a higher education in China is to attend upon the instruction given in unsound schools? Can we as orthodox missionaries stand guiltless in the Judgment if we fail earnestly to try to make provision for a soundly orthodox school to which students can be recommended?

The University of China, so far as is known, is solitary in its effort to provide a higher school in China that stands for the fundamentals of our faith. May it not hopefully seek your support? Modernists are determined, are aggressive, are cooperating. They work together, and help, and support each other. Cannot the orthodox be as mutually helpful?

We approach questions differently, and not all might at first view favor a Fundamentalist University, though they might very strongly desire a Bible School alone. But the question might be suggested to those of this viewpoint, as to whether in the future the Fundamentalist preachers would not find support or response difficult to obtain if the lawyers, and the doctors, and the school teachers, and the business men were made evolutionists and modernists along other lines, in the unsound schools which were all that the missionaries had provided for them. Should not the faith of the doctors, and of the lawyers, and of the school teachers, and of the business men be conserved during the impressionable school period? If their faith be once wrecked, can it be easily restored?

There are about two thousand missionaries members of the Bible Union of China. There are other sound missionaries not members of the Union. If each would now give at least $10 for land and buildings for the school, a substantial amount would at once be realized. In the face of this exigency in the school life in China, will you not kindly try thus to help?

The work of our school has just been presented in the States in a way that it is believed, with God's blessing, will yield help. But the united assistance of friends in America and in the East is needed to meet the requirements of establishing a strong school.

Trusting that you will generously send your check to help the school, and assuring you that your prayers also will be appreciated, we beg to remain.

Sincerely, in the struggle for the Faith of our Fathers.

University of China,

Book Reviews

THOMAS MARCH CLARK, A MEMOIR: By Mary Clark Sturtevant. Edited by the Rev. Latta Griswold, M. A. Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis.

The long life of Bishop Clark, stretching almost across the nineteenth century, is full of interest. The mere fact of ninety-one years of busy, consecrated service of humanity in the work of the Church is worthy of note. A life that was reaching full manhood in the great reform period of the "thirties" and during the struggles and expansion of the "forties", a life that was matured when the storm clouds gathered in the "fifties" and the Civil War raged in the early "sixties", is worth a study. It was a life that was ripened and sweet during the last quarter of the century and passing out into a golden sunset when the first years of a new century were beginning to roll by.

In his last pastoral letters the dear, old Presiding Bishop urged his clergy to a deeper spiritual life, a real Christ-like life of daily practice and surrender to the will of God. "God calls us into being to serve Him, and in so doing to build up a holy and elevated character, and this constitutes what we call religion. A religious man is a complete man, ready and furnished for every good work. For one to say that he has never taken any interest in religion is to say that he does not care for the purpose for which he exists."

In 1894, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of Bishop Clark's consecration, Dr. Huntington, of Grace Church, New York, in the presence of several distinguished bishops, read a poem written by himself in honor of Bishop Clark. The last two verses were as follows:

Yes, far and wide, through little Rhody's realm,
They know you for the very man you are—
A pilot trusty at the Church's helm.
Sure follower of the Star.

They know you, all th' unlettered and the wise,
The rich, the poor, the simple and the "smart";
And, what is best (one reads it in their eyes),
'Tis knowledge got by heart.

Bishop Clark was an author and lecturer. For ten years he sent a weekly letter to the New York "Ledger" showing much genius in his selection of subjects, live topics for the day. One of his lectures was repeated three hundred and fifty times. He wrote his brother, Samuel, in 1863, when he was delivering his lecture on "The Living Machine", "I am on a lecture tour! Woe to him who invented the system. Tonight I repeat the 'Living Machine' for the one hundred and sixth time. Poor old machine"!

He had a keen sense of humor and wrote very humorously at times. Some of his stories and addresses for children were very vivid. One he told about a party the Man in the Moon gave to all the heavenly bodies. The Sun was invited, of course, and as he approached the heat became intolerable and the ice cream began to melt, the music evaporated and the dancing stopped. A polite request was sent His Majesty to back away. This made the Sun very angry and he withdrew to such a distance the cream became solid, the music froze in the air and the guests began to leave. A good natured Comet was present who allowed his tail to be set on fire which furnished heat enough to carry on a while longer. The music melted and all were happy.

Bishop Phillips Brooks said of him after he had passed into the life beyond: "How many souls he has comforted! How many wandering sheep he has brought back to the fold! How many perplexities he has relieved! How many souls he has lifted to a serener atmosphere and rescued from the contamination of the World and the Flesh! How many he must have found waiting for him in Paradise!"

THE SUFFICIENCY OF JESUS: By the Rev. James Austin Richards. George H. Doran Company, New York, N. Y.

This is another book of sermons, very good sermons, notably the first, which gives the title to the book. The Book is well written, the sermons short and suggestive and adjusted to modern thought. The author recognizes that "no other generation in human history has had to adjust its thinking to so many new facts from so many different quarters in so short a time as has ours".

The book is worthy of a reading, but at the same time we remember that good books are pouring from the presses, some notable ones and a few pre-eminent even in noble company. Life is short, so why study any but the best!

FAR BETTER.

By Elizabeth M. Bruen.

Far better with my feeble hands,
To work for Him who died,
Than to have failed to serve at all
My Saviour crucified.

Far better with a trembling voice,
To speak Christ Jesus' name,
Than to have lived for self alone,
And gained an earthly fame.

Far better lift a flickering torch
Up to a clouded sky,
Than never to have guided those Who might have passed Christ by.

Far better give to Him my all,
However small it be;
Then I shall live with Him I served
Through all eternity.

OTHER SERVICES OF THE LIVING CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:

That was a magnificent tribute that my friend (and father-in-the-Gospel), the Rev. Josiah R. Ellis, paid to Mr. Morehouse of The Living Church. It is certainly a fine service that he has achieved to make his company invaluable to the Church. Not many are able to be "right on the spot" when needed.

But there are two other services which my friend failed to mention as valuable contributions to the welfare of the Church. One was when the "Living Church Family" was appealed to to give money and clothing to relieve the Church people, who were made desolate by the terrible flood. In response, clothing was sent until Mr. Kearney, of New Orleans, cried "enough"; and thousands of dollars were sent to help others, and to restore damaged church buildings.

And the second thing is, that splendid editorial in the issue of The Living Church on January 14, in which he not only showed that Transubstantiation has not a leg to stand on; but that even the Romanists defend it almost as a kind of necessity, and seem not to be sincere in expressing belief in it.

Mr. Morehouse certainly has won his way by openness, courtesy and directness. But I would not like to believe that he had forced Virginia, or any one else, to pray for the dead! And I am just wondering where a simple-minded person like me comes in who NEVER fails to include in his prayers those dear ones whom he has "loved long since and lost awhile"! BUT they are NOT DEAD! They have only gone just a little ahead of me, and are perhaps more alive!

R. R. Claiborne.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH AND THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Mr. Editor:

The Episcopal Church, during the days before the War Between the States, in an indirect manner, accomplished a far greater work, both in the interest of the colored race, and the country, than is ordinarily appreciated. Just mention two things: Long before the birth, and operation of the various Christian denominations, in the colonial period, the Church, through the S. P. G., instituted the first educational system among this people, and sent forth the very first Negro teachers in this country. This stream of education once started, it is utterly impossible to calculate its far-reaching effects for good. In the second place, before the war, "the great house" was the centre of education, from life, of the best of the colored race. Possibly, the great majority of the owners of "the great house" were Episcopalians. It was this contingency, of the colored race, who became the leaders of the race following the close of the war. Now what I want to say, although I dare not trespass on your space to any great length, is, the Episcopal Church possesses, at present, a great opportunity which it is slow in utiliizing. I guess it is pretty much the same in other dioceses, as in Maryland. In this diocese, there is scarcely a colored church, of any denomination, that is not open to me for an Episcopal service and sermon. The Church ought to make it possible for a number of strong and capable preachers, of the race, to avail themselves of this open door. I have in mind in such visitations nothing but the preaching of the simple Gospel. But this of itself creates a favorable atmosphere for the Church, and establishes a sympathetic contact, whereby the resident white clergyman, of the Church, in a particular community, may be able to form a "Bible Class" among a colored group. In time, from such a sympathetic approach, and the interest and enthusiasm awakened, the desire for a colored Episcopal church in that community would be made manifest. If we cannot reach the masses of the race directly, we ought to reach them indirectly. We must sow before we can reap. Neither one of us, black or white, can see the Master's face, unless our brother be with us. Lest we forget, the Spirit bids me write this message to the Church.

THANKS TO THE CLERGY AND LAITY.

Mr. Editor:

Of your courtesy will you permit us, now that our visit to America is concluded, to express our warmest thanks to the Clergy and the Laity of the American Church for the gracious welcome and the overflowing kindliness with which we have been everywhere received.

As is well known, we came to America from the Scottish Episcopal Church to renew the memory of that ancient and impenetrable tie which binds especially the American Church to the Church and the Diocese of Aberdeen; and to ask of American Church people that they should build in Aberdeen a memorial shrine to perpetuate throughout the generations the historic fact that America's first Bishop was consecrated in Aberdeen by Bishops who were ready to do what at that time the Church of England couldn't do and dared not do.

On every side we have been greatly encouraged by the sympathy and the good will and generous response with which this appeal has been received. We are leaving, wherever we have visited, committees who will see to it that their diocese or their state does not fail to have an appropriate share in this memorial. We have no doubt whatever, that the scheme will be now carried to fruition, and that within a few years we shall have in Scotland a building quite unique in the British Isles, gathering within its sacred walls an epitome of the history of this great republic and of the American Church. This gift from America to Scotland will be welcomed by our people with gratitude and pride, and it will mean to us something more than the perpetual reminder that under the good hand of God, Scotland had its part in the building of your Church, though indeed that memory is cherished as a large part of our honor and renown. But, it will stand for more than this. It will stand as a witness to that movement which is of so momentous importance for the welfare of the world and in which, on either side of the Atlantic all our best hopes and our best endeavors are engaged, the promotion of closer understanding and closer fellowship between our peoples, so that seeking the same great ends of righteousness and peace, and inspired by the same great aims and principles, they may stand together in the fulfilment of their destiny.

To that cause, God helping us, we purpose to devote our lives.

Yours faithfully,

Frederic,
Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney.
Henry Erskine Hill,
Provost of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen.

FOR VITAL CHRISTIANITY.

Mr. Editor:

I note that "The Churchman" looks upon your journal as first a "tragedy", and now, in a more recent number, as a "comedy". Have you read the astounding editorial entitled "Missionary Atheism" in the number for November 26? It was sent to me marked with blue pencil. While the editor and his correspondents have not the least sympathy with you, who are standing for vital Christianity and the standards of your Church, they actually make a semi-apologetic for the notorious Four A's! This proves the down-grade tendency of Modernism. Look at what it says about Ingersoll, who was one of the most bitter and caustic opponents of Christianity. Well, I am going to give this editor some notice in a forthcoming number of "The Bible Champion".

Meanwhile God bless you! Keep on in your courageous way. Do not let the scoffing of the Modernists daunt you. You have a good conscience in that you are loyal to your baptismal covenant.

Mr. Editor:

Greetings to The Southern Churchman. I find nothing so good for Sunday reading, and enjoy its good "old-time religion". I am an old lady, raised in the Episcopal Church, and congratulate you on being in the same fold. Christmas blessings for you and The Southern Churchman. God bless you.

Pope Leaves Only One Door Open To Reunion With Rome.

Rome, January 10 (By The Associated Press).—Protestants and all others dissenting from the Catholic Church must return to Rome if they really wish a union of all Christians is the substance of a Papal encyclical to the episcopacy of the world, issued today. There is no safety outside the Roman Apostolic Catholic Church, Pope Pius XI repeats once more.

During the pontificate of Benedict XV prominent American members of the Protestant Church came to Rome to induce the Pope to send a representative to a conference for a union of the Churches. The Pontiff received them cordially, listened to them with great attention, but answered, in effect:

"There is nothing we desire more ardently than a union of all Christians, but this can be obtained only in one way—by the return of the wandering sheep to the fold."

Restates Church's Stand.

In this, the first encyclical of the new year, the Pope, restating his Church's age-long stand on the union of Christians, emphasizes that, while it is good to cultivate charity among Christians, it should not be done to the detriment of the faith on which that charity is founded.

The Pontiff, recognizing the tendency among peoples toward better international union, deplores that "some seem to wish to transfer it from the political to the religious field, thus blending the true religion with the false, holding all religions equally good and praiseworthy".

Emphasizes Apostolicity.

"God the Creator is also the Revealer to man of the way in which He wishes to be honored and served."

Insists on Unity of Faith.

Pointing out that those who deny this unity of faith and government of the real Church of Christ, and who desire a union through accord on a few points, "fundamentally", the Pope says that would be leading truth into error and into bargaining and human transactions, which would be treacherous and against which the Roman Church always has resisted and continues to resist.

Therefore, the Pontiff concludes, it would be impossible to conceive of a Christian society of the faithful, each one free to follow his own way of thinking in matters of faith.

From such dissensions, the encyclical says, "is born indifference, which is listlessness of religion, and modernism, which considers dogmatic proof, not as absolute verity but relative, and therefore changeable, according to the various conditions of the times and the different dispositions of men.

All Must Be Believed.

"Nor can one distinguish between dogmas as though some were imposed and others left to the free acceptance of the faithful, because all are to be believed for the same motive, that is, by the authority of a revealing God. Therefore certainty of faith cannot be less in one than in another of revealed dogmas, even if one dogma was explicitly made clear and solemnly defined in modern times, as happened concerning the question of primacy and the infallible authority of the Roman Pontiff."

The encyclical is interpreted in Rome as removing all hope for resumption of the memorable "Malines conversations", looking to a reunion of the Anglicans with Rome, in which the late Cardinal Mercier, Lord Halifax and other noted men took part.

Sees Christian Reunion Nearing.

New York, January 18 (By The Associated Press).—Bishop William T. Manning, Episcopal, believes that the movement for the reunion of Christendom cannot be stopped, despite the recent papal encyclical opposing the movement.

"No utterance can or will stop or retard that great movement," he said, addressing the Churchwomen's League for a Patriotic Service at the home of Mrs. Whitelaw Reid. "I don't think any one seriously wants to stop it. It is going on and Christians all over the world, Catholic and Protestant, are drawing nearer to each other."

Referring to the World's Conference on Faith and Order held last August at Lausanne, Switzerland, in which the Protestant Episcopal Church was called the "bridge church", Bishop Manning continued:

"Our own Church and the Anglican communion throughout the world will continue to play a large part in that movement, because in the providence of God the Anglican Church includes in itself those things which are true and essential for which Protestantism stands. It was for this reason our German brethren at Lausanne applied to the Anglican Church the name 'bridge church', because they recognized the fact that we stand in a unique relation with the Catholic world on the one hand and the Protestant world on the other."

Church Unity Urged.

Chicago, January 18 (By The Associated Press).—Church unity of all denominations was advocated in a statement of ideals for the town and country church adopted yesterday at the annual national executive and official conference of the Congregational Church.

The statement was the first set of standards adopted under national auspices by the Congregational or any other denomination, Congregational officials said, and was made the basis for the development of a program of town and country church work throughout the United States.

Setting forth two-score objects toward the attainment of an ideal state, the statement urged denomination leaders divorce themselves entirely from any spirit or practice in denominational competition that should discourage over churching by withholding missionary aid from competing churches.

Better pay for pastors, suggesting $1,800 and parsonage as the minimum for college-trained preachers, also was urged in the statement.—Washington (D. C.) Star.

One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism. One God and Father of all, Who is above all and through all and in you all."

"Thy kingdom come, O Lord, Thy reign on earth begin."

Tolerance, yes, but no compromise on vital truths of the Gospel and God's Holy inspired Word, the Bible, God's great gift to man.

One Hundred and Eighteenth Annual Meeting New York Bible Society.

The annual meeting of the New York Bible Society was just held at the Bible House, No. 5 East Forty-eighth Street. The officers elected were: Messrs. John C. West, President; Everett J. Esselstyn, Vice-President; Leeds Johnson, Recording Secretary, and Alfred P. Hinton, Treasurer. The following were added to membership on the Board of Managers: Messrs. Benjamin F. Amos, Edward H. Mohr, Henry C. Stuart and Frederick N. Whitford. There are sixty managers, representatives of Churches of all denominations, directing the work of the Society, which is larger today than ever before.

In the annual report presented at the meeting, the General Secretary, the Rev. George William Carter, D. D., stated that 849,706 volumes of the Scriptures in sixty-seven languages had been circulated during the year 1927 among the immigrants, the seamen, the sick in our hospitals, the prisoners and all nationalities, including many thousand Bibles placed in the guest rooms of New York City hotels.

There never was so great a demand for Bibles as at present and the Society carries the largest assortment from all pulishers that can be found.

The National Council and its Departments will meet in New York February 7, 8 and 9. We face the very difficult task of cutting appropriations for 1928 by about $400,000, because the reports from the various dioceses of the amounts they expect to pay towards the quota of 1928 are approximately $150,000 less than last year when the Council had to cut appropriations $251,000.

We need your prayers, my friends of the clergy. Will you not remember us in your services on the Sunday before the meeting?

JOHN GARDNER MURRAY,
Presiding Bishop and President of the National Council.

Coast Scientists Warn the Nation.

(By Fred Brandt, Editorial Correspondence of The New York Times.)

San Francisco, January 17.—Fundamentalist assaults on modern thought are steadily increasing, and the evolution question is becoming a national issue of challenging significance. This is the view of Dr. Maynard Shipley, President of the Science League of America, with headquarters in San Francisco. The Science League, consisting largely of university professors and research workers and with a national advisory board headed by Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor Emeritus of Stanford, has just completed a survey of the activities of the Fundamentalists.

This survey shows that the Fundamentalists are centering their attack in Arkansas through an initiative measure which already has three-fourths of the 12,000 signatures required to qualify a petition. The Science League is planning to contest this and other moves antagonistic to the teaching of evolution.

During 1927 thirteen anti-evolution bills were introduced in various state legislatures, and while none of them passed several were defeated by very close margins. Arkansas has been selected by the Fundamentalists as the first of twenty states having the initiative and referendum in which to wage fights this year. The Arkansas measure, according to Dr. Shipley, is so drastic that it would be impossible to teach geology at all, and it would also cripple medical schools.

The report also deals with teachers and professors dismissed for their views on evolution and other doctrines not in accord with religious convictions of the Fundamentalists.

Hell Is a Reality, Priest Declares.

The Rev. John J. Hickey preached on the views held by the Roman Catholic Church on eternal punishment in his sermon at St. Joseph's Church, Sixth Avenue and Washington Place.

"The subject of eternal punishment," he said, "is hard for the world today. It is something not wanted to be heard in these degenerate times, with its philosophy of indulgence. There is a feeling growing outside the Church that for centuries a coercive doctrine has been forced on the people, and they are professing to be tired of creed and restraint, determining there is no such thing as sin.

"Economists agree that it is only the Catholic Church, with its positive dogmas and insistent moral code, that can come to the relief of the world. It is only in this Church that the preacher can come out in all force and tell the people there is a hell.

"It is rational to understand that when one violates a natural law the law must be vindicated, otherwise there would be chaos. Law makes for peace and order in the world, but demands even death if its codes are violated. Our Lord is just, though He be equally merciful, and He unwillingly commits to eternal abandonment those who willfully depart from His law and will not repent."

Urges Right Use of Money.

The Rev. Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin in his sermon in the West End Presbyterian Church, Amsterdam Avenue and One Hundred and Fifth Street, advocated training in the use of money as part of our educational system.

"Young people," he said, "are being taught in school and college how to make and to save money. They must also be taught how to use it. For 'thrift and theft', the historical slogan of mankind, teach them to substitute 'save and serve'. Then we shall write a new page of history and bring down from the sky that holy city where gold is where it belongs, underfoot—'and the streets of the holy city were pure gold'."—New York Times.

VIRGINIA.

The Peterkin Memorial Hall.

The Peterkin Memorial Hall of St. Stephen's Church, in St. Mark's Parish, Culpeper, Va., was dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Henry S. George Tucker on January 24.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia, preached the sermon. He showed that the highest value of our most exalted impulses, and truest motives, our religion, was found in bringing them down into the furrow of daily life; making that straight and true; and living what we believed consistently. To this end the parish hall would lend its aid in the life of the parish; a work-shop for all its members, cooperating in Christian service.

The hall is an enlargement of a one-room building erected in 1870, during the rectorate of Bishop Peterkin, that the parish might have a high-grade private school for girls. It was taught by Mr. Kinloch Nelson, afterwards Bishop of Georgia, and his sister, Miss Betty, afterwards principal of "Gunston Hall", Washington, D. C.; their father being its principal.

The cornerstone was laid by Bishop Tucker on St. Michaels and All Angels Day, 1895; the Masons taking part. The building is arranged for a graded Church School; and has also been found very useful for extra-parochial meetings of a community character since its erection.

Memorial.

On January 22 the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, dedicated a memorial tablet to their late rector, the Rev. John Francis Ribble, D. D.

The exercises consisted of a sermon preached by the rector of St. Andrew's, the Rev. W. Geiger Irwin. It concluded with these words: "We are gathered together this morning first to worship God and second to show our appreciation of a life lived in the service of mankind, a life lived amid many discouragements, and yet a life that always proclaimed the evangelical gospel, the hope that was always in sight to the repentant sinner, the word of encouragement to the downcast, the note of comfort to the bereaved. It is with a grateful sense of appreciation of the life and work of the third rector of St. Andrew's Church that the congregation has placed yon tablet to the Glory of God and in memory of the Rev. John Francis Ribble, D. D., a manly man, a godly man, and a Christian gentleman."

The text on the tablet from 1 Cor. 2:2, is the text from which Dr. Ribble preached his first sermon in St. Andrew's Church.

The Rev. Z. S. Farland, who was associated with Dr. Ribble at the Theological Seminary, made a few closing remarks.

The tablet of white marble with inscription in gold letters reads as follows: "In memory of the Rev. J. Francis Ribble, D. D., 1867-1927, third rector of this church, July 1912 to March, 1927. "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.'—1 Cor. 2:2."

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Memorial Services for the Late Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D.

Memorial services for the late Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., second Bishop of Washington, were held in the Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral on St. Paul's Day with many friends of the late Bishop in attendance. The commemorative address was delivered by the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., Dean of Washington.

St. Paul's Day was chosen as the date of the annual commemoration service for Bishop Harding by the Cathedral authorities, because it is the anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Harding to the episcopate, which took place in St. Paul's Church, Washington, on January 25, 1909.

One of the most beautiful portions of Washington Cathedral, the Norman Chapel of the Resurrection, is a memorial to Bishop Harding and pays a tribute to his outstanding service to the Cathedral, the diocese and as a parish priest in the Diocese of Washington for more than a score of years. Opportunity still remains for Bishop Harding's friends to be associated in this memorial by additional gifts for the furnishings, such as the lectern, the pipe organ and other items and to make offerings to the fund for the decoration of the chapel walls.

The chapel, which is structurally complete, has been called a "fitting architectural expression of Alfred Harding's spirit, the very essence of which was a sweet simplicity which knew no ambition save the desire to serve". At the southwest corner of the chancel arch a vault has been prepared for the reception of the body of Bishop Harding, which now rests temporarily in the Bethlehem Chapel, and that of Justine Prindle Harding, his wife. Here will be placed a beautiful sarcophagus, designs for which are now being prepared by W. D. Carce, resident architect of Canterbury Cathedral, England, who designed and executed the alabaster marble tomb of Bishop Satterlee in the ambulatory of the Bethlehem Chapel.

It is planned to dedicate the Chapel of the Resurrection on All Saints' Day, November 1, 1928.

Memorial to Bishop Penick.

On Sunday, January 22, a memorial pulpit lamp was dedicated at the Church of the Messiah by the rector, the Rev. James A. Mitchell, to the Rt. Rev. C. C. Penick, D. D., third missionary bishop to Liberia and rector of Messiah from 1873-77. By a happy coincidence the pulpit was occupied at this service by the Rev. Josselyn Reed, who is a missionary in Liberia and has charge of the very school which Bishop Penick founded. An address was delivered by Mr. Thomas H. Disney, Registrar of the Vestry of Messiah, who is the only surviving member of the committee who signed the original call to Bishop Penick.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial to Miss Helena W. Faber.

At St. John's Church, Far Rockaway, a beautiful tablet was recently placed "In memory of Helena W. Faber, devoted worker for forty-six years in St. John's Parish". The tablet was given by the members of the Woman's Missionary Society. The committee was assisted in designing it by Mr. J. Monroe Hewlett. The Rev. Wm. A. Sparks, rector, spoke at the dedication.

Miss Faber was one of the oldest and most devoted members of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Woman's Board of the Church Charity Foundation, and other organizations. She gave liberally of her means, time and strength, and her death is a loss to the diocese as well as to the parish. She died in September, 1927.

Missionaries Recalled to China.

A friend on Long Island has received word that Sister Helen and Sister Constance of Bethany House, Glendale, Ohio, have been sent for by their Bishop, and on February 6, to their very great joy, will sail from Vancouver to take up again their splendid work among the women and children of China, which has been sadly broken in upon by the war.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Vacant Churches Being Cared For.

In accordance with Bishop Jett's plan to ask nearby rectors to take temporary charge of churches while without regular rectors of their own, the Bishop has made assignments in the diocese as follows: The Rev. Thos. D. Lewis, D. D., of Amherst, takes charge of Emmanuel, Madison Heights; the Rev. Thos. M. Browne, of St. John's, Lynchburg, has supervision of Trinity Church, Boonesboro, just over the line in Bedford County, and about six miles from St. John's; the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, of St. Paul's, Lynchburg, has charge of the work at Altavista, in Campbell County, about twenty-seven miles to the south of Lynchburg; the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., of Lexington, takes over Buena Vista, and the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, of Bristol, will have Abingdon under his charge. It is the Bishop's hope that these clergymen will keep in touch with the congregations noted, give them services when possible and help to see that the work is carried on with such efficiency as may be, and that the conduct of the Sunday Schools will go along without interruption.

Mr. C. R. Reese, a student of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School at Monteagle, Tennessee, is spending his winter vacation in doing a very good work as supply minister at St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, so that while he is there the Rev. Mr. Warren is largely relieved in the matter of his responsibility for that point.

This plan of the Bishop's for taking care of vacant churches has decided possibilities. He feels that the rectors whom he asks to look after these small churches will take special interest in them and that their efforts will go a long way toward preventing the natural decline in the enthusiasm and general conditions where churches are sometimes necessarily without ministers of their own for considerable periods.

While the Rev. G. Otis Mead is recovering his health at Bradenton, Fla., the Rev. Dr. Charles J. Smith, President of Roanoke College at Salem, is conducting most of the services at Christ Church, Roanoke. The congregation feels that it is most fortunate in obtaining this aid from so gifted a preacher as Dr. Smith.

The Rev. A. C. Bussingham, Deacon-in-Charge of St. Peter's Church, Roanoke, is, during this session, taking a special course at the Virginia Seminary, and returns to St. Peter's for about one Sunday in each month. At the Bishop's request several clergymen in this part of the diocese are holding services at St. Peter's on Sunday evenings. Those who have assisted in this way up to the present time are: The Rev. Messrs. Alfred R. Berkeley and Sumner Guerry, of St. John's Church, Roanoke; the Rev. Roland J. Moncure, of Salem; the Rev. J. Manly Cobb, of Blacksburg; the Rev. James A. Figg, of Christiansburg; the Rev. John F. Coleman, of Pulaski, and the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, of Rocky Mount. While this condition is nothing like so good for St. Peter's as having a regular minister of its own, still this little congregation in one sense has an advantage over every other church in the diocese, in that it is possible for them to have the greatest variety in the matter of preachers and sermons.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Old St. Paul's, Chester.

Old St. Paul's Church in the city of Chester, which had its origin as a mission of Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, on Sunday, January 22, began a week's commemoration of the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation.

In addition to a special program which features the commemoration on the two Sundays, the parish had as its guests at a reception and dinner on Tuesday night, the ministers of all religious communions in Chester and vicinity and the rectors of all the colonial churches of the Episcopal communion in the Diocese of Pennsylvania and of Old Swede's, Wilmington, Del., and St. Mary's, Burlington, N. J. Coincident with the anniversary services it is expected announcement will be made of the completion of an endowment fund and of plans which St. Paul's has for the planting of a new mission in another part of Chester.

The Rev. Francis M. Taitt, who has been rector of St. Paul's for more than thirty-four years, preached the historical sermon Sunday morning, and former United States Ambassador to Japan, Roland S. Morris, also made an address. Sunday night the Rev. Rockland Tyng Homans, of Grace Church, Jamaica, L. I., was the speaker. Bishop Thomas, a member of the Philadelphia Divinity School Faculty, who was formerly Bishop of Wyoming, and the Rev. L. N. Caley, of St. Martin's, Oak Lane, were the preachers on Sunday, January 29.

Under the spell of the notable religious awakening in the early part of the eighteenth century, the Rev. Evan Evans, rector of Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, organized St. Paul's, Chester. The first St. Paul's was a brick building, forty-nine feet by twenty-eight feet, with walls fourteen feet high and the highest point of the hipped roof twenty-three feet. The first services were held January 24, 1703.

The cornerstone of St. Paul's was cut from the Areophagus at Athens by authority of the Greek government and presented to St. Paul's. The church has among its possessions many valuable and historic gifts, including a chalice and paten presented in 1705 by Sir Jeffry Jeffrys and a chalice and paten presented by Queen Anne.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Council.

The ninety-seventh council of this diocese met January 18-19, in the newly-completed Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, Alabama. Bishop Beckwith was unable to attend, owing to illness.

Bishop McDowell, in his council address, reported five hundred and eighty-four confirmations, being one hundred and forty-seven more than the previous year. This he attributed, in large measure, to the Bishops' Crusade. The Bishop set as a goal for all parishes and organized missions an increase of at least ten per cent toward self-support per annum, as an unusually heavy strain had been placed upon diocesan funds the past year, due to the fact that every vacancy in the diocese had been filled. The Bishop urged all Churchmen in the diocese to a fuller discharge of their civic duties, so as to remove from the minds of our citizens the supposed necessity for invisible government.

The Committee on Prayer Book Revision reported, in substance, urging that the prayer for the whole State of Christ's Church Militant be left in its present form; that it is inadvisable to introduce the hymn, Benedictus Que Venit immediately before the Prayer of Consecration in the Communion Service; that the proposed combined service of Holy Baptism should not be introduced into the Book of Common Prayer; that the Catechism be retained in its present place and form in the Prayer Book, and that the proposed offices of instruction should not be incorporated therein, and that the diocese record its sense of the value of the testimony of the Thirty-Nine Articles, and earnestly plead for their retention in the Prayer Book of this Church. After considerable debate, these resolutions were adopted.

Election of officers resulted as follows: Executive Secretary, the Rev. James M. Stoney, Anniston; Registrar, Mr. Frank Stollenwerck, Montgomery; Chancellor, Judge H. A. Jones, Tuscaloosa; Historiographer, the Rev. G. C. Tucker, Mobile; Treasurer, Mr. R. H. Cochrane, Tuscaloosa.

Deputies of the General Convention were elected, being: Clerical—the Rev. Charles Clingman, Birmingham; the Rev. Oscar DeW. Randolph, Birmingham; the Rev. James M. Stoney, Anniston; the Rev. P. N. McDonald, Montgomery. Lay Deputies—Messrs. Algernon Blair, Montgomery; W. B. Hall, Selma; R. J. Williams, Birmingham; W. B. Jones, Montgomery. Alternates Deputies are: Clerical—the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, Montgomery; the Rev. R. A. Kirchhoffer, Mobile; the Rev. V. C. McMaster, Birmingham; the Ven. J. F. Plummer, Toulminville. Lay Deputies—Messrs. A. A. Townes, Herbert Tutwiler, E. J. Buck and Frank Feltus.

The next meeting of council will be held in St. Paul's Church, Selma, the Rev. E. W. Gamble, rector.

The Rev. James R. Sharp, of Nashville, to succeed him as secretary of the Diocese of Tennessee, at the diocesan convention in Nashville.

During his long tenure of the secretaryship, Dr. Noll won recognition as one of the most active workers of the diocese.

O Lord, we beseech Thee favorably to hear the prayers of Thy people, that we, who are justly punished for our offenses, may be mercifully delivered by Thy goodness for the glory of Thy name, through Jesus Christ Our Saviour, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. ### Convinced.

Mary Davis Reed.

"Life is futility," you said;
But even as the words were read
I thought of one who with his song
Brightened the hours, though toil was long.

I thought of one who bore a cross
Of grief and pain and bitter loss,
So bravely that the hurt and pain
Brought to his spirit priceless gain.

I thought of one who faced the years,
Hiding 'neath smiles, the sting of tears;
And by her suffering raised a light
To guide some lost one through the night.

I thought of one who spent his days
Bringing light into darkened ways,
With tired feet and toil-worn hands,
Serving his King in foreign lands.

I thought of one who lived to bless,
And aid all those in sore distress;
Who scorned the lure of wealth and fame
For service in the Master's name.

I thought of One who came to give
His life that you and I might live;
I thought of lone Gethsemane;
The agony of Calvary. . . .

As the Lord triumphed over death,
So man can win while he has breath;
In every victory I see
That life is not futility.

Possessing Our Possessions.

It is a common human frailty to pay attention to losses rather than to gains, and to let the mind dwell upon sorrows rather than upon the numerous reasons for joy with which even the most unfortunate is surrounded. So we aggregate our afflictions and ignore our blessings and are unhappy because of the things we haven't got instead of rejoicing in the possession of the things which we have.

With his usual skill and eloquence the Australian preacher and essayist, F. W. Boreham, presented this thought to his congregation one day by preaching from a text in Obadiah, "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions". He startled his hearers by declaring that one man might derive small satisfaction from his large estates, while another man who knew how to possess his possessions might be wonderfully happy in his small home with its meagre furnishings. Some months afterwards, Mr. Moreham called on one of his parishioners who told him what merriment this sermon had given him. This young farmer had met with a succession of misfortunes which had robbed him of all his savings, his barn and some of his cattle. As a climax to his troubles his wife became ill and he felt that things couldn't be worse. But Mr. Boreham's sermon set him laughing—laughing at himself. "Here," he thought, "I've been spending all my time frettin about the money that's lost and the barn that's burned down, and the cows that are dead, and I've clean lost sight of the only things worth thinking about—the things that are still mine." It's a trick that the mind plays upon many of us—to make us think of the things we haven't and forget the things that we have. Happy is he who has entered upon the possession of his possessions! Happy is he who can forget his misfortunes in the enjoyment of his blessings.

After all, merely owning a thing may not give us any satisfaction, for it is not the things we owned but the things we possess with heart and mind that give us happiness. To own a huge library does not necessarily mean that one has actually entered into possession of a single volume. On the other hand how rich are the men whose means permit the purchase of only a few books, but whose love for these have made them theirs! A wide and extensive range of acquaintances does not mean that one has one close comrade of the soul—one friend who knows him through and through in all his moods and tempers, and whose loyalty is as unquestioned as Jonathan's faithfulness to David. How much better off than such a lonely man is he with few acquaintances but with one or two close friends whose love and fidelity are proved. He possesses friends. No one is so poor he cannot find happiness if he possesses the possessions which are his instead of looking discontentedly and covetously upon the property of others. How much happiness is there in a little garden for one who actually possesses it instead of making it an extra bit of work. How often do we take all the thoughtfulness and love of our home ones for granted instead of entering upon our possession of their devotion! How many who are well fail to enjoy the buoyancy and exhilaration that should come from the consciousness of clean blood flowing through a clean body! They do not possess their possessions.

Even the sick and the permanently ill have cause for happiness in the possessions which are theirs if they have wisdom to enjoy them. There is the extra love which is theirs because of their illness, there is the opportunity to do creative work, such as Dean Inge's little daughter accomplished through her cheerfulness, courage and unselfishness; and there is the privilege of all, but specially it seems the privilege of the sick to enter into the realization of the meaning of the Psalmist's words, "The Lord is my shepherd".

Often when death has taken away a loved one we bemoan our loss and loneliness and fail to enter upon the possession which we say is ours when we repeat: "I believe in the Communion of Saints"; or we talk mysteriously and sadly of God's will in removing our dear one from our side, forgetting that it is God's will that our cheerfulness should prove our belief in the life eternal. The fellowship of the saints on earth is not severed by death and the living may still have spiritual fellowship with those who have passed from this life. This is our Christian possession, if we possess it!—Canadian Churchman.

A Notorious Gambler and Drunkard Converted.

The most striking instance of the work of the Holy Spirit took place in the little hamlet of Asago, Japan, where a notorious gambler and drunkard, who had kept the whole countryside in a state of constant alarm, was converted through reading Kanamori's "Exhortations to Faith".

He had never seen a Christian in his life, but hearing that there was one believer in a neighboring village, he sought him out and borrowed a Bible which he began to study for further light. By degrees he became one of the most respected men of the town, looked up to by every one as a counsellor of young men. His health failed as a result of his former dissipation, but in his heart was a new joy. He lived with his Bible, but longed for some one to explain certain parts of it to him. The Christian who had given him the Bible visited him several times and prayed with him, but this is the only part that any human agency has had in his conversion.

Last November, hearing that Rev. Dr. S. P. Fulton was to visit a neighboring village, he sent word that he wanted to be baptized. But let Mr. Fulton tell the story:

"We were somewhat doubtful as to his preparedness for baptism. However, we went to his rude home up in the mountains and questioned him with regard to his faith. I shall never forget my astonishment at the answer he gave. It was by far the most satisfying profession I have heard since coming to Japan.

"He had never seen the Apostles' Creed, but when asked what he believed concerning Jesus Christ, he replied with a series of quotations from Scripture so much resembling the Creed that I thought he must have been familiar with it. All his replies were either directly out of the Bible, or so much interspersed with Scriptural phrases as to make the source of his knowledge and faith unmistakable. It seemed to be the natural thing for him to express himself in terms of the Bible, and in everything he said he showed an amazing familiarity with God's Word.

"In May, on my last trip to the mountains another man whom he had led was also baptized. The two of them, alone in their faith away back in those mountains, were both wreathed in smiles as they told us of God's love and grace."—Exchange.

Why Jones Does Not Go to Church.

The sermons are too long—or too short.

The music is too classical—or too simple.

The church is too hot—or too cold.

The weather is too stormy—or too beautiful.

The garden needs attention.

He has business at the ranch—or in the city.

The chief usher is a hypocrite—or a nut.

He can worship God at home. (But he doesn't.)

He has a radio now (and greatly enjoys the jazz orchestra).

Anyway, it's his own business, and he got enough religion when he was a boy, and he's as good as any church member.—California Christian Advocate.

Friends.

F. B. Stone.

What are friends?
  Companions of the heart;
Far or near,
  They comfort, joy impart.

Coming near,
  They set the heart aglow;
Love bears fruit
  Through winter's storms and snow.

Plodding hours
  Are sweetened by their love;
Troubled hours,
  Their prayers reach heaven above.

Friends are part
  Of our great Friend above;
Outstretched hands
  Of His diviner love.

A Town Without Jesus.

Would you like to live in a town where Jesus is not known? Children in our great and large country cannot even think what kind of a town such a town would be.

A man who likes to write things for children to read relates a very pretty story which tells us some of the things that would be missing in such a town.

Little Hettie, this story tells us, had a model village and she never tired of setting it up.

"What kind of a town is that, Hettie?" asked her father.

"Oh, a Christian town," answered Hettie quickly. Hettie did not want any other town and would not want to live in any other town. But her father said:

"Suppose we make it a heathen town. What must we take out of it?"

"The Church," said Hettie taking it to one side.

"Is that all?"

"I suppose so."

"No, indeed," her father said. "The public school must go. Take the public library out also."

"Anything else?" Hettie asked sadly.

"Isn't that a hospital over there?"

"But, father, don't they have hospitals?"

"Not in heathen countries. It was Christ who taught us to care for the sick and the old."

"Then I must take out the Old Ladies' Home," said Hettie very soberly.

"Yes, and that Orphans' Home at the other end of town."

"Why, father," Hettie exclaimed, "then there's not one good thing left! I would not live in such a town for anything."

Nor would any of us. For beside all this a town that didn't have Jesus Christ in it would miss many other beautiful things. No one could tell how many lovely things would be lacking if Jesus Christ did not abide in the town by His people.

There wouldn't be any Sunday School, for example. We would never hear little children singing, and it is very doubtful whether anybody else would sing. They wouldn't have the kind of happiness that makes people sing. A great many of the prettiest hymns ever written, were written about Christ and because people loved Christ. Oh, there are thousands and thousands of such hymns and children sing them all around the earth.

And there would not be any Christmas trees. There was no Christmas before Christ was born into the world. He was a little baby and He was born in a manger where cattle stayed at night to give them shelter and to make them safe. But a bright star was shining in the sky and very bright light shone on everything for a little while. And the angels sang a beautiful song. If Christ had not come there would be no singing even at Christmas.

So we see what a difference Christ makes in the world. People are kind to one another and love one another because of it, and that is the very greatest thing of all.—Hill Craig, in The Christian-Evangelist.

What Is a Girl Anyhow?

She is a person who must carry on the work that her mother began.

She is a person who will be the president of the Welfare Club or the Mothers' Club and try to take her mother's place in community affairs.

She is a developing personality who may wield a strong hand in carrying on her father's business in the world when he is gone. The door of the business world has opened wide to her, and she has not refused to go in.

She is a person who is going to have her say about the laws and the national policies of tomorrow. No matter what we plan today, it will fail to "carry on" tomorrow unless she approves of it and gives it her influence.

She is the persn who must be the mistress of the American home tomorrow, and the fate of that institution will be in her hands.

She is a person who must mother the world and guide the feet of the little children who are yet to be.

She is a person who is thinking and growing today, and as she thinks and grows today so will be the fate of the world of tomorrow.

She is a person to be trusted, to be loved, and to be given the best that the world has of knowledge, of thought, and of endeavor.

She is only a girl, but only God knows how very precious and important she is to the world in which she lives.—Frances McKinnon Morton, in Christian Advocate.

The Value of Perseverance.

Mildred Gray tossed the bag which she had been beading on to the table with a sigh of disgust. "I'm tired of that; I don't intend to finish it; it is tedious work and it takes too long."

"Mildred, the things you begin and never finish would make a great pile. I know one drawer in your bureau that is full," remarked her friend Daisy Warren, who was busy with a bag similar to the one Mildred had just tossed aside. "Mother always insists that I finish what I begin; she says that is the way to learn perseverance."

"I will be persevering when I am older," returned Mildred, carelessly, forgetting that the time to learn perseverance is in youth.

Perseverance is the ability to keep working at a task after the first glamour has departed; it marks the difference between failure and success. It is stubborn, for it hangs on to an undertaking and gets it done. Perseverance is a virtue. It is an indication of strength of character and of will-power to keep on and on in any right course of action.

There are evidences of lack of perseverance all around. It may be unfinished fancy-work, as in Mildred's case; it may be the youth who did not finish the college course; the girl who started to improve by attending night school, then dropped out after the first few weeks; the young woman who is only a commonplace musician because she lacked the will to practice faithfully.

Girls, how many unfinished things have you that testify to your lack of perseverance? Perseverance means sticking to a task until it is completed. It was the perseverance of Goodyear that produced rubber; the perseverance of Burbank gave to mankind better vegetables, fruits and more beautiful flowers; the perseverance of Edison has made electricity the servant of man; that of the Wright brothers gave the aeroplane to the world. The perserance of David Livingstone opened up the continent of Africa. Perseverance develops faith, and hopes goes hand in hand with faith. The men just mentioned had enough to discourage them; they might have given up, but perseverance refuses to be discouraged, it refuses to look at an undertaking as hopeless, it refuses to quit, and it starts anew after each failure.

Girls, cultivate the habit of perseverance.—Exchange.

A Song About Teachers.

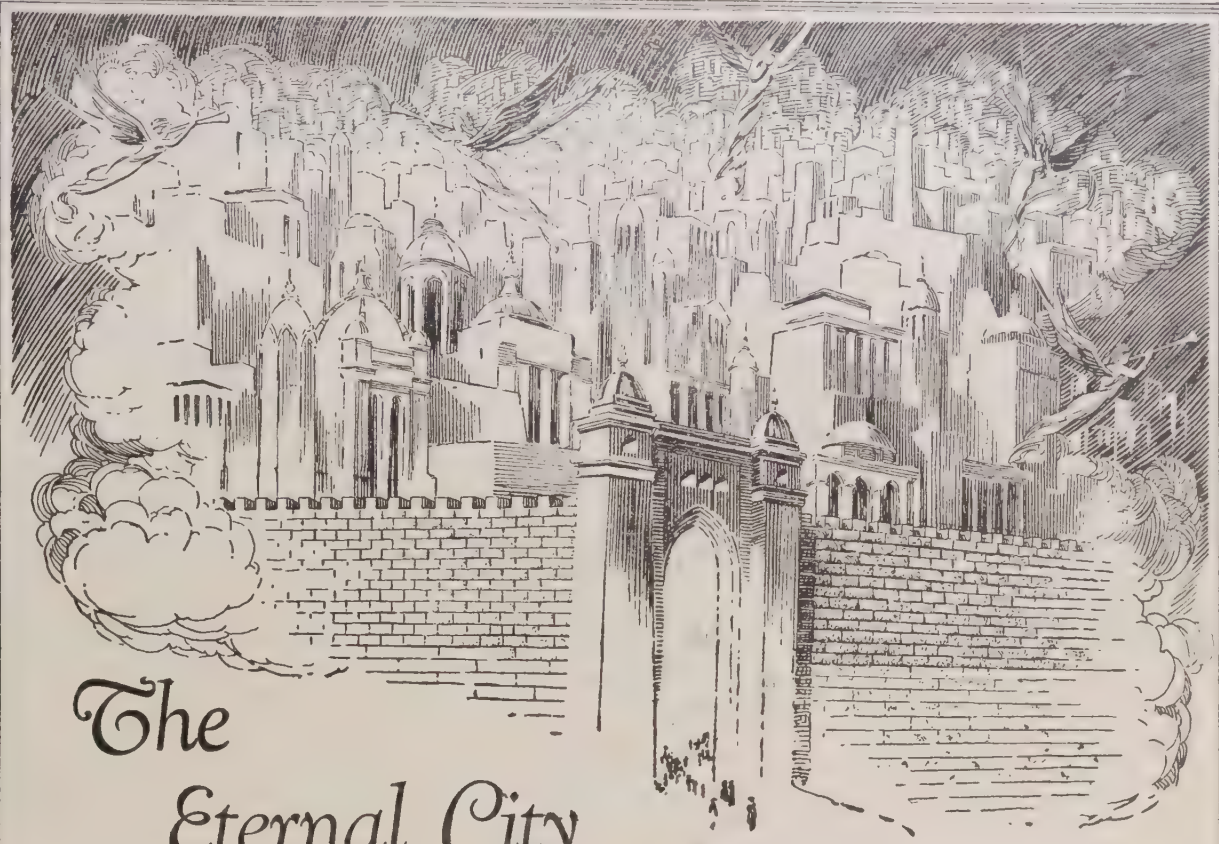
God's world is for His children;
  He made it very fair,
With soft blue skies and deep blue seas,
With blossoms, wind and bending trees,
  Aud clouds and crystal air,
And music, love and beauty.
  But children are too small
At first to see its meaning well,
  To understand it all.
They are as dear, blind children
  Who cannot walk aright,
But wait till friendly helpers come
  To make the darkness bright.



God sends those friendly helpers
  Our teachers wise and dear.
Day after day at school they make
The hard things easy for our sake,
  The dark things very clear.
They show us marks called letters,
  Which we can change to words,
That mean all kinds of loveliness,
  Like people, flowers and birds.
We put those marks together
  And make a prayer today,
An earnest prayer for teachers dear,
  "God bless them all!" we say.

—Nancy Byrd Turner, by permission of Congregational Publication Society.

One Girl's Faithfulness.

Sometimes we are tempted to think that being just one person it won't make much difference whether we serve truly or not.

Bertha was the daughter of the King of Paris. In the early days of the history of Great Britain she was sent to England to marry the King of Kent. She was only a young girl and did not want to leave home. Royal wishes had to be observed and presently she said, "I will go if I may continue to be a Christian". She was a faithful Christian and because she was, the King received Augustine when he came and then became a Christian, too. All of English history would have been different had Augustine not gone. Bertha opened the door for him. It may seem only a little deed of poor significance that you do, but girls have changed history of nations by being false or true to Christ. Which way will your influence go?—World Comrades.

The Eternal City

"And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst."

Revelation Ch. 21. vs. 19, 20.

John, the beloved disciple, in the above, endeavors to express in human language the most transcendant spiritual beauty and permanence of the heavenly city,—the everlasting city. He selected, singularly enough, to describe the foundations thereof, beautiful crystalline gems, every one of which appears in the minute crystals of

Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of The Trade"

When the surface of this granite, which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals, is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels becomes visible.

How peculiarly fitting that monuments to loved ones be erected of lasting granite, containing the very gems which the Apostle John mentions in this metaphorical description of the foundations of the walls of the everlasting city, the city of our resurrection hope.

Be sure that monuments you buy are cut from genuine Winnsboro Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Deaths

MRS. LOUISE EVERETT SCOTT.

Entered into rest on Tuesday night, December 27, at her home in Amherst, MRS. LOUISE EVERETT SCOTT, widow of Charles Landon Scott. While an invalid for many years, she had borne her sufferings with such Christian fortitude that her loved ones did not realize that the end was near. Surrounded by her children, who had assembled to spend the holidays with her, she passed away after an illness of one hour.

Mrs. Scott was a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles D. Everett, of Keswick, Va., and for many years prior to her death was a very active and earnest member of Ascension Episcopal Church at Amherst, where her influence for good was felt by all Christian churches.

Always a hospitable hostess, a delightful conversationalist, she was a woman of great social and intellectual charm—a true daughter of the Old South. Her strong personality made her a commanding influence wherever she was.

Throughout her life she was constantly ministering to the poor and needy, the unfortunate and criminal classes. Among her last activities was her constructive work with the prisoners of the Amherst jail—"The House of the Broken Law" as she termed it in converse with those confined there. Only two days before her death she solicited and served a delicious Christmas dinner, as well as planned and participated in a religious service for fourteen prisoners, thus bringing to them cheer and a spirit of peace on earth and good will toward men. So appreciative were the authorities of her kind ministrations that they permitted the prisoners to attend the funeral in a body—an unprecedented mark of respect.

In passing from us, she leaves a place that cannot readily be filled.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Rev. 14-B.

TEMPLE JACKSON.

Died, suddenly, January 15, 1928, at his home in Miami, Ariz., TEMPLE JACKSON. Stricken with a serious illness some weeks ago, Mr. Jackson spent some time in the Miami-Inspirational Hospital, and apparently was greatly improved. Sunday evening he was again stricken and died within a short time.

He was born October 28, 1872, at Gainesville, Ala. He leaves a widow, three daughters, Lucy, Susie and Ethel; two sons, Thomas and Ralph, all of Miami; two brothers, Reavis Jackson, of St. Louis, Mo., and Thomas M. Jackson of Birmingham, Ala.; two sisters, Mrs. R. L. Sherer, Atlanta, Ga., and Mrs. M. D. Smith, of Gainesville, Ala.

Mr. Jackson was a member of the Masonic Lodge and of the Miami Y. M. C. A. Shortly before his death he attended the annual dinner of the association and was re-elected secretary of the board. He was deeply interested in matters of community welfare, devoted to his family and highly respected by a host of friends.

RESOLUTIONS.

Judge Alexander Wellington Wallace.

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom and love to call to the rest and peace that remaineth to the people of God our esteemed brother, ALEXANDER WELLINGTON WALLACE; and

Whereas, at this, the first regular meeting of the vestry since his death, at the age of eighty-four years, on Sunday, October 23, 1927, we desire to place on record our appreciation of and thankfulness for his many years of faithful devotion and service to St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, Va., as vestryman and church warden.

Whereas, we are grieved for the great loss to our parish of one who not only gave largely of his means to the support of the church, but was ever loyal to the interests of and constant in his attendance upon her services, until the infirmities of age prevented; and

Whereas, we rejoice that he ran life's race so well, and that he kept the faith unto the goal, we mourn his passing and extend to those who were closest to him our heartfelt sympathy.

"He asked life of Thee, O Lord, and Thou has given him a long life, yea, forever and ever."

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the vestry of St. George's Church, in loving remembrance of Judge Wallace's many virtues and integrity of character, while we deeply lament his departure from this life, desire to express to Almighty God our sense of gratitude for the inspiration of his fine example of loyalty and service, and direct that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the December meeting, a copy sent to the Virginia and Southern Churchman, and a copy to the family of Judge Wallace.

DUDLEY BOOGHER, Rector;
M. M. LEWIS, Sr. Warden;
E. M. YOUNG, Jr. Warden.

MRS. AUGUSTINE T. SMYTHE.

January 8, 1928, MRS. AUGUSTINE T. SMYTHE died at her home, 31 Legare Street, in Charleston, S. C., having survived her husband fourteen years.

Louisa Rebecca McCord was the daughter of David J. McCord and Louisa S. Cheves, also the granddaughter of the eminent Langdon Cheves, and was born at Portman Shoals Plantation on August 10, 1845. She was educated by the family tutors at Lang Syne Plantation and was a singer of sweetness and skill, partial to Scotch ballads, especially Jacobite ones. Foreign travel and long residence in London and Paris made her a rare French scholar, a lover of art and the drama, while even as a child she was the companion of the cultured and famous persons of the ante-bellum days, securing grace, poise and assured bearing.

She married Mr. Smythe on June 27, 1865, and at once won a place of admiration, love and added leadership in the city of Charleston. A notable housewife, she dispensed charities and social courtesies in endless and complete success.

She was a founder and President in the United Daughters of the Confederacy of the Charleston Chapter, the State Division and the General Society, but she was even more brilliant as the South Carolina Director in the Jefferson Davis Monument Association, U. D. C., imposing in social functions, wise in financial aims, and upon the Inscription Committee a leader of sterling suggestions.

Her accounts of Reconstruction days were never surpassed, vivid pictures of how the women suffered and encouraged their brave men so late returned from defeat to desired peace.

As a friend she was ideal, so wise, tender, sincere, suggestive, unselfish, while vanity or a boastful spirit were impossible in her character. She was a tower of strength in home, society, city and church, her praises now mingling with tears and tributes.

As a wife and mother she was the scriptural model of perfection, and many more called her blessed.

Her life was the full flowering of ante-bellum life and training, she being one of the last of a closing period: so those who loved and leaned upon her graces and virtues, her originality, her mental balance and warm affection, now thank God for such an example of Christian zeal and attainments.

She was laid with her family in the churchyard of the Second Presbyterian Church of Charleston, as one "glad that they be quiet; so He bringeth them to their desired haven".

"N. H. H."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

Dr. Sharp was elected to the position and Dr. Noll was named assistant secretary, in which position he will continue to aid in the work of the diocese without having the details of the office pressing upon him.

George M. Darrow, of Murfreesboro, who has served for many years as treasurer of the diocese, was elected honorary treasurer for life, as an honor for the energetic service which he has devoted in the past. Douglas M. Wright, of Nashville, was elected treasurer of the diocese.

W. M. Nauts, of Sewanee, was re-elected registrar, while S. J. Shepherd, of Memphis, was reelected chancellor.

The standing committee of the diocese remains unchanged except for one new member, the Rev. A. D. Ellis, of Nashville, having been added to the list. Other members of the committee are the Rev. Prentice A. Pugh, Dr. E. P. Dandridge, George T. Finegan and H. A. Oliver.

The Rev. Dr. C. F. Blaisdell, rector of Calvary Church, was reelected dean of West Tennessee; the Rev. Prentice A. Pugh was reelected dean of Middle Tennessee, and the Rev. W. C. Whitaker was reelected dean of East Tennessee.

At the diocese meeting held this morning, the budget for the year was discussed, with an approval given to $6,000 advance work in the state during 1928. This work, approved by the convention, includes a church at Sherwood, $1,000; a new chapel at Monterey, donated by a member of the church in memory of her husband, $2,000; assistance in building a church at Kingsport, $2,500; assistance at Summerfield, $500.

Communications.

All communications intended for the Secretary of the Convention of the Diocese of Tennessee should, hereafter, be addressed to the Rev. James R. Sharp, 419 Vendome Building, Nashville, Tenn.

The address of The Tennessee Churchman, diocesan paper of the Diocese of Tennessee, is changed from 714 Poplar Avenue, Memphis, to 419 Vendome Building, Nashville.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Executive Council.

A most important meeting of the Executive Council of this diocese was held in the headquarters in Jacksonville recently. There was a splendid attendance on the part of the members and the spirit of the meeting, while a bit anxious in regard to the diocesan budget for 1928, was yet, on the whole, of a most optimistic and encouraging nature.

The Department of Finance reported that the year 1927 had closed with a clean slate. Every church in the diocese had paid in full its assessment to the diocese and forty-one parishes and missions had paid in full their quotas. Of this number sixteen had exceeded the amount apportioned them. Only twenty-seven congregations failed to meet their quotas, and most of these made a fair showing in the year's giving in spite of their partial failure to reach their goal. Florida has secured the cooperation of the parish treasurers to a very large extent and practically every one of them now send in their payments on the diocesan budget in monthly installments.

The full quota to the National Church of $13,500 was sent to Mr. Franklin before his books closed for the year, and Florida's guarantee for a like amount in 1928 has already been sent to the National Council. Florida believes in meeting her national obligations and expects to continue to meet them, even if she has to cut her own diocesan program to do so. Unfortunately the full amount of the diocesan budget has not yet been subscribed for 1928, and the Executive Council was forced to instruct the Department of Finance to balance the budget in order that the diocese may be assured of keeping within her expected income. They were further instructed, however, to leave all salaries intact and to make all reductions with a view to restoring them in order of their priority value should conditions warrant the same. The Executive Council deeply regrets having to make any retrenchment in its plans for the current year, and it is hopeful that through the response of the people to whom letters stating existing conditions have been sent out, the work of the diocese may yet be carried out as tentatively planned by the 1927 council of the diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst and Bishop Frank A. Juhan were guests and speakers at the diocesan convention of South Florida on January 24 and 25.

The Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, Field Secretary of the National Council and of the National Commission on Evangelism, has just closed a successful mission in St. John's Church, Tallahassee, of which the Rev. W. Jeffery Alfriend is rector. From January 23 through 29 Dr. Clark will hold a similar mission at Holy Trinity Church, Gainesville.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

A Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been organized in Christ Church, Little Rock. There are eight hundred and seventy-six communicants in this parish, so there is a great field for work.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese will have an "Educational Day" in St. Luke's, Hot Springs, on January 27. One delegate from each parish will be entertained; but as many as will come are invited. The conference will be in charge of the General Assistant Educational Secretary, Miss Laura F. Boyer. The President of the Diocesan Auxiliary is writing to all local organizations urging them to extend the day into an Educational Year.

Mrs. A. L. Tanner, the President, writes: "Can we not stress Religious Education and Social Service more, and at the same time stress our Missionary work more? Can we not reach every parish and mission in an endeavor to enlist the full strength of the womanhood of the Church so that we may be strong enough for a greater future?"

St. John's Church, Camden, reports as a result of the Annual Convass: "The Budget was $6,252.50. Pledges made to take care of it, $6,066.20." "Of the amount pledged for 1927, only $86.30 in arears on January 1, 1928." "Eighty sets of Duplex envelopes were sent out: sixty-two numbers had responded through the offering plate by January 15." A little over $1,500 last year was paid for interest on building debt. There are less than one hundred members on the register.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Annual Convention of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, was the chief speaker at the annual convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of this diocese, which was held in Columbia on January 10 and 11, at Trinity Church. Others who spoke during the convention were the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, of Augusta, Ga.; Miss Theodora Young, of Yangchow, China; Mrs. D. D. Tabor, a worker under the National Council; Miss Porter, of the Winthrop College Episcopal Bible Class, and Miss Parmley, who has been doing volunteer summer service in the mountain missions of Virginia.

Mrs. Joseph E. Hart, of York, was reelected President of the Auxiliary for the coming year. The other members of the Executive Committee elected are: Mrs. W. Bedford Moore, Vice-President; Mrs. John W. Arrington, Jr., Secretary; Mrs. Frank P. Henderson, Treasurer; Mrs. R. C. Thomas, O. T. O. Custodian; Mrs. E. R. Lucas, Chairman Missions and Church Extension; Mrs. J. N. Lemaster, Chairman Religious Education; Mrs. S. K. Oliver, Chairman Social Service; Mrs. James A. Cathcart, Chairman Publicity; Mrs. T. M. DuBose, Chairman Supplies; Mrs. LeGrand Guerry, and Mrs. W. W. Long.

Those elected as delegates to the triennial convention to be held in Washington next October are: Mrs. Jos. E. Hart, Mrs. Proctor A. Bonham, Mrs. J. N. Lemaster, Mrs. R. C. Thomas, Mrs. Frank P. Henderson, with the following alternates: Mrs. Jas. R. Cain, Mrs. K. G. Finlay, Mrs. M. B. Hutchison, Mrs. J. W. Arrington, Jr., and Miss Leila Shannon.

Personal Notes

Rev. J. J. D. Hall is now on the staff of The National Bible Institute, New York City, as open-air preacher with locations at Wall Street and Broadway and Park Place, where large crowds gather and listen eagerly to the old-time Gospel messages of power through Christ. New address, 249 West Forty-third Street, New York City.

The Rev. Elwood L. Haines, rector of Trinity Church, Bethlehem, Pa., is to become the Executive Secretary of the Diocese of North Carolina immediately after Easter.

The Rev. T. D. Harari, of Hamilton, Va., has accepted a call to All Saints' Church, Littleton, N. H., to take effect March 30.

The Rev. Lewis Chester Morrison, late rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, Old Town, Maine, with residence at 11 South Brunswick Street, Old Town, Maine, having resigned that parish January 15, 1928, is now Vicar of St. Andrew's and St. Luke's Churches.

The Rev. John W. F. Feild, rector of Grace Church, Kingston, Pa., has accepted a call to Zion Church and St. Andrew's Mission, Charles Town, Diocese of West Virginia. Mr. Feild will leave for his new work on March 1, 1928.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Clement T. Blanchet, retired minister and missionary, died at his residence in Jacksonville, Florida, on Monday morning, January 23, in the eighty-second year of his age. He is survived by his widow, and three daughters, Mrs. B. Lawrence Brown and Mrs. John S. Blanchet, of Jacksonville, and Mrs. John T. Haylott, of Springfield, Mass., also by two brothers, the Rev. Dr. John B. Blanchet and William F. Blanchet, and one sister, Mrs. Mary S. Baubein.

The Rev. Mr. Blanchet was buried from St. Mary's Church, which he regularly attended. The clergy of the city took part in the burial service. The interment was in West Evergreen Cemetery.

ORDINATIONS.

On November 27, the first Sunday in Advent, in All Saints' Church, Bayside, Charles Lawson Willard, presented by the Rev. Charles A. Brown and the Rev. Harry P. Nichols, was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Long Island.

Paginini's Violin.

When Paginini died, his violin, which had won so many honors, was placed in a glass case and deposited in the museum in the city of Naples. Five years ago it was taken out of its case and played upon by a master musician before the King and Queen of Italy. Recently it was noticed that it was showing signs of dissolution and decay, and experts were invited to examine and advise about it. In order to preserve it even in its imperfect condition, they advised that it be taken out of its case every day and played upon. Lack of use and neglect were ruining it, and so for a little while each day it is put to its intended use and already it is beginning to respond to this common sense treatment.

There is no disease so fatal as neglect, no toil so irksome as idleness, and no condition so terrible as uselessness. "Faith without works is dead," and character that does not issue in service has already begun to lose its power.—Exchange.

A Year.

A year is like a loaf of bread,
All fresh and fair and new,
With every day a little slice
From off that loaf for you.

And sprinkled sometimes through the loaf
To make the flavor good,
Are raisins—holidays that come
Exactly as they should.

This year is like a loaf of bread,
So fresh and new and fair,
And when it's nibbled all away
Another waits you there!

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Difficulties are the greatest helps we have.

The right to do as we will depends on the rightness of the will.

So long as knowledge of truth lives it will grow and outgrow all the clothes we make for it.

God has made the universe so mysteriously that when sorrow and misery are shared, they decrease, but when joy and love are shared, they increase.—Dr. Takamatsu, of Kyoto.

"He cannot lead men who has no time to listen to a child."

The farther off you follow the more fearful you will be.—Exchange.

Of the reality of fellowship with God every religious man is assured. Religion implies such a relationship of love and grace on the part of God. How such a consciousness brings strength and comfort to a human heart let every one who knows the power of salvation attest.—Hugh Black.

The only way to consider a temptation is to kill it first, and talk over it afterwards.

The fool says in his heart that there is no God. He does not feel comfortable at the thought of God, and his heart rebels against the thought. He has not said it in his mind; for if he looked at the wonders of God's creation, he could not escape doing some real thinking that would compel him to change his negative creed and put into it the only name that counts—God.—Lutheran.

O God, who has made of one blood all the nations of mankind, so that all are children and members one of another, how is it that we are so slow to trace the family likeness, so reluctant to claim our common kinship? We pray thee, O our God, to make the peoples one.

We pray for the Church of Christ so broken, scattered, and dismembered, that none would think we followed all one Lord and held a common faith. Purge away the vanity, intolerance, and unforgiving spirit which keep us far apart. May the seamless robe not be utterly rent, nor the body any longer broken.

We pray that since man's need is one, we all may find the one way to thee, the one God. Forbid that in our highest things we should find fellowship impossible. May the spirit of Christ break down all barriers and answer the desire of all nations. Amen.—W. E. Orchard, in The Christian.

THE FALSITY OF THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION

One of the most widespread errors abroad today is that: "All educated people believe in evolution." This is a wicked falsehood. We hear on all sides that only ignorant people deny it.

Let me give you a few facts to disprove such statements.

Lord Kelvin, for a long time President of the Royal Academy of Learning in England, a man internationally known and honored for his scholarship in many directions, said of it: "That man could be evolved from inferior animals is the wildest dream of materialism, a pure assumption which offends me alike by its folly and its arrogance."

Ruskin said: "I have never yet heard one logical argument in its favor. I have read and heard many that were beneath contempt."

Thomas Carlyle said: "It is a Gospel of dirt."

Sir William Dawson, the most distinguished geologist possibly ever produced on the American continent, rejected it and said: "It is the strangest phenomena of humanity and is utterly destitute of proof." I may also add that his son who is now living has just written an article in The Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, in which he says he fully agrees with his father in this matter.

Harnack, the German scholar and higher critic, says: "Science has made many mistakes and has much to repent of."

Professor Max Mueller, of Oxford, opposed Darwinian transvolution of species and says: "Language is the Rubicon and no brute will ever dare cross it."

Dr. Ethridge, the famous English authority on fossils, says: "Nine tenths of this talk about evolution is sheer nonsense, not founded on observation, and wholly unsupported by fact. The British Museum is full of proofs of the utter falsity of this view."

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., one of the greatest scholars I ever met and a man of international reputation, denounced it in no uncertain terms.

Professor Dick Wilson, of Princeton Theological Seminary, a man who reads twenty-nine languages and understands forty-five, a man who has traveled over the whole world and made a critical study of all these questions, utterly rejects the theory of evolution and also believes every word of the Bible. I heard him say that: "No man knows enough today to criticize or reject one thing in the Bible." This being so, it is not very modest in a lot of these two by four little would-be scholars who have usually gotten most, if not all, their information from semi-atheistic teachers in high schools and colleges, to call their opponents ignorant or unlearned.

I ought to add also that Dr. Howard Kelly, of Baltimore, a man internationally known and honored and possibly the most distinguished surgeon in America, a man who reads the Bible in six languages and believes every word of it, also denounces evolution and accepts the story of Genesis as the true account of Creation.

In capsule form, evolution teaches that all physical life came from "protoplasm", the smallest form of organic or organized life known to science. That is to say, that bugs, lizards, snakes, fish, elephants, and all animal life, including man, of course, came from this original cell or protoplasm. I do not believe any such nonsense. Some of my ancestors may have hung by their necks for their meanness, but I do not believe any of them ever hung by their tails. When you choose evolution you must decide against the Word of God.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S RECREANT RECTOR

Here in this "Bible belt" of the South we have cause to be thankful that we are troubled little with "modernism", "advanced thought", "liberalism", or whatever other names heresy, skepticism or atheism may wear to disguise their hideous features, or hide their more hideous conclusions. Our clergy, of all denominations, generally are busy with their work of saving their own souls and the souls of others, giving comfort and strength to those sorely needing them, reclaiming sinners, lifting the fallen, aiding those who stand, striving to add to the kingdom of their Master and to make mankind and life, the world sweeter and more beautiful. Feeling that they have consecrated themselves devoutly and humbly to the most splendid of all work, they do their work faithfully. They have neither time nor inclination to pursue any vague speculative philosophies. They live and do diligently in the broad, bright light of Christ's teachings and promises. They live and think along the straight, clear path of the revelation of the Holy Scriptures. They are not tempted nor lured to the labyrinths and darkness of attempts to penetrate mysteries to finite thought and knowledge impenetrable. Intent on their glorious mission for the service of the King and their brother men, on doing their appointed and bounden duty, they do not pause to pamper themselves with delusions that they have risen superior to the fathers of the Church, the saints they are taught to revere or the faith of the Everlasting Covenant.

Occasionally through some small conduit a trickle of "modernism" comes to us and there is danger that, however thin and feeble it may be, it may infect shallow and callow minds and weakly spiritual constitutions. All of us should be vigilant to detect and prompt to try to check such peril. In a recent issue of a North Carolina newspaper the female columnist indulges in ladylike raptures and rhapsodies over a sermon she heard in St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church in New York City Christmas Day. The rector of that church, Robert Norwood, the writer tells us, chose that day to tell the congregation "he thought it unfortunate that by the doctrine of the Virgin Birth Jesus had been separated from the rest of humanity. He held, in plain words, that there was nothing miraculous in the birth of Jesus".

As one very humble and sinful layman, but a lifelong and devoted son of the Church, I enter here my protest against utterance of such language by a clergyman of the Church, wearing its vestments, in a building consecrated to the worship and glory of Christ and on the day dedicated to memory of Christ's birth; and against approving dissemination of such teaching in Southern secular newspapers. The rector of St. Bartholomew's is little known in Virginia. We need not be concerned with the meanderings and explorations of his mind through mysticisms and metaphysics and the convolutions, contradictions and contortions of distorted understandings and interpretations. I believe I express the feeling of clergy and laity of all this derided but sturdily steadfast "Bible belt" in saying that this gentleman has no right to appear in the uniform of the Church, to officiate in its pulpit, nor to receive its benefits while denying one of its fundamental, foundation, doctrines. To me it appears awful blasphemy and hypocrisy for a man to profess to preach from the Holy Scriptures while proclaiming the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke, as we have them, altogether untrue, their narrative of the Saviour's Birth mere pretty fiction, devised to amuse and appeal to sentiment. It is hard for me, an ordinary business man, accustomed to take words at their usually accepted meanings and trained to consider mental reservations as deception and lying, to understand how this rector can lead his congregation in reciting in the Creeds, "I believe" in Jesus Christ, "who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin May"; or that "I believe" in a Christ who "was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary". It seems to me the people kneeling before him must feel that, like the mocking fiends in Macbeth, he palters with them in a double sense as he reads that part of the thrilling invocation of the Litany, "By the mystery of thy Holy Incarnation", while contending that there was no mystery, no incarnation. The writers of the Gospels were close associates and followers of Jesus, knew His Mother and her husband, were intimate with all the persons who knew the facts of His birth. Yet the rector of St. Bartholomew's tells his hearers that he knows more of the real facts than Luke and Matthew combined.

Rejecting the Gospel account of the birth, logically and unavoidably the rector of St. Bartholomew's must reject, also, the entire account of the Annunciation and the birth of St. John. He makes the Gospels one string of nice fancies and untruthful idealisms, goes back to the sapient verdict of the Sans Culottes of the French revolution that Jesus simply was an exceptionally good and kindly man and earnest preacher and reformer, with nothing miraculous within His power or attributes. Consequently, all the miracles are myths and Christ's reported message of John never was spoken. With the other miracles must go the Resurrection and Ascension. Following the direct, obvious path of this logic and opinion, every prayer in our Book of Common Prayer is a falsehood based on fallacy and we should, to be courageously consistent, tear up the prayer books, lay aside our Bibles, except as literary productions. The next and inevitable step is that we must depend for our destinations and conditions in the future life on our own righteousness; or trust to luck; or decide that our conduct here will have no effect on our lives hereafter; or attain the glorious consummation of looking forward to universal extinction.

How the rector, Robert Norwood, of St. Bartholomew's, reconciles his teaching with his ministrations, his ordination vows and his sworn allegiance to his Church and profession, is beyond the comprehension of this plain, unlettered layman. The human conscience, however, is traditionally elastic and when once we begin to stretch it we may stretch indefinitely. For one, I file protest against his retention of the authority and performance of the offices of the Church while doing all he can to thwart the purposes, profane the pulpit and destroy all the real value of the Church. For my part, I would rather see all such rectors and the congregations holding with them repudiate the Church frankly and have the courage to get out of it than have them remain in it, poisoning and emasculating it. History and common sense tell us that a very small band of real Episcopalians, staunch and true and faithful, strong and clear in their convictions, marching steadily and fearlessly under Christ's banner and with His inspiration and guidance, can do mighty work for God's service and man's deliverance and happiness. The most numerous host of idly insipid idealists, theorists and sentimentalists wandering vaguely in torturous roads, leaderless, purposeless, without definite hope or goal, must be impotent except to lead some astray, away from all that is dearest, sweetest and best to despair and destruction. These modernistic mental gymnastic acrobats erect a "superficial superstructure of dubious probabilities reared upon a foundation of unquestionable improbabilities" as a result of their self-conceit, ignorance and error, as "all true scholars" are agreed and convinced.

Heroes of the Southern Army

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Times published some time ago an article on "Southern Men in the Northern Army". A number of names were given and the comment was made that "some men" went from the North to fight for the Southern Confederacy, notably General Samuel Cooper, Adjutant General of the United States Army, from Hackensack, N. J., and John C. Pimberton, a Lieutenant General, from Philadelphia. These notable contributions were but two of that large number of men who from conviction, though natives of the North, went South.

The morale and personnel of the Southern Army is a study in itself and will yield a rich reward for future writers, for this vast field as yet has been almost untouched. It was General Joe Hooker, in his testimony before the Committee on the Conduct of the War, who stated of the Army of Northern Virginia: "That Army had by discipline alone acquired a character for steadiness and efficiency unsurpassed, in my judgment, in ancient or modern times. We have not been able to rival it." President Roosevelt says in his "Life of Thomas H. Benton": "The world has never seen better soldiers than those who followed Lee, and their leader will undoubtedly rank as, without any exception, the very greatest of all the great captains that the English-speaking people have brought forth." "The world never saw an army composed of more superb material, intellectually, physically and morally, in all that constitutes what we call morale in an army, than that of the armies of the Confederate States of America," says Dr. William Jones.

Supported by All Classes.

The ideal prevailed in some sections that the War of Secession was opposed by the mass of the people in the South, and that a few hot-headed leaders who led succeeded in provoking the conflict and, after writing it into popular favor, forced the Conscript Act and thus unwillingly led men who were ignorant of the issues and unwilling for the war. This, of course, was not true. The raising of the Confederate Armies was the most spontaneous outpouring of a patriotic people that the world has ever witnessed, and the proof of that is that the magnificent contributions were made not only by all classes of the South, but from every part of the country, and even from across the waters. The heritage of valor on both sides of the conflict is now a national inheritance, and broad-minded Americanism glories in the stamina and stubbornness that fought to a standstill a looseness of construction in constitutional powers that has been settled forever by an appeal to arms.

WHEN IS CHRIST COMING?

By the Reverend Canon F. E. Howitt

JERUSALEM shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. . . . Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. And He spake to them a parable: Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand" (St. Luke 21:24-31).

When Is Christ Coming?

As we ask the question, immediately there comes to our mind the emphatic statement of Christ Himself: "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is." And this statement is absolutely true. We may reason, then, that further discussion of the question is useless, and this is the attitude that many students of God's Word take. But is it, after all, the right attitude? Does not the Word bid the faithful Christian watch? Did not our Lord give unmistakable signs by which His advent might be foretold? And did He not upbraid the Pharisees and the Sadducees of old, for not discerning the signs of their times (St. Matt. 16:3)? Did He not say: "There shall be great tribulation. . . . And immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Surely these are signs by which the time, if not the very day and hour of the Lord's return, may be infallibly known.

How, Then, Are We to Reconcile the Two Apparently Contradictory Statements?

The time of Christ's coming unknown, the time well known. The solution is to be found, I believe, in "rightly dividing the Word of Truth", and so discerning the two phases of our Lord's return. The Scriptures foretell that Christ will, first of all, come for His saints. This coming will be "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" (1 Cor. 15:42), and so instantaneous and possibly secret. St. Paul describes it in 1 Thess. 4:16-17, "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them, in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord".

After an interval, perhaps of three and a half, or possibly of seven years, Christ will return with His saints to earth to reign. This phase of His coming will be seen and known of all men. "As the lightning cometh out of the East, and shineth unto the West, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be". Then, "every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him, and all kindred of the earth shall wail because of Him. Even so. Amen" (Rev. 1:7; St. Matt. 26:64).

Now it was to the first of these phases that our Lord referred when He said: "Of that day and hour knoweth no man." But the first phase must precede the second. Christ cannot come with His saints, until He has first come for them. When, therefore, we see unmistakable signs that Christ's manifest coming with His saints is drawing near, we must infer that the still earlier event, His coming for His saints, is imminent indeed. This is exactly what is perceptible at the present time, and it is in this way that we may "see the day approaching" (Heb. 10:25).

Let us examine, then, some of these God-given signs by which we may know assuredly that "the coming of the Lord draweth night". Three such signs are referred to in the text:

1. The Fulfillment of the Times of the Gentiles.—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." By "the Times of the Gentiles", we understand the period during which God's ancient people, Israel, was to be under Gentile domination, and their land possessed by Gentile powers. The Hebrew monarchy came to an end in B. C. 606, when Zedekiah, the last King of Judah, was deposed and he and his people carried into exile in Babylonia. Jerusalem then fell into the hands of the conquerors, and it has remained in Gentile possession from that day to this. During all the intervening centuries, the Jews have made scarcely any serious attempt to restore their kingdom, or to regain possession of their land. But what do we see today? A new national spirit possessing Israelites everywhere, and a deliberate attempt being made on their part to possess themselves of their land once more. Jews, the world over, are arranging to petition the victorious powers to reestablish them as a nation in their own land.

Now, our blessed Lord says: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled . . . . and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass (as they surely are doing today), then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."

2. Israel's National Revival.—"Behold the fig tree." By the fig tree is symbolized the Israelite nation. "As the days of a tree are the days of my people" (Isa. 65: 22). God has been pleased to make use of three trees by which to designate His earthly people during their entire history.

The vine represents them from their inception as a nation, to the first coming of Christ. It typifies them as the PRIVILEGED people of God (Isa. 5:1-7; Jer. 2:21). The fig tree prefigured their history from the first to the second Advent. It typified POSSESSION without reality (Gen. 3:7), and thus foreshadoweded Israel's moral condition from our Lord's time to the present day (Matt. 15: 8-9; 23:37-39). The olive, the symbol of PRODUCTIVENESS, typifies Israel's future blessedness under the benign rule of Jesus, when He comes (Rom. 11:12-21; St. Luke 1:32-33; Jer. 23:3-8). It is deeply interesting to study what is said of the fig tree in the Gospels. In the parable of St. Luke 13:6, Christ is represented as the certain man who had a fig tree planted in his vineyard to which He comes for three years seeking fruit, but finding none, He orders it to be cut down. The dresser of the vineyard, who doubtless represents the Holy Spirit, pleads that it may be spared a little longer. So it was not until Israel had rejected the Lord Jesus, and resisted the Holy Spirit's testimony to Him, that it in turn was rejected by God (Acts 7:51-53). In St. Matt. 21:19, we have the cursing of the fig tree. Our Lord's words on that occasion are deeply significant, as foretelling the duration of Israel's rejection. "Let no fruit grow on thee to the age." Not until the new, the millennial age, is brought in by Christ's return, will Israel become fruitful once more. Our text refers to the approach of this very period. "Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and known of your ownselves that summer is now nigh at hand."

In 1895 Dr. Theodore Herzl published a work entitled "The Jewish State", in which he advocated an attempt on the part of the Jews to take steps to secure Palestine and reestablish themselves therein as their national home. This pubilcation re-awakened a national spirit throughout Jewry. In 1897 the first Zionist Congress assembled at Basle in Switzerland. At first their intention was to buy back the land, but the Sultan of Turkey refused to entertain any such idea, and then hopes seemed destined to failure. Then came the Great War. A Jewish professor, Dr. Weisman, at a critical point in the history of the war, when the materials for munitions were running very low, discovered a new and superior explosive, tri-nitro-toulene, which discovery he at once presented to the British government. When asked in what way the government could reward him, he replied that he desired no personal favor, but that if England won the war, he desired that the government should reestablish the Jews in their native land. This led to the Balfour declaration of 1918, in which it was stated that "His Majesty's government viewed with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use its best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object". This has been called the Magna Carta of Zionism.

At the conclusion of the war, the League of Nations in 1920 entrusted the mandate for Palestine to England.

Since which time the Jews have been afforded protection and are returning in ever increasing numbers to their native soil. Recent developments point to a wonderful revival of national prosperity for the Jews. The possibilities of almost prodigious wealth have been discovered in the Dead Sea Valley. Already a concession for its development has been made to an English syndicate and we may look for marvelous developments both in regard to the country and its people in the near future. God is surely fulfilling His promise of restoration to His chosen people.

We have seen how Israel is already showing wonderful signs of national revival; "so", says our blessed Lord, "when ye see these things come to pass know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand".

3. The Revival of the Nations.—"Behold . . . . . all the trees." If the fig tree represents the nation of Israel, then "all the trees" must represent other nations. But what nations? Not all the nations of the world, but all the nations that come within the purview of the prophetic Scriptures. The nations that went to make up those great Gentile empires which conquered and dispersed Israel, and trod Jerusalem under their feet . . . Babylonia, Medo-Persia, Graecia and Rome. These nations, as the prophecies show, are, like Israel, to revive again before the advent of Christ to reign (Dan. 2:34-35; 7:1-7; 13:14; Rev. 13: 1-2; 17:8). Now this is exactly what we see taking place today. Within the past century two of the old empires, Greece and Rome, have had at least a partial resuscitation. Babylonia, too, by the recent introduction of railways, and the reconstruction of its ancient irrigation canals, is about to take on a new lease of life, and doubtless the ancient city of Babylon will once more arise to a greatness upon its former ruins. More wonderful still is the reassembling of the long separated portions of the old Roman Empire. The late war did much to bring this about. It has drawn together the countries that formed the great western province of the Roman empire—England, France, Belgium, Spain and Portugal, Italy and Greece, and bound them closely to one another. But it is truly wonderful to see how its eastern province, which has been so long separated, is again coming within the sphere of its power, and will doubtless soon form a great whole. In 1864 Algeria came to France, likewise Morocco in 1911. Tripoli came to Italy in 1912, and Egypt to England in 1914. It only remains for the Turk to be driven from his last stronghold in Asia Minor, and we shall see Rome's eastern province entirely restored. "Now," says our blessed Lord, "when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of heaven is nigh at hand."

We learned, then, that if we would know the time of our Lord's return, we must look at God's clock, which is Israel. Round it all the portents cluster, and to it all the signs have been given. We have only to see how He is preparing both His people, and their land for the return of their King, to realize how very near the Lord's coming must be.

SO WE ANSWER THE QUESTION WITH WHICH WE BEGAN BY SAYING THAT, WHILE WE MAY NOT, INDEED CANNOT TELL, THE DAY NOR THE HOUR WHEN CHRIST WILL COME, WE ARE ASSURED, BY THE EVER ACCUMULATING SIGNS OF THE TIMES, THAT HIS COMING IS EVER IMMINENT, THAT IT MUST BE VERY NEAR, AND MAY OCCUR AT ANY MOMENT.

What then is our urgent duty in view of these facts? Surely this—to take to heart and at once act upon our blessed Lord's solemn injunction: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

THE TWO CLASSES

TWO classes—Saved or Lost! Though very short, yet the importance of this question cannot be overestimated. Under one or other of the terms you must certainly find yourself, and your eternal happiness or misery depends on which it is. Either you are saved, and therefore waiting for that moment which shall usher you into a state of eternal happiness; or, dreadful alternative! you are in the condition of those who are lost, and are fast hurrying on to that moment which must settle for ever your destiny, and consign you beyond the reach of hope. We would press upon you a word from the Scriptures: "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the Judgment" (Heb. 9:27). Most surely you are rapidly advancing on the journey of life, and how near you may be to its close who can tell! The end may be near. But, near or remote, what can be of more concern than your own Eternity? Where is it to be spent, and with whom? Amidst the bright glories of Heaven or the dark miseries of Hell? In the Father's house, at the Saviour's side, and with all the saved from every land. "In My Father's house are many mansions: I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also" (John 14:2). Or awful thought! in the prison-house of hell, with the devil and his angels, and all the impenitent wicked of every age? "The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments" (Luke 16:23). Now, we may forget our sorrow, or even our misery for a little while in welcome sleep, but there will be no sleep in hell. Now, we may find a quiet corner and weep alone, and fine relief in solitude, but no quiet, no solitude, no relief will ever be found there. There the millionaire and the pauper, the cultured and the depraved, find themselves upon a common level. The infidel is no longer a scorner; he has now become a believer in all the solemn realities declared in the Bible, but belief to him has come too late. "The devils also believe and tremble" (Jas. 2: 19), and it avails them naught. Hope shall flee away, and dark despair shall complete its awful work. But enough! enough!

Blessed be God, the day of grace still lingers. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). In the Cross we see God's perfect love to the sinner displayed; and how perfectly He has brought the sacrifice of Christ eternally settled the whole question of sin for the believer, and fully met every divine requirement, and that according to His infinite holiness and justice. Such is God's great salvation which He freely offers to you. If you simply believe in Jesus as your Saviour, and His blood as having made a complete atonement for sin, you are warranted in knowing that you are, through faith, justified by Him from all things (whether you feel it or not) just because God has said you are. Hear His Word, and have peace with God, "for by Him all that believe are justified from all things".

It is difficult, more than difficult, for either writer or reader fully to realize the force of these two words, "Saved —Lost". All that is solemn, weighty, important—all that is blessed or miserable, both for time and eternity, is included in those words. Were every reader of these pages and every hearer of the Gospel to be described according to truth, these two words would suffice for all. There is no third class; no middle ground in Scripture. Hence we read that "He that believeth on Him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the Name of the only begotten Son of God" (John 3:18). God's salvation is for lost man, but the difficulty lies in this that man will not believe or own he is lost. As one has forcibly said, "Young, brave, polite, intelligent, but lost! Beautiful, amiable, honored, beloved, but lost! Wealthy, idolized, caressed, flattered, but lost! Serious, courteous, moral, affectionate, but lost! Discreet, benevolent, educated, a church-goer, but lost"! Remember, that although every qualification and advantage here mentioned most truthfully applied to you, you are still lost if not a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the study of the Bible we see there are but two classes of people in the world before God: (1) Those who are saved (1 John 5:12). (2) Those who are not (John 3:36). We find one class spoken of as having "passed from death unto life" (John 5:24; 1 John 3:14); as having "everlasting life" (John 5:24); as having "forgiveness of sins" (Eph. 1:7). And we see another class spoken of as being "children of wrath" (Eph. 2:3); "without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12). We see in fact mankind divided into two great classes of forgiven and unforgiven.

Be assured God is not against you, though He hates your sins; Jesus did not come to make God love us, but to express the compassion that was already in His heart toward us.

"God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8). God did not require to be reconciled to us, as some in the darkness of their minds suppose, but we, as rebel sinners against His righteous throne, needed to be reconciled to Him. "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life" (Rom. 5:10). Look and live.

RADICAL CRITICISM CHALLENGED

"HIGHER CRITICISM," destructive of the genuineness and contemporary character of the books of Moses, is being sharply questioned in the lands where it started.

The lofty claim to the exclusive possession of scientific scholarship on the part of the profane Graf-Wellhausen school is being brusquely challenged. British, Scotch and American scholars who have abjectly surrendered to these radicals, should be a little less cock-sure and superior. It is high time to call a halt to this littering up of our dictionaries, commentaries, and books of reference with the J. E. P. D. jargon of imagined fragmentary documents, based on uncertain traditions, folklore, and tribal stories, edited late in history by known, skillful, but unscrupulous, reactors, and made to bear the stamp of divine authority by attributing all to Moses, the friend of God. This documentary theory must in reason cease to be pronounced as fixed and sure as the solar system by any scholar that values his reputation.

The following are some of the distinguished foreign critics who definitely reject the non-Mosaic authorship and the late and fragmentary character of the Pentateuch and Joshua.

Wilhelm Moller, of Beckwith, acknowledged as one of the great Biblical scholars of Europe, and at one time an ardent disciple of Willhausen, has written powerfully defending the "traditional" position. His "Deuteronomy the Fulcrum of the Pentateuch", recently translated into English, is said to be a masterly work. Will it be read and considered by our critics? Or will it be ignored by them, as beneath notice, as was done with Dr. Moller's other trenchant work, "Are the Critics Right"?

Of the same mind are Dr. Martin Kegel, of Templin, and Dr. Sanda, of the University of Prague.

Dr. Edouard Neville, the venerable Swiss Egyptologist, without peer in his field, has in many works exposed what he terms the contradictions and the illogical conclusions of the higher critics.

Dr. Lohr, formerly a bright star among radical critics, has in recent publications covered with ridicule the whole Willhausen theory of development of the Old Testament revelations.

Prof. J. Dahse announces that a revolution in Pentateuchal criticisms is at hand, declaring that a better knowledge of the Septuagint (i. e., O. T., in Greek dating from third or fourth century before Christ) has made impossible the use of divine names as a test of documentary diversity.

Prof. Erdmanns and Dr. Emil Reich also condemn the theory, and the latter accuses the critics of downright ignorance of the principles of sound criticism. And Dr. Johannes Hehn asserts that it is as impossible to explain Israel's religion without Moses as it is to account for Mohammedanism without Mohamet.

Prof. Troelstra, successor to the famous radcal critic, Kuenen of Holland, contends for the organic unity of Pentateuch.

Dr. Siegfried Gobel, of Bonn; Prof. Noldeke, the master of Semitic studies in Europe, and Prof. E. F. Konig, may be cited as opposing this critical school. Prof. Van Hoonacker, of Louvain, ranges himself on the same side.

It may, therefore, be maintained confidently that scholarship of the highest character is enlisted in the defense of the conservative view of the Old Testament. It behooves the adherents of "higher critical" theories so confidently asserted, to examine with care once more this whole matter. However scant the consideration they may think it worth while to give to the able and scholarly arguments of many British and American defenders of the old faith, they must certainly attend to the warnings that come to them from the lands where the whole scheme came to birth. When the front has begun to crumble in several important sectors, the time is coming for a retirement of the whole line.

Dr. Lyon G. Tyler, Son of Pres. John Tyler Answers W. G. Barton's Claim Regarding Lincoln's Religion

Editor The News Leader:

Sir: My attention has been called to a letter of William E. Barton, one of the biographers and eulogists of Lincoln published some time ago as a reply to Major G. W. B. Hale, and I hope you will permit a word or two in comment.

In his letter Mr. Barton states that he had never seen any biographer of Lincoln that pretended that Lincoln was a Church member, but that "many of his biographers, all (he thought) of his candid biographers, including some who make no claim to being religious, affirm that in the essentials of his matured belief, Lincoln was a Christian".

I have looked about for these "essentials" but do not find the divinity of Christ among them and certainly most Christians believe in that as a cardinal principle. What Lincoln said in his messages and other authentic writings about religion would fit him as well for a Moslem, Brahmist or Buddhist; for all these believe in God and duty to others. Indeed, one of the most beautiful poems in the English language is that which tells of Abou Ben Adhem who, because of his love for his fellowman, received the blessings of his God. Ben Adhem was not a Christian, I believe.

That little ground exists for the affirmation of "his many biographers" is shown by Mr. Barton himself in his own formal life of Lincoln, which has this paragraph: "It is not easy to classify him among religionists or to define in terms of accepted creeds the precise terms of his religious faith."

If the descriptions of Lincoln stopped at what Mr. Barton ascribes to his "many biographers", a long suffering public could stand it; but Lincoln and his religion became too nerve racking when scores of preachers, public speakers and writers acclaim him a Christian saint and a second Jesus Christ.

The Rev. Charles Francis Potter, in an address delivered at Earl Hall, Columbia University, New York, characterized Lincoln as the "future social Christ of America" and prophesied the coming of an "American Church" and an "American Bible", in which people "will find in parallel columns the stories of Christ and of Lincoln"! People that talk that way must be crazy.

To defend Lincoln Mr. Barton attacks William H. Herndon, his law partner and one of his biographers, who described Lincoln as a rampant infidel, who, as he became more prominent, became more discreet in the use of words and phrases, but remained at heart the same. Mr. Barton denounces Herndon as an "infidel and drunkard", but I don't know that infidelity, however much to be regretted, disqualifies a man from telling the truth; and as for drunkenness, we have the Latin proverb "In Vino Veritas", and Lincoln himself used this language: "Indeed, I believe if we take habitual drunkards as a class their heads and hearts will bear an advantageous comparison with those of any other class."

Undoubtedly Lincoln went too far, but Lincoln sold liquor and kept a bar in 1833 as partner in the firm of "Berry and Lincoln" and he knew more about drunkards than Mr. Barton, and lying is not very often one of their faults. Is it possible that Lincoln could have stood Herndon for sixteen years as a law partner if all this time Lincoln were a Christian and Herndon an infidel? Birds of a feather flock together. Herndon, like Barton, professes admiration for Lincoln, and Mr. Barton himself, in his Life of Lincoln, quotes Herndon approvingly in other matters. Ward H. Laman, another biographer of Lincoln, and who also knew him intimately, had the same opinion of his religious views as Herndon.

Mr. Barton in his letter to The News Leader states that he wants to "put a pen into the hoary old lie" about the suppression of Herndon's first edition of the "Life of Abraham Lincoln", published in 1890. How he goes about this is shown by his saying that every first class library in the country has one or more copies, and that he himself has four copies, but this would account for only a few hundred copies and the sale of any really popular book runs into the thousands and hundreds of thousands. A work that costs the purchaser $65 cannot be said to be easy of purchase. Dr. Nathaniel W. Stephenson is another great admirer of Lincoln, but he says in his recent work, "Lincoln", 1922, p. 436, that the sensational "First Edition of Herndon's work produced a storm of protest", and "the book was promptly recalled, worked over, toned down and reissued, expurgated in 1892". Fortunately, the two editions are in the Virginia State Library and a mere cursory examination shows that the text of the two is far from being the same. For instance, five pages of the genuine book beginning on the second line of the fiftieth page of the first volume are omitted—suppressed—in the second edition. In these pages Herndon records a satire written by Lincoln, in mocking imitation of the Bible, called "The First Chronicles of Reuben", and describes the exceedingly base and indecent device by which Lincoln brought about the events which gave opportunity for the satire and adds some verses written and circulated by Lincoln, which he (Herndon) considers even more vile than the Chronicle.

The reprint of Herndon's first edition (1890) to which

Mr. Barton refers as "procurable almost for a song" was issued in 1926 after another edition of the expurgated edition of 1892 had been issued in 1924. The advertising circular which announced the appearance of the reprint of Herndon's first edition set the price for publishers at $10, and states that "the original was suppressed and destroyed immediately after publication". I can't see how this helps to "put a pen" in the "hoary old lie".

As a matter of fact, Mr. Barton has incurred heavy responsibility to the public through his various books. The Lincoln which he has built up by the discarding of evidence like Herndon's, by strained constructions and illusive reasoning is not a reality but a myth, and no myth can endure. The writer distinctly remembers how for years after the war the propagandists and mental inebriates of the North compared John Brown with Jesus Christ, but the myth blew up and this brutal man is now recognized in the North in his true character as a murderer and a law breaker.

A Colored Man's Tribute to General Lee and His Ilk

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—The nineteenth of January not only commemorates the birthday of a great and distinguished soldier, an ardent and devoted Churchman, in the person of the late Gen. R. E. Lee, but in him, and through him, a class of the noblest men ever born in this country.

As the years come and go all thoughtful and intelligent readers of history of the colored race will note with increasing clearness the great and inestimable benefits which their forbears received at the hands of these, their great benefactors. Possibly the last one of the "staff officers" of General Lee, Rev. Giles B. Cooke, now up in the eighties, my old teacher of precious memory, but a few days ago, with his own hand, sent me his warm greetings with the opening of the new year. The mere mention of the names of Giles B. Cooke, William M. Dame, General Pendleton and Capt. F. M. Colston intimate how nobly and unselfishly all of the members of their class of the white race wrought for the well-being of the people, once their slaves, but then their brethren. It would prove a wonderfully illuminating chapter were the full activities of that noble group on behalf of freedmen be put on record.

Surely the Southern people suffered much during the days of "reconstruction", but infinitely more and distressing would have been the situation had it not been that the friendship all along manifested by this particular class bore its legitimate fruit in lives of faithful black men and women, who had lived in their lives and who had been partakers of their spirit of high courtesy and spontaneous generosity.

It was this noble guard of the colored "elect" who stood between the masses of their own people and moderated a wild and enthusiastic spirit loaded with destructive tendencies. The protection of the white women and children while the men were in the army, the alertness and zeal with which black men hastened to use the ballot just placed in their hands for the restoration to the suffrage of many of their old white friends, tells the story that the reflection of courtesy and kindness toward the blacks had reacted in time of sore need, bringing joy and gladness to hearts temporarily cast down.

Gen. Robert E. Lee was the "type-man" of the noblest nature of the Old South. He was representative of that class of Southerners who, despite the system of slavery, aspired to treat their black fellow-man as a human being and impart to him the best in their own lives.

THE BIBLE---WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT CAME DOWN TO US

By Dr. Williamson

I. WHAT IT IS.

THE word is derived from the Greek noun Biblos which means the inner bark of the papyrus plant—a substance from which was obtained the material which took the place of writing paper in ancient times. Hence the word came to signify the written paper, or book; and Biblia signifying a collection of books, has given the name to our English Bible, which is, in fact, a library rather than a single volume. The Bible of which we shall speak is the Book which we have all known and loved from our childhood days.

The earlier books of the Bible are the most ancient books of which the world knows anything, while even the latest are now nearly 2,000 years old.

The first five books, commonly known as thePentateuch (from the Greek revxos—five, and revxos—a book), take us back to the Mosaic era, some 1,400 years before the birth of Christ; while the books of the New Testament were not written until after the death of our Lord. The collection of writings, therefore, which we call the Bible, was produced over a period of fully 1,500 years.

The Diversity of Inspired Authorship.

King David, who wrote so many of the Psalms, lived 400 years after Moses. Between the reign of King David and the time of the Prophet Isaiah there is an interval of two hundred and fifty years between Isaiah and Ezra over one hundred and fifty years, between Ezra and Malachi about six years, and between Malachi and the writers of the New Testament books over four hundred years. Thus between the time of Isaiah and the time when the Gospels and Epistles were written, there elapsed a period of about seven hundred years. Further, the writers of these different books were not only separated from each other by great intervals of time, with all the consequent divergence in circumstances, local influences, civilization, and degrees of knowledge; they were also reparated from each other in an even more remarkable manner by the great variety of their respective social positions.

Moses was the adopted son of the daughter of one of the greatest kings of his age, and was learned with all the learning of one of the most civilized and cultured nations known to history—a nation possessed of skill and knowledge in arts and crafts which in some respects exceed those of this enlightened twentieth century. The apostles, Peter and John, on the other hand, were lowly born, unlettered fishermen. David was a warrior king and a skilled musician; and Solomon his son a splendid and powerful monarch, whose wealth and wisdom were renowned far beyond limits of his own dominions. The prophet Amos was a herdsman. Daniel was a statesman of royal birth holding high office in the kingdom of Babylon. Paul was a learned Pharisee, highly trained in the Jewish theology of his time. Matthew was a tax-gatherer under the Roman Government; and Luke a physician.

I only mention these examples to show vividly the unparalleled diversity in rank, training, occupation, and mental and practical outlook of the writers of the sixty-six books which together form the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and constitute our Bible.

Harmony of Thought and Unity of Purpose.

Try to imagine for one moment a volume consisting of a number of books, written, one by King Alfred in Anglo-Saxon times; another by the Chamberlain of William the Conqueror; another by a Shepherd on the hills of Scotland in the time of Henry VIII; another by Oliver Cromwell; others by humble and ignorant fishermen on the coasts of Yorkshire in the sixteenth century; another by a great English Administrator who had governed India as Viceroy in the nineteenth century; another by a learned scholar of Oxford or Cambridge; and another by a medical man of the present day—all breathing the highest spiritual truths, and giving either a history of God's dealings with the English people, or setting out the claims that the Creator of the world has upon His creatures, or rebuking the sins of the nation and of individuals, or containing the noblest devotional songs, or foretelling future events. Imagine such books to have been written, gathered together, and bound into one volume! What kind of a book would that volume be? It is certain that, however interesting, it would be preeminently a mechanical union by printer and bookbinder of a mass of divergent and discordant teachings. The most of its parts would have no connection whatever with the rest, and the whole would possess but a literary and antiquarian interest for a very limited number of readers. Indeed, the mere conception of such a preposterous publication at once strikes every one as unreal and ridiculous. Nevertheless the Bible, although a book composed of writings by men of far more widely divergent types, is a perfectly homeogeneous whole; with not only a harmony of thought bringing all into a living unity, but exhibiting a progressive development in the revelation of truth, which is altogether inexplicable except upon the hypothesis of a common origin.

The Book itself claims to be God's Word to man, given by special and direct inspiration (2 Pet. 1:21; 2 Tim. 3:16). When this view of it is taken, what would otherwise be incomprehensible becomes easily intelligible, and we at once realize how it is that the Bible stands alone among all the books of the world in this marvel of its unity in diversity.

The Book of Books.

It is beyond controversy that by translation into another language any ordinary book loses in force and power. Yet the Bible, as translated into English, in the majesty of its diction, the beauty and purity of its language, and the influence it has exercised over the life and character of our nation, stands alone and supreme in the whole range of our literature.

Again, all down the ages no book has aroused such hatred, or been so furiously, determinedly, and continuously assailed. The fact that it has survived all these attacks, and exercises an influence greater than ever in the world today, is a characteristic of this marvelous book which separate it by an impassable gulf from all other literature.

II. THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Scriptures written before the time of our Lord, or in other words, the Old Testament portion of our Bible, will be naturally first taken into consideration. The thirty-nine books of which the Old Testament is composed did not emanate from writers who belonged to a literary nation, to a race of world conquerors, who by their overwhelming force and might were able to impose their will and opinions upon the rest of mankind. They came, on the contrary, from a people who have been contemptuously described as a nation of slaves, who had suffered years of bondage and been long despised, oppressed, and fiercely persecuted—a people, too, in whom our fallen human nature was so strong, that in the hour of their prosperity they were continually turning against the most insistent commands of their own sacred writings, and degenerating into the idol worship and godless ways of the heathen nations by whom they were surrounded. Time and again their rulers proved the most bitter enemies of the God of the Bible, and used the whole force of their power to blot out the very memory of Him from the national life. As signal instances of this Ahab may be cited, and Jezebel his Queen, who determinedly set herself to compass the destruction of the prophets of the Lord.

The Hebrew Scriptures Almost Destroyed.

At one time, when a religiously disposed monarch desired to reestablish in the nation the worship of Jehovah, no copy of the Hebrew Scriptures was to be found, until the High Priest discovered one after diligent search in the House of the Lord. Again, when later the Jews were carried away into captivity at Babylon, their temple was destroyed, and the Ark which contained the original copy of the Law disappeared. In 170 B. C. a king of Syria, "Antiochus Epiphanes, when he took Jerusalem, murdered about 40,000 of its inhabitants, sold as many more to be slaves, and ordered that whoever was found with the Book of the Law should be put to death: and every copy of it that could be found was burnt. Yet even in this fiery trial which lasted three years the Scriptures were preserved" ("Help to the Reading of the Bible," by B. E. Nichols).

The Samaritans had their own copies of the Law in Hebrew, known as the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the jealousy between them and the Jews shows that the law was common to both parties before the feud became so bitter, as we find it in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah.

While the Jews in Palestine wrote important books on leather rolls (Jeremiah 36:4; Luke 4:17), the Jews of Egypt adopted papyrus, first in rolls, then folded and stitched like our books. The people of Pergamos invented an improved kind of leather, which was called after their own town, Parchment, but was not stiff like our modern parchment, but pliable like our vellum. All these kinds of writing material were in use in different parts of the Roman Empire in our Lord's Day (2 Tim. 4:13).

Their Preservation and Transmission.

The Jews of Palestine were always careful about the copying of their Scriptures, and by degrees they evolved most scrupulous precautions to obviate mistakes; the number of words in a book was counted and noted down; the middle word was noted down, even the number of letters was noted down at the end. When a copy was made, all these checks were most carefully observed. When a copy became too old or damaged for further use, to preserve it from desecration it was buried. It is from such a burial place in Cairo that our own generation has recovered some of the most ancient copies known.

The very persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes made the Jews more deeply attached to their Scriptures, and wakened them to the need of gathering, multiplying, and translating them. Not only did they copy the book of the Law, but they collected the writings of the Prophets, and soon their synagogues heard the public reading of both Law and Prophets. As the Greek kings had planted colonies in many parts of their realms, Jews in large numbers were placed in flourishing towns, such as Alexandria and Antioch. These Jews learned to speak Greek (John 7:35; James 1:1:; 1 Pet. 1:1); and so they began a Greek translation of the laws as early as 250 B. C., and within a century all their sacred books were available in Greek, so that even the fierce enmity of Antiochus failed to blot out the Scriptures. To the Law and the Prophets they added a third collection, called more vaguely, The Writings, or from the first part of it, the Psalms. These are the titles which our Lord uses in Luke 24:44-45: "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me." The order in which the books were arranged was different from ours; our Lord's reference "From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zachariah, who perished between the altar and the sanctuary", shows that His Bible began with Genesis, and ended with 2 Chronicles, exactly as the Jewish Bible does today (cf. Luke 6:51, with 2 Chron. 24:20 and 21). The Jews of Alexandria divided some of the books into two volumes, and rearranged the order, which we follow in our English Bibles; but the contents of our Old Testament are exactly those Scriptures which our Lord used, which He declared could not be broken, and which His Apostle says are able to make us wise unto salvation.

The "Septuagint".

About three hundred years before Christ Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, caused a translation to be made of the whole of the Old Testament, from Hebrew into Greek; for which purpose it is said a company of seventy learned men (selected from each of the twelve tribes) were sent from Jerusalem to Alexandria, and hence this version was named the Septuagint. The work of the translation, however, took a long time, and there are many traditions in regard to it. The Pentateuch in the Septuagint and the Pentateuch in the Samaritan version agree in almost all respects. The Septuagint version of the Old Testament had a wide circulation, and was familiar to the Apostles and to the early Christian Church. The New Testament quotations from the Old Testament are largely from the Septuagint, which explains some differences in the wording of these quotations from the corresponding passages of the Old Testament as we have them in our Authorized Version, which was translated directly from the Hebrew. The Hebrew Old Testament in the time of our Lord was practically the Old Testament as we have it now; and our Lord's reference to the "Scriptures" were to the Scriptures of the Old Testament as we have them today in all essentials.

The Jews today divide their Bible into three portions —The Law (Torah), the Prophets (Nebiyim), and the Writings (Kethubim). These are the same divisions as those to which our Lord refers in Luke 24:44, 45, "And He said unto them, these are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures".

Such, briefly stated, was the descent or chain of continuity of the Old Testament Scriptures down to the time of our Lord on earth. Notwithstanding the scrupulous and jealous care of the Jews to preserve unaltered and intact the actual words of the original inspired documents, there had come into existence by that time an enormous mass of both oral and written traditions, explaining and expanding the laws and ceremonies as given in the Torah (the Law), and multiplying the burdens and exactions laid on the people. Against these our Lord was insistent in uttering condemnation and denunciation, e. g.:

"He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoured me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the Commandments of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and of cups, and many other such like things ye do" (Mark 7:6-8).

"Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers" (Luke 11:46).

"Woe unto you lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves and them that were entering in ye hindered" (Luke 6:52).

"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers! How can ye escape the damnation of hell" (Matt. 23:33).

Our Lord's Testimony to the Scriptures.

But while He unsparingly condemned these human additions to the Scriptures, He, as has been truly observed, never once accused the Jews of having tampered with or corrupted the sacred writings themselves. Of these Scriptures it was our Lord who said: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have Eternal Life, and they are they which testify of Me" (John 5:39); and again, "Think not that I came to destroy the Law and the Prophets; I came not to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till Heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the Law till all be fulfilled" (Matt. 5:17, 18). Again, "The Law and the Prophets were until John: since that time the Kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail" (Luke 16:16, 17).

In the Temptation, Christ appeals to the Scriptures as the final Divine Authority, meeting every temptation with, "It is written"—the Incarnate Word appealing to the Written Word. Further, "Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me: for He wrote of Me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words"? (John 5:45-47). Again, "The Scripture cannot be broken" (John 10:35).

The Scriptures of the Old Testament are ever referred to by our Lord as of Divine supreme authority. His whole teaching is founded on the Old Testament Scriptures. He came not to destroy, but to fulfil. He came as a fuller Revelation from God, as the Word Incarnate. As St. John, in the opening of his Gospel, says:

"The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only Begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth . . . . and of His fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ" (John 1:14, 16, 17).

Of His words and teachings Christ Himself says: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (John 6:63): and He refers to Himself as "a Man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God" (John 8:40).

To this I will refer again; my object at present is to trace the writing of the Old Testament and of the New, down to our own English Bible.

THE WAYSIDE CHAPEL.

J. T. Bougher.

"Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?"—1 Cor. 6:19.

There is within a calm retreat,
A Chapel by the Way,
Where I may enter now and then,
To rest awhile, and pray;
A blessed spot, this place within,
Away from strife and care,
A quiet place to meditate,
And meet the Shepherd there.

A table rare is spread for me,
With wonders from the Word,
It's there, my soul communes with Him
It's there, His voice is heard;
At times the Spirit seems to touch
Upon the ivory keys,
And angel voices sweet proclaim,
Their praise on bended knees.

With Him I scan the ages past,
And glories still to be,
I gaze in wonder at His plan,
With Him, and He with me;
May you have also built, my friend,
A Chapel by the Way,
Where you may enter now and then.
To rest a while and pray.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson—No. 21.
Topic—Prayer.

(Read John 17.)

True prayer is having a conference with the Heavenly Father, and is the greatest of all privileges. Acceptable prayer must necessarily focus within the will of God, and to know the will of God we must feed upon His word, that we may be filled with a knowledge of His will, in wisdom and spiritual understanding.

Our petitions must be in spirit and in truth; humble, worshipful, sincere, nothing wavering. True prayer has its rightful divisions, and in a general way, may be thus classified: meditation; adoration, praise; thanksgiving; confession; contrition; petition; faith, intercession. In earnest intercessory prayer, the intercessor with intensity and specific detail on behalf of others, reaches the realm of spiritual conflict with the powers of darkness (Eph. 6:10-18), and rejoices with those who do rejoice, and weeps with those in sorrow. The following Scriptures will be found illuminating:

1. When ye pray, say, "Our Father".—Luke 11:2.
2. God is the Father only of those born into His family.—John 1:12, 13; Gal. 3:26.
3. No access except through the Son.—John 14:6.
4. Whatsoever ye ask in Christ's name.—John 15:16; 16:23.
5. We can come boldly, the blood-bought way.—Heb. 10:19-22.
6. We need first to forgive others.—Mark 11:25, 26.
7. We need to pray in the Spirit.—Eph. 6:18; 1 Cor. 14:15.
8. In all wisdom and spiritual understanding.—Col. 1:9.
9. If we ask according to His will, He heareth.—1 John 5:14.
10. God heareth not sinners; but if any man be a worshipper of God and doeth His will, him He heareth.—John 9:31.
11. His ears are open unto their prayer.—1 Peter 3:12; Rom. 15:24.
12. If we know He heareth, we know He answereth.—1 John 5:15.
13. And with thanksgiving.—Phil. 4:16.
14. In prayer, believeth.—Matt. 21:22.
15. The posture is important: on bended knee.—Eph. 3:14.
16. With deepest reverence. "Hallowed be thy name."—Luke 11:2.
17. "Thy will," not ours.—Luke 11:2.
18. Effectual fervent prayer availeth much.—Jos. 5:16.
19. We should pray for others.—1 Tim. 2:1, 2.
20. The Spirit helpeth, and intercedes for believers.—Rom. 8:26.
21. We need to "pray without ceasing".—1 Thess. 5:17; Rom. 12:12.
22. The prayer of the upright is His delight.—Prov. 15:8.
23. Prayer prepares for suffering and service.—Matt. 26:39.

The Great Commission

ANKING IN OCTOBER.

Bishop Huntington has sent letters to his scattered staff describing a visit he made in October to Anking and Wuhu:

October 25.—All our property (in Anking) except Grace Church and the schools and houses connected with it is occupied by the military, so I went with the Rev. Lindel Tsen and the Rev. Mr. Chu to call on the second in command, and he deputed a sergeant or something of the sort to take us over and introduce us to the man in command of the compound, who in turn very politely showed us over our own buildings!

The compound looked very natural, the grass needs cutting and the hedges need trimming and there are short-cut paths across the lawns in various directions, but not very much more has happened to the place. All the residences but three are more or less fully occupied. . . . There has been no wanton destruction of property, of buildings at least, but a good deal of carelessness, windows broken. . . . The only things that have had really bad usage are the lower floors of two Chinese teachers' houses and the dining room of St. Paul's which have been used for stables in wet weather. . . .

As to movable property, however, the case is quite different. All trunks and boxes have been opened in one way or another and the contents all taken out. Everything made of cloth that they could get hold of they have removed, right down to the ticking off the mattresses. Wooden furniture fared a good deal better, but it is completely mixed up and it is quite impossible to tell what is left. I found chairs of mine in, I think, every house in the compound; there were bureaus without drawers and drawers without bureaus. I found five or six hundred books mostly on the floor of my study where my cache of books had been broken into. . . .

The Chapel of St. Paul's was occupied for sleeping purposes; that at St. Agnes' as a work room. The portrait of the first President appears over the altar, a piece of profanation that annoys me very much. . .

At the Cathedral I found about four hundred and fifty men quartered mostly in the girls' and boys' schools. The officer in command was the most military officer that I have seen anywhere and had everything as neat as any barracks I have seen in any land. The men slept on the floors and had to take their shoes off before they could go into the bedrooms. The Cathedral is used as a "li-t'ang" and has a blackboard in the chancel and a picture of Sun Yat-sen over the altar. . . .

As to the work, Grace Chapel is going strong. The Cathedral congregation and the East Gate congregation have united with them. There were ninety-five at the early Communion service on Sunday and a full church of at least two hundred at the ten-thirty service, where eleven were confirmed. The primary school there is full with about one hundred students. The higher primary is conducted at Lindel Tsen's house, Timothy Hung being in charge with about twenty-five students.

October 26.—I got to Wuhu on October 17 and left the morning of the nineteenth. In general the property was not in bad condition. . . . St. Lioba's compound was in almost perfect condition. . . St. Mark's Church was also only very slightly damaged, though it has been quite dirty.

The buildings at Shih Ch'iao Kang were in pretty good shape, but there were soldiers in the church and in part of the school buildings, and they were fairly dirty. The schools at Shih Ch'iao Kang are going with I think about fifty boys and twenty-five girls. . . . The workers at St. Lioba's were there and the industrial work was going again with apparently very good promise. . . .

On St. Luke's Day I had the early celebration at which there were nineteen present. It was all very nice and I thought on the whole distinctly hopeful, but I regret to say that the morning the troops moved out at Shih Ch'iao Kang was merely the preliminary to the moving in of a much larger body from Nanking. Now both the Lion Hill compound and St. Lioba's are full of soldiers. . . . I had thought that it might be possible for us to move up there a little later . . but I am afraid this new invasion will make that impossible. Of course, it may go by and this become more possible again.

ST. ANNE'S MISSION, EL PASO.

Miss Aline Moise Conrad, R. N., missionary-in-charge of St. Anne's Mission, El Paso, our outstanding (and almost our only) work for Mexicans, writes a delightful letter about the new quarters of the little mission, which includes residence, hospital and oratory. The lack of an altar in the oratory will appeal to some one to remedy. Miss Conrad says, in part:

"The Mexicans with whom I work are very much the same as the people of any other race who are equally poor. The only real difference is that the Mexicans have had less opportunity for development than most other people, and the children are more appealing than any I have ever known. In those two differences lies, I believe, the reason of my love for St. Anne's.

"We moved into the new building last Saturday. It is truly lovely. We have a bath tub, after having been without a tub for a year! The ward is the loveliest part of the whole place. There are three large windows, so it will always be full of sunshine. The beds, chairs and tables are a lovely cream color rather than the usual dead white, and next spring there is to be a five-foot rose garden under the windows.

"If you have seen the plans for the building you know there is a double iron gate opening into a small patio, behind which there is to be a small open oratory. Now it has only the three walls and the roof, and every time I look at it I think of the words, 'There was no room for them in the inn'. If there were only a manger it would look exactly as I picture the place where Jesus lay. I hope some one will soon find money for an altar. It really bothers me! When the money is provided, there is to be a simple stone altar with a colorful Mexican rug on the steps, no doors, and a flagstone walk in the shape of a cross with blue-grass growing in the cracks of the stones and a glory of flowers everywhere."

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

INTERCOMMUNION.

Mr. Editor:

Thank you for your letter of January 27, asking me to give you a statement which you can publish in The Southern Churchman, relative to my recent proposal in connection with the admission of members of other Christian communions into the fellowship of St. Paul's congregation.

I should like to make it clear that I did not authorize the newspaper report and was unaware of its preparation until I read it in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, on the Monday morning following my sermon. At the same time, for a condensed report, it was substantially accurate and an unusually good newspaper summary of a sermon. It was only inadequate in that it did not give the main assumptions upon which my proposal was based.

With this preliminary explanation, I can perhaps best set forth my position by quoting from my notes which I wrote out before I preached the sermon, but which I did not use in the pulpit. The sermon was preached on the Sunday before St. Paul's Day, the date of our annual parish meeting, and I was attempting to outline certain opportunities which, in my judgment, present themselves to St. Paul's Church, Richmond. Having suggested two such opportunities, I then proceeded to present the following:

Again, St. Paul's, through its historic associations with Virginia and the South, which we did not create but of which we are trustees, belongs by its heritage, in a peculiar sense, to the community. Members of other denominations often say to me that they have a feeling that St. Paul's is also their church.

By reason of this opportunity which has been given to us, St. Paul's has a mission and a duty to stand for and work for Christian reunion, and for no exclusive, denominational view of the Church. While we value our heritage as Episcopalians, it is to be prized not so much as an heirloom as a means of service.

There has recently appeared in England a book, which is creating much stir among English Churchmen. It is entitled, "The Impatience of a Parson", and its author, the Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard, was for many years the vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, just off Trafalgar Square. Mr. Sheppard has shown us what a downtown church can mean in the life of a great city, and his experience has made him impatient of the tendency "to care more for the prestige of our own Church and the niceties of 'Church order' than for the Spirit of our Lord Himself".

At the conclusion of the book he submits a draft of resolutions for the consideration of the next Lambeth Conference. One of these suggests itself to my mind as a practical experiment for us to attempt here at St. Paul's, namely, that "the Anglican communion desires that every barrier which separates the adherents of one church from another be removed without delay: and especially the barriers that prevent fellow Christians from kneeling together at the Holy Communion".

The Protestant Episcopal Church in Virginia has always stood for this principle of intercommunion or "open communion", as it is often called. On the first Sunday in the month, it is customary to extend the invitation to members of other Christian communions to unite with us at the Table of the One Lord.

I am convinced, however, that we should carry out the logical implications of that attitude and go a step further. We should receive persons into the full communion of the Episcopal Church on the basis of their confession of Christian allegiance and membership in the Christian communion of their upbringing without requiring them to be confirmed along with the young people and those who, through confirmation, are for the first time making their public confession of Christian allegiance. No matter what explanation we give, to make this requirement in the case of members of other churches has the effect of saying, "We do not recognize the full value of the public confession of faith which you have made as a member of the church in which you were reared". This frequently causes offense and creates a barrier of misunderstanding.

While in the past we have, from time to time, relaxed this rule in the case of individuals who strongly object to confirmation as a reflection upon their former allegiance, I want to announce as a definite principle that henceforth I shall gladly admit into the full communion and fellowship of St. Paul's congregation members of other Christian churches who, for reasons good to themselves, desire to become affiliated with the life of St. Paul's Church—requiring that they shall do only what an Episcopalian would do in transferring from one congregation to another, namely, present a letter from their minister stating that they are communicants in good standing and that they are commended to my pastoral care.

The time has come, I believe, when we must not be content merely to talk about the desirability of Christian reunion, but we must make experiments and take some definite steps in that direction. Certainly one of the first steps is to make clear on our part that we gladly recognize the validity of other communions and are willing to reciprocate with them on equal terms.

It will mean, no doubt, from time to time, relaxing a church rule, but it will be to realize the Christian principle which St. Paul labored to vindicate, namely, that Christ "is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us".

This point was developed and somewhat expanded in the sermon as preached, but the above statement gives the substance of what I said.

In order that I may make my position as clear as possible, I beg leave to state the reason why I believe that this proposal is in full harmony with the spirit of Virginia Churchmanship. The rubric of the Prayer Book, at the end of the confirmation service, states, "and there shall none be admitted to the Holy Communion, until such time as he be confirmed, or be ready and desirous to be confirmed". This rubric has generally been interpreted by Virginia Episcopalians, as applying to those baptized and reared in the Episcopal Church, and as not applying to members of other Christian Churches whom we gladly welcome to the Lord's Table. My proposal is that we shall so interpret this rubric as to cover members of other churches who desire to be regular and not merely occasional communicants.

In the past, I have secured the approval of a Virginia Bishop to carry out this procedure in the case of individuals. My proposal is to do openly and avowedly what we have frequently done quietly, though with no suggestion of concealment.

Furthermore, the resolutions on the reunion of Christendom, adopted by the last Lambeth Conference, recognized the principle that, in the period of making adjustments for the ideal of Christian reunion, certain irregularities in Church order should be countenanced. The following is a resolution which bears upon the subject, namely:

"(A) In view of the prospects and projects of reunion—

"(ii) The Bishops of the Anglican Communion will not question the action of any Bishop who, in the few years between the initiation and the completion of a definite scheme of union, shall countenance the irregularity of admitting to Communion the baptized but unconfirmed Communicants of the non-episcopal congregations concerned in the scheme."

Since the public announcement of my proposal, I have received two letters from pastors of local Presbyterian churches which bear out my assumption that our requirement of confirmation is a ground for misunderstanding. One writes me as follows:

"I hope that you will permit me to express my appreciation of the action you have recently taken, with reference to receiving members of other denominations into the Episcopal Church, without re-confirmation. In my opinion, this will have a very favorable effect upon public opinion, both in and out of the churches. It is a beautiful gesture."

Another local Presbyterian minister writes me that he had recently united in marriage a Presbyterian and a member of my congregation and the latter requested to be received into the membership of his church. "In other places where I have labored," he continues, "it was not customary for Episcopal churches to grant letters of dismission or certificates of membership to persons desiring to unite with Presbyterian churches and I supposed this to be the case also in Richmond. Wishing to save you embarrassment, incident to having to decline such a request, the Session of this church received Mrs. ——— accepting her own statement in lieu of a certificate. I wish you to know that this was not an intentional breach of ministerial courtesy. After reading the morning paper I shall feel warranted in requesting such a certificate should a case of this sort arise."

In conclusion, I would add that I recognize that there are certain technical questions that will need to be studied and safeguarded in the experiment. The spirit of my proposal for St. Paul's congregation, however, is that we shall seek to exercise as Christians the same forms of hospitality and courtesy towards our fellow-Christians, which we are accustomed to exercise in our social relationships and which have always given a characteristic grace and charm to our Virginia life.

Yours very truly,

Beverley D. Tucker, Jr.

ABOVE THE SEETHING TUMULT.

Mr. Editor:

I saw in your paper July 16, 1927 issue, an article entitled "Perils", by the Rev. Mr. Lee, and shortly after, another article by a layman of Alexandria, Dr. G. T. Klipstein, called "Our Churches, Ills Diagnosed and Remedied", and I decided that the paper that would attract two such lines of thought was the paper I would like to read.

I, therefore, sent my subscription for six months, which now I wish to renew. Each issue has been welcomed, for each issue has contained material showing such sane and safe statements that one gets a feeling of repose and comfort in hearing above the seething tumult of modern discord, the clear, unwavering pronouncement of the eternal verities. You are doing a great work for the Church and I thank you.

CHRIST AND THE BIBLE ENTHRONED.

Mr. Editor:

In my judgment, it is high time to tear the mask off the situation and let the WHOLE Church KNOW just what is going on in all the Seminaries. ANYTHING said about Alexandria, Va., Seminary would be, I might say, DOUBLY TRUE of all the others.

I am filled with gratitude every time I open The Southern Churchman and see Christ and the Bible ENTHRONED where they rightly belong. It is simply GLORIOUS. I speak of it in public and private wherever I go. AMEN.

I am NOT HIRED and I CANNOT be FIRED. AMEN. P. G. (Praise God).

There is NOTHING in my power that I would not GLADLY do for you in the great cause you have in hand.

(Signed) J. J. D. Hall.

APPRECIATION.

Mr. Editor:

Just a note of appreciation for The Southern Churchman I look forward with pleasure to the week-end for its reception.

I keep it moving. Five read it in this home. Then it is sent to my daughter who hands it on to others. I especially enjoyed Mr. Langston's article on the Communion,

History of the Church of England, Ignatius of Antioch and One Day Nearer Heaven.

The world will grow better for The Southern Churchman's teaching, for you know in whom you believe and teach it.

"LEST WE FORGET."

Mr. Editor:

So glad to see "John Marshall, My Boy", in The Southern Churchman.

"O Lord of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!"

I recall it as it came out in 1865 (or 6) to the comfort of my soul.

THE OLD PATHS.

Mr. Editor:

I want to thank you for the great help and pleasure "The Southern Churchman" brings with its weekly message. Those things we have so surely believed. There may be much that is good in the new wine (current thought of today), it seems very intoxicating, but the old, "mellowed and strengthened by time is best".

The old paths that lead by the still waters of comfort are wonderfully refreshing in this day of hurly-burly preaching and thinking. We are most grateful to any Church paper that reminds us there are still "The old paths" trod by so many saintly feet through the ages. They may seem hidden, overgrown with underbrush, weeds, briars and thorns, but they are there for those who really love and wish to walk therein.

We may need some guide like our good Church paper to point them out, but they are just the same paths, yesterday, today and forever. These old paths that lead to peace, righteousness and everlasting life. May we find and walk therein all the days of our earthly pilgrimage.

FOR NEARLY SEVENTY YEARS.

Mr. Editor:

I have just received your letter of January 1, and appreciate you wanting me to read The Southern Churchman. Nothing would induce me to do without it. I have been reading it for nearly seventy years, and hope to continue to do so, while I remain in this world. I renewed my subscription, and had it sent to Cobham, Virginia, where I have lived all my life. I am just visiting my son in Memphis and his wife takes the Churchman. I am enjoying it more than ever and am glad it is in such good hands and standing up for the "old-time religion"; also glad that you have such good associates as the Rev. Pembroke Reed and the Rev. Frank Cox. I wish every Church member would read it. With every good wish for the new year for The Southern Churchman, President and Editor.

LETTER FROM BISHOP TUCKER.

Mr. Editor:

I have delayed replying to your letter of January 27 until I could see my brother and verify my own impression of what is involved in his contemplated action with regard to receiving members of other Churches into his congregation. I can now reply to your inquiries as follows:

1. He proposes to admit to the fellowship of St. Paul's congregation only those who have been both baptized and admitted to full communion in their former church, either by confirmation or by whatever method admission to full communion is effected.

2. This does not mean that he admits such a person to the status of a confirmed person in the Episcopal Church as a whole, but only into fellowship with St. Paul's congregation. Where the canons require confirmation, such a person would, of course, not be eligible, as e. g., in becoming a candidate for orders or here in Virginia in election to the vestry. Further, such a person could not be transferred to another congregation as a "confirmed person", but in the letter of transfer the facts of the case would be stated and the rector to whom the person was transferred would decide as he saw fit whether admission to communion should be granted.

3. This action is in accordance with a custom that has long prevailed in Virginia, namely, of admitting to the communion communicants in good standing of other churches.

Thus you will see that the proposed action is carefully guarded so as not to violate any law of our Church. The only one involved is the rubric in the communion service, which says that no one shall be admitted to the communion unless he has been confirmed or is ready and desirous of being confirmed. In Virginia that rubric has always been interpreted as applying to members of our own Church and not to those who are full communicants of other churches.

Book Reviews

THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION THROUGHOUT THE WORLD: Reprinted from "The Living Church". Edited by Clifford P. Morehouse, Managing Editor Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis.

This beautiful book, illustrated with scores of photographic picltures of clergy, natives and churches in the remote places of the earth and sea, is a collection of papers on the Anglican Church's missionary work throughout the world. Every paper was written by request and is carefully done. The book will be a surprise to many who are interested in the foreign work of the Mother Church. She has not been idle in spreading the Gospel of the Lord. Already the earth is covered by her missionary zeal, even if thinly so.

It is a most excellent manual for the missionary circles at home, especially those of the young people. For a book printed on such heavy, calendered paper and such fine illustrations, the price of $2.50 is reasonable.

FIVE SMOOTH STONES: By Frederick P. Wood. Marshall Brothers, London. Price, Eight Shillings.

Very aptly the author, from the well-known story of David and Goliath, expounds the foundational truths of the Bible and the Christian Faith. He treats of the deity of Christ as the Foundation Stone; of the Word of God as the Stumbling Stone; of the Cross and Resurrection as the Rejected Stone, and the Chief Corner Stone, and of the Return of Christ as the Unquarried Stone. We have here pure truth, winnowed from the Word; there is no chaff. It is a thorough, clear, unfolding of "bedrock truths out of the Living Brook". It is readable theology, because made vital. It is concise and covers the salient points with sufficient fulness to enable one to grasp the truth and yet without the wearying elaboration that often discourages one who can digest but little theology at a time.

In one hundred and four pages we have here as complete and satisfying a treatise on the great themes around which controversy rages today, as you could find. All the points are well clinched by Scripture. For bewildered, tempest-tossed souls, befogged by mists of modern thought, and asphyxiated by the monoxide gas of modernism, you will find here rest and can lie down in green pastures and feed and none will make you afraid. It is a vade-mecum of evangelical truth, boiled down and put in simple readable language for young or old. And all for one shilling or 25 cents in our money. You could not better invest that amount.

Church Intelligence

Sees Jungle Safer Than New York City.

Acceptance of the theory of evolution as an accomplished fact and acting accordingly "as high-grade animals", is responsible for much of the crime of today as well as for other excesses of a sinful, though not necessarily criminal nature, the Rev. Martin J. Scott, S. J., of the Church of St. Francis Xavier, told members of the Marquette Club at the first of the club's midwinter Saturday discussions at 22 East Thirty-eighth Street, New York City.

"Crime" was the subject of an address by Judge William Allen, of the Court of General Session. He was followed by Father Scott, whose subject was "Crime and Religion". Both jurist and priest agreed that religion, rather than law, was the best means of decreasing crime, Judge Allen declaring that lack of religious training and instruction were responsible for more crime than any other two causes.

"Many are making impulse the basis of conduct, rather than right or wrong," said Father Scott. "This impulse motive is receiving attention in high places. Clarence Darrow said recently that we were victims of impulse and that criminals should be reformed rather than punished. I wonder if he would think the same way if he had a child ten years old and a monster like Hickman killed it? This is a false principle.

"With the exception of Chicago there is more vicious crime in New York City than anywhere else. I think the jungle is safer than New York.

"Any person who follows his impulses soon finds himself falling over a precipice. Take the drunkard and the cocaine fiend—they yield to impulse; you can't do it. Nobody can succeed in society unless he controls his inclinations and impulses, and so it holds in every branch of life.

"Cunning and force are taking the places of right and principle in this country and particularly in this city. What is the remedy? The law? We never had so many laws nor so much crime. You can't dragoon a man into doing right. But give him right principles and train him to live up to them and he will be good even in the midst of contamination.

"How can we influence a person to avoid crime? If we can reach his conscience it can be done. External means make a man good externally only. Some of the most 'respectable' men of the community are perfect devils. Christ called the 'respectable' people of his day 'whited sepulchre'. I know men who pass for respectable, and I know them to be worse than the worst scoundrels. Respectability is not a virtue, nor is vulgarity always a vice.

"God Himself can't make a man good unless the man has the will to be good. Man must cooperate, and religion will draw forth that cooperation. Man will be better as society gets back to a realization that we are not high-grade animals, but creatures of God.

"Today people will sell their souls for $5. You can buy perjury and murder. This is the result of materialistic ideas and the evolutionary theory permeating society and making people their own masters, yielding to impulse and consequently acting in a criminal way."

Judge Allen declared that while there was a great deal of perjury in court actions, perjury was seldom committed by witnesses for the people, but most often by witnesses for the defense. It was more rife in civil than in criminal cases, he said he had been informed.

"It makes my heart sad," Judge Allen continued, "to see boys of sixteen to nineteen in court as defendants, and many of them are charged with hold-ups. It is all due to a lack of religious training and environment. Boys claiming to be Catholics plead guilty before me. They are not Catholics in the true sense of the word. If they were they would not commit these crimes, but it is sad to see so many boys from Catholic families in court.

"If their parents would keep track of them, be companions to them, insist on their keeping away from pool rooms, demand that they do not stand on street corners whistling and shuffling their feet, and demand also that, after a certain hour at night they be at home reading decent literature, I am sure there would be a great reduction in crime."

Judge Allen gave an outline of the history of the Court of General Sessions. He said the calendar was in better shape today than ever before, with only four hundred and seven cases listed yesterday, against 2,200 a few years ago. He said District Attorney Banton could now try any criminal case a week after the indictment, or sooner, and that postponements of trials interfered with the enforcement of law.

Telling of old cases here, Judge Allen said that the oldest on record was that of a man and wife who broke into a neighbor's cellar in 1683 and stole liquors. The man was branded with a "B" and given eleven stripes and the woman was branded with a "B" on her thumb. In 1699, he said, a man named Peter sued a girl named Anne because she would not marry him. The Judge decided both should pay the costs and that they could not marry without the consent of the court. In 1784, he continued, three persons were hanged for larceny.—New York Times.

Vatican Organ Revives Roman Controversy.

Rome (By The Associated Press).—The "Roman question" as to temporal power in Italy was revived by Osservatore Romano, official Vatican organ, in an evidently inspired editorial replying to an editorial in Popolo D'Italia and to a recent speech by Deputy Gentile, former minister of instruction.

Osservatore particularly contradicted any assertion that the Roman Catholic Church has moderated her protest against losses undergone through the fall of temporal power in 1870. The paper cites in this connection the attitude of Pope Pius XI, Leo XIII, Pius X, Benedict XV and the present Pope, who in his very first pontifical utterance said that throughout the reigns of these Popes there had been "a program of strong, constant and irreducible opposition to the anti-Christian offensive of liberalism and Socialism".—The Evening Star, Washington, D. C.

Conference on the Deeper Life.

The Conference on the Deeper Life in Christ met in Philadelphia from Sunday, January 22, to Wednesday, January 25, at St. James' Church, Fifty-second and Master Streets, the Rev. John M. Weber, rector.

The aim of the conference was to deepen the spiritual lives of all who attended by emphasizing the power of the Holy Spirit, and His ability to cleanse thoroughly the heart that is consecrated to Him. The first speaker, the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, spoke of sin, the great barrier between ourselves and God, and pointed the way of salvation from sin through Christ's Sacrifice. The messages then went on to point the way of victory over sin through the power of the indwelling Christ, and culminated in the final sermon by the Rev. Duncan Thomas, in which he showed that the normal Christian life is a life of victory over sin, and that full consecration to Christ is the condition for entrance upon this life of victory.

Canon F. E. Howitt, and the Rev. Pembroke W. Reed spoke of the Return of Christ, and the incentive that it provides to a life of missionary endeavor and personal holiness, "Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as He is pure".

Those interested in the gathering felt that the experience had been a great personal blessing and urge others to join them in the prayer that the occasions such as this be multiplied in our Church. We are sure that the conference was unique in its aim at least as far as the Church in this country is concerned.

Missionary Conference on Mount of Olives.

New York.—The International Missionary Council has selected for its next meeting the Mount of Olives near the city of Jerusalem, on March 24 to April 8. The two hundred delegates who will gather from all parts of the world, include thirty-five men and women from the United States and Canada.

Missionary problems under discussion will include many phases of international relations. The growing feeling among missionaries that they should make no claim for indemnities or protection from their own countries in case of civil warfare or international disputes may be repeated. This was a marked attitude at the recent annual session of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America at Atlantic, New Jersey.

Foreign force for the protection of missions or to insure personal safety to missionaries in foreign countries was voted at the conference at Atlantic City as "a serious hindrance" and that the effort should be made to secure freedom from its protection for those missionaries who may desire it.

Mrs. Robert E. Speer and Miss Sarah S. Lyon, of New York, have been chosen as two of the seven women delegates from the United States and Canada. Mrs. Speer as president of the National Board Y. W. C. A. and Miss Lyon as executive of its Foreign Division, administer the work done by the American Y. W. C. A. in the Orient, the Near East, the Baltic States, the Philippine Islands, South America and Mexico.

Provincial Statistics.

Vital statistics in the child life in the Province of Washington—infant baptisms, confirmations, teachers, pupils and communicants, reported in the Living Church Annual for 1927 and 1928 reveal some interesting details.

In the Province there is shown a decrease of eleven per cent in Infant Baptisms; four per cent in Confirmations; seven per cent in Teachers and one per cent in Scholars. There has been an increase in Communicants of one-half per cent.

Studying the individual Diocesan figures we find the following:

Bethlehem—An increase of ten per cent in Confirmations; three per cent in Communicants, nine and one-half per cent in Teachers and nearly eight per cent in Scholars, though Infant Baptisms have decreased nearly four per cent.

Delaware—Shows a loss of nine per cent in Infant Baptisms and one per cent in Communicants, but Confirmations have increased two per cent, Teachers six per cent and Scholars three per cent.

Easton—Reports a one and one-half per cent gain in Communicants, but has lost six per cent in Infant Baptisms; seven per cent in Teachers; nine per cent in Scholars and the Confirmations are stationary.

Erie—Though increasing thirteen per cent in Confirmations only has a three-one-hundredths gain in Communicants and a loss of eighteen per cent Infant Baptisms, one per cent in Teachers and nineteen per cent in Scholars.

Harrisburg—Has gained four thousandths per cent in Communicants, but Infant Baptisms have decreased twelve per cent, Confirmations ten per cent and scholars two per cent. The number of teachers is stationary.

Maryland—Has declined in each of the five points; in Infant Baptisms thirteen per cent, Confirmations four per cent, Communicants three thousandths per cent, Teachers one per cent and Scholars one per cent.

Pennsylvania—Has increased eight thousandths per cent in Communicants, but decreased ten and one-half per cent in Infant Baptisms, four per cent in Confirmations, twenty-two per cent in Teachers and five per cent in Scholars.

Pittsburgh—Records a decrease in Infant Baptisms of eight per cent, Confirmations ten per cent, Teachers three per cent, Scholars four and one-half per cent and Communicants three thousandths per cent.

Southern Virginia—Shows a decrease in Infant Baptisms of twelve per cent, Teachers three per cent, Scholars seventeen per cent and Communicants two thousandths per cent.

Southwestern Virginia—Has increased twelve thousandths per cent in Communicants, fifteen thousandths per cent in Teachers and twelve per cent in Pupils, but has declined nearly five per cent in Infant Baptisms and almost fourteen per cent in Confirmations.

Virginia—Reports a gain of seven thousandths per cent in Communicants and a loss of thirteen per cent in Infant Baptisms and nearly two per cent in Scholars, and is stationary in number of Teachers and Confirmations.

Washington — Has increased fifteen per cent in Scholars, but has lost seventeen per cent in Infant Baptisms, twenty-four per cent in Confirmations and seventeen thousandths per cent in Communicants.

West Virginia—Has gained twelve per cent in Confirmations and three per cent in Communicants, but the number of Teachers is three per cent and Scholars six per cent less, and there is no change in the number of Infant Baptisms.

The Virginia Summer School of Religious Education.

The Virginia Summer School of Religious Education will be held in Sweet Briar College June 18 to 30, 1928. All arrangements for faculty have not yet been made, but the usual high grade of instruction is guaranteed. Courses will be offered in Religious Education, Missions, Social Service, Woman's Auxiliary work, and Work among Young People. Sweet Briar College is most beautifully situated, and adapted to the work of such a school. The Virginia Summer School has been a great power in the educational work, especially in the dioceses in the State of Virginia, it being under the auspices of these three dioceses. Now is the time to begin to arrange to send pupils to this school. Any Church or Church School or individual will be more than repaid for the expenditure of the necessary time, money and effort.

WARNING.

A young man, thick set and of medium height, for a year past has been begging money from various rectors in this state and West Virginia, on the story that his mother is dead and to be buried by me "tomorrow". He gives his name as Groves or Nolan and address Tyrone, Pa. Telegraph me before you give him any money or have him arrested and let me know.

Christ Church, Smithfield.

In the last eight months Christ Church, Newport Parish, Smithfield, Va., has been enriched with some beautiful memorials. At the early Easter service a stained glass window from the George Hardy Payne Studios, Patterson, N. J., was dedicated. Each section of this window is a memorial to some member of the families of the parish; given by them and the congregation through the vestry, in grateful memory of those who remembered the church with legacies.

Through the Chancel Chapter, the choir has been provided with a processional cross.

A ewer, the gift of a devoted member who is no longer a resident of the parish, stands on a shelf by the front at the entrance.

The alms plates were given in memory of the faithful Senior Warden, Mr. M. F. Jordan and his wife; and the alms basin, in memory of Mrs. Mollie Cowper Chalmers, a devoted member.

The congregation is now working for a hardwood floor, which is must needed.

The Mite Society, the Chancel Chapter and the Sunday School each have pledged a hundred dollars.

On November 13 Bishop Tucker visited the parish and the rector presented a class of twelve, the largest class ever confirmed in the history of the church.

Bishop Coadjutor Thomson has an appointment to visit the church on the evening of February 26; at which time another class will be presented for confirmation.

St. James' Church.

Celebration of the thirty-first anniversary of the consecration of the present church and the third anniversary of its dedication in reconstructed form, will mark this Sunday's service (January 29) at St. James' Episcopal Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Streets, one of the oldest Episcopal parishes in the city. The Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, the Rev. James Gilliland Simpson, D. D., will be the preacher at the eleven o'clock service on Sunday morning, at which special features will be a Festival Te Deum, ante-communion, and a bidding prayer offered by the Rev. Dr. Frank Warfield Crowder, the rector of St. James. The bidding prayer beginning "Good Christian people, I bid your prayers", etc., is of ancient history in the Episcopal Church and is used on special public occasions.

Three memorial windows will be dedicated by Dr. Crowder at the morning service. One is the gift of John C. Hughes in memory of his wife and parents; the second is the gift of Mrs. Edward S. Knapp in memory of her daughter, Margaret Knapp Ferguson, and her grandchild, Lee Hollister Ferguson, Jr.; and the third is the gift of Mrs. Charles E. Lydecker and Mrs. Percy Stuart, in memory of their parents, Henry and Harriet Davis Batjer.

More than five hundred persons will take part in the festival procession at the four o'clock afternoon service, including four choirs, the Guilds and clubs with banner-bearers, and the clergy, representing both St. James' and also the Church of the Holy Trinity, East Eighty-eighth Street, the daughter-church of the parish, whose vicar is the Rev. Dudley S. Stark. The Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., formerly Bishop of Wyoming, will preach, the afternoon sermon. The organ music at both morning and afternoon services will be augmented by trumpets and drums.

Dating back in 1810, when the first St. James' was built on Lenox Hill, on what is now Sixty-ninth Street and Lexington Avenue, when the population of New York City was less than forty thousand, the parish has had a history of increasing activities. The second church edifice was opened for worship on Christmas Day, 1869, on East Seventy-second Street near Lexington Avenue, and the third on Christmas Day, 1884. Three years ago this latter structure was extensively rebuilt into the present beautiful edifice. Distinguished predecessors of Dr. Crowder, the present rector, who has been in charge for the past twelve years, including the Rev. Dr. Peter Schermenhorn Chauncey, the Rev. Dr. Cornelius Bishop Smith, and the Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney, D. D.

Interesting historical objects on exhibition this week in the baptistry of St. James include the old Bible in use in 1810 in the first building; communion silver in 1814, and a bell that summoned the congregation to Sunday service from 1811 to 1884.

Fears a Surrender to Pope in England.

Readiness to sacrifice the principles of the Reformation for a reunion with Rome and if possible to carry the whole of Protestantism that way was charged to the majority of Anglican Church members by Dr. M. G. G. Scherer, Secretary of the United Lutheran Church in America and Chairman of the Committee of the Lutheran Church delegation to the Lausanne Conference last summer.

He was the only speaker at the twenty-second annual meeting of the New York Lutheran Ministers' Association, held in the Lutheran Church House, 39 East Thirty-fifth Street. Seventy of the three hundred and fifty Lutheran ministers of the metropolitan district affiliated with the association were present. The association represents four hundred and fifty-four Lutheran Churches that use thirteen different languages in conducting their services.

"The Urgent Need of Lutheran Solidarity in America," was the subject treated by Dr. Scherer. In his opinion, the speaker said that among the evangelical representatives of the Anglican communion there is "a greater approach in spirit and in teaching to Lutheranism than we find elsewhere".

"But we all know what serious divisions exist among them, particularly over the Prayer Book in England," Dr. Scherer continued. "We know what they have to offer as a basis of union for a united Church; namely, the two ancient creeds, the Apostles' and the Nicene, and the historic episcopate with the idea of Apostolic succession."

"And finally," said Dr. Scherer, "we know the unrelenting attitude of the Vatican toward them and their episcopacy. The Pope has said 'We'll have none of you. There can be no union at all unless you come upon bended knee, confess your sins and ask forgiveness'. Rome would then receive them. And the same is true for some of the rest of us, I take it."

Unity of the Lutheran Church is needed, the speaker said, to enable it to bear more effectively its message,

The Rev. Robert Patton, D. D., made an inspiring address to a large congregation on the work of the American Church Institute for Negroes, with a special reference to the work at Fort Valley. Dr. Patton outlined the wonderful possibilities of this important work which is being done, by both the National Church and with the appropriations made by the Diocese of Atlanta.

During the meeting of council, the Rev. S. Alston Wragg, on behalf of the clergy of the diocese, presented to Bishop Mikell as a token of their esteem and in appreciation of his services, a gift in the form of new vestments. Mr. Wragg stated that it was the desire of the clergy to mark this tenth annual council over which Bishop Mikell had presided with the testimonial of the loyalty and affection of the clergy of the diocese.

The Bishop responded, expressing his appreciation of the gift.

The following were elected members of the Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. S. Alston Wragg, W. W. Memminger, D. D., and the Very Rev. T. H. Johnston, Litt. D., D. D., and Judge E. E. Pomeroy, Col. Z. D. Harrison, D. C. L., and Dr. G. H. Noble, Sr.

The retiring members of the Executive Board were reelected for a period of three years: the Rev. W. W. Memminger, D. D., H. Fields Saumenig, Messrs. H. V. Kell, Frank E. Bone and Mrs. E. B. Harrold.

The following were elected to represent diocese as delegates to the General Convention: Clergy, the Rev. W. W. Memminger, D. D., the Rev. S. A. Wragg, the Rev. C. E. Bentley and the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig; alternates, the Rev. Messrs. F. H. Harding, Russell K. Smith, Wm. F. Moses and N. R. H. Moor.

Lay delegates elected were: Messrs. David Woodward, Col. Z. D. Harrison, D. C. L., Dr. G. H. Noble, Sr., and Robert C. Alston, D. C. L.; alternates, Wm. Parker, Jr., MacD. Dexter, T. H. Nickerson and Dr. Thomas H. Hancock.

The Rev. Robert Patton, D. D., representing the National Council, addressed the members in its business session on its obligation to the National Church with special reference to the quota made upon the diocese.

The Council, by Canon, authorized the creation of two convocations within the diocese for missionary work. This action was taken looking forward to a greater development of the work in the diocesan mission field and was referred to the Diocesan Department of Missions to be put into effect.

Mrs. Henry Davis, President of the Woman's Auxiliary, made her annual report to the council, which showed a remarkable increase in the gifts of this organization. The Council will meet in 1929, the fourth Wednesday in January, in Christ Church, Macon, Ga.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

Diocesan Convention.

The one hundred and forty-fourth convention of the Diocese of Maryland was held at Grace and St. Peter's Church and Parish House on January 25 and 26, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray presiding, and the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop Coadjutor, assisting. Bishop Murray's address, following the opening service of Holy Communion, disclosed, among other interesting statistics, the fact that there had been 1,724 confirmations during the past year, an increase of more than three hundred over the preceding year, which he held, due to the Bishops' Crusade and to the diligence of the Bishop Coadjutor in holding special confirmations whenever called upon. In the financial accounting for the year he announced that Mr. Van Lear Black had contributed $200,000 toward the sum expended for the Synod Hall Undercroft of the Cathedral of the Incarnation, the remaining $94,000 having been raised by the trustees of the Cathedral Foundation. The way was thus cleared for the consideration of further plans for the Cathedral. Among the important announcements for the coming year was the notice of a thorough survey of the diocese. The Bishop concluded his address with a consideration of the Lausanne Conference.

At the very outset of the convention a theological issue was injected, when Judge Henry D. Harlan, who was one of the delegates at the last General Convention, introduced a resolution memorializing the General Convention to refrain from completing its action looking toward the omission of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Book of Common Prayer. This action followed the broadcasting of a pamphlet through the diocese entitled "Shall the Episcopal Church be Destroyed"? The Judge stated that he was presenting the resolution to ascertain the mind of the diocesan convention, in order that the delegates to be elected to General Convention might thereby be instructed. There was long and somewhat ardent discussion of the resolution, but eventually it was withdrawn by the mover without being voted upon.

The following were elected deputies to the General Convention: the Rev. Drs. Wyatt Brown, H. P. Almon Abbott, Arthur B. Kinsolving, and Romilly F. Humphreys; Messrs. Edw. Guest Gibson, Henry D. Harlan, George C. Thomas and Blanchard Randall. The alternates: the Rev. Drs. Wm. A. McClenthen, Wm. C. Smith, Jr., Walter B. Stehl and Douglas Hooff; Messrs. E. N. Rich, Wm. L. Marbury, Geo. S. Jackson and A. de R. Sappington.

The Standing Committee for 1928 will be composed of the Rev. Drs. Wyatt Brown, Benj. B. Lovett, Wm. A. McClenthen and Arthur C. Powell; Dr. Jos. S. Ames; Messrs. Herbert M. Brune, H. D. Harlan and Edw. N. Rich.

Mr. Blanchard Randall, for twenty-three years treasurer of the convention, retired as such, and Mr. Wm. Ingle, who is also treasurer of the Executive Council of the Diocese, was elected to this position.

The next convention meets at the Church of St. Michael and All Angels on the fourth Wednesday in January, 1929.

Bishops to Conduct Evangelistic Services.

A unique undertaking has been decided upon this Lent in connection with the continuation work of the Bishops' Crusade in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Under the auspices of the diocesan committee on continuation of the Crusade a series of diocesan evangelistic services will be held on six Thursday nights during Lent, at which in sequence that number of visiting Bishops will be heard as Lenten preachers.

The Rev. Dr. David M. Steele, in a whole-hearted cooperation with the efforts of a large number of the clergy of the diocese interested in the continuation work which has been carried on since Epiphany of 1927, has turned over his church for the series and has underwritten a fund to provide for all necessary expenditures. The movement is attracting diocesan-wide interest. Many of the clergy are taking steps to bring with them as many of their parishioners as may be possible. The Church Club of Philadelphia also has taken cognizance of the movement and is planning to urge the attendance of its members at each of the services. Members of our organizations of the diocese are being interested in the movement.

St. Luke and the Epiphany is one of the largest churches in the diocese and by reason of its central city location in Thirteenth Street below Spruce, is easily accessible from all parts of the city, and its proximity to all railroad stations makes it equally so to the city's suburbs. The services are to begin at eight o'clock each Thursday night. The Bishops communicated with were quickly responsive to the invita- whch he descrbed as "a gospel that exactly meets the needs of an age that has sought but has not found and is restless and unhappy still, that has tried everything else, every substitute, and found them all disappointing and valueless."

At the opening of the meeting, Dr. S. G. Trexler, President of the New York and New England Synods of the Lutheran Church, was reelected President of the Association. The Rev. George Lynn Kieffer was reelected Secretary, and the Rev. Charles A. Crouch of Hempstead, L. I., Treasurer.—New York Times.

A Skeleton in the Closet.

A skeleton in the closet is not often cause for rejoicing on the part of those who own it, but Mrs. F. A. Worrall, Superintendent of St. Agnes' Hospital, Raleigh, N. C., fairly boasts of one recently acquired by her Nurses' Training School, thanks to the Woman's Auxiliary of Massachusetts.

"The new skeleton has a head" (apparently this is an advance over previous equipment) "and all the other bones a respectable skeleton should have."

A check from the Woman's Auxiliary of New Hampshire has provided for the purchase of charts which are part of the equipment required by the State Board for a recognized school. Mrs. Worrall says further: "It is a pleasure to write of St. Agnes' without having to ask for something. Thanks to the wonderful goodness of our friends, who rallied to our support after the fire, we have quite an attractive hospital now, fresh as paint can make it. I would not say of it, as a visitor did last week, 'Is is spotless'! for I know where to look for spots; but I can say that it is in a much better shape than it was before the fire.

"We are now working to bring the Training School into Grade-A. While the present Nurses' Home is used we shall always be short one point—the point that not more than two nurses shall occupy a room. But we believe that we can meet all other points in time, even the reference library, a complete high school education as an entrance requirement, and the usual class room equipment."

Church Unity.

The Diocese of North Carolina, acting through its Executive Council, has endorsed the Church Unity Movement and is calling on all local ministers to organize a League for Church Unity in their parishes. At a recent meeting of the Executive Council the following action was taken:

Whereas, Our General Convention in 1910 set forward plans looking to a World Conference on Christian Unity (Faith and Order); and

Whereas, Such a conference has been held (Lausanne, Switzerland, August 3, 21), with a Bishop of the Church in the chair (Bishop Charles H. Brent); and

Whereas, Bishop William A. Guerry, of South Carolina, has drawn up and issued to the public a practical, constructive suggestion as to how Unity might be promoted (namely by the formation of a League for Church Unity, made up of members of the Christian Churches of the world"); therefore, be it

Resolved by the Executive Council of the Diocese of North Carolina, meeting in regular session:

First, That we heartily endorse the Church's general efforts looking to organic unity—and especially the proposal advanced by Bishop Guerry regarding the formation of a League for Church unity in the diocese.

Second, That we call on all ministers in this diocese to appoint a suitable layman in the parishes and missions to serve as League organizer (or else themselves to serve in this capacity), with a view to forming a League for Church Unity in every parish and mission in the diocese.

Note.—The League pledge contains the following simple agreement: "In obedience to the teaching of Jesus Christ and trusting to the assistance and guidance of His Holy Spirit, I do hereby pledge myself to work and pray for the visible and organic unity of His Church."

The Executive Council suggests that this movement be not confined to our own Church membership, but that local organizations endeavor to interest pastors and laymen of our sister communions in their several localities—and to invite them to join the local League for Church Unity.

Fifty Years' Service.

On a recent Sunday Colonel Edward Barr, Senior Warden of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, completed fifty years' service as a member of the parish corporation. The following night at the Hamilton Club, Colonel Barr was guest of the rector and the other members of the vestry, who presented him with a memorial beautifully engrossed in the following words: "Servant of God, well done." Colonel Edward Barr, Senior Warden of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn Heights, was elected to the vestry in 1878 and, with this month, will complete as a member of this body a half century of faithful and self-sacrificing service for his Master. During this uninterrupted period he has served successively as Clerk, Treasurer, and Church Warden, and he has been a most loyal co-worker with the six rectors who have ministered at St. Ann's since his election to the vestry. During interregnum he has officiated as nominal head of the parish, with zeal and fidelity, and by his gracious courtesy and winning cordiality he has endeared himself to untold numbers.

"In recognition of this noteworthy anniversary, we, his friends and associates of the vestry, tender Colonel Barr our loving congratulations and good wishes, praying that he may grace our meetings by his presence for many years to come."

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Spiritual Ideals of George Washington.

Episcopal clergymen throughout the country have been invited by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, to unite in services, dedicated to the spiritual ideals of George Washington on the Sunday nearest his birthday anniversary, it was announced today. This observance is a custom of long standing in the City of Washington and is expected to receive nation-wide attention this year as result of Bishop Freeman's invitation.

In the statement, explaining the purpose of the observance, which accompanied the letters sent by Bishop Freeman to clergymen in every state, attention is called to the plans initiated by Congress for a nation-wide commemoration in 1932 of the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth.

A portion of the statement issued by Bishop Freeman follows:

"George Washington recognized religion as a vital factor in the building up of our country. There is convincing evidence that he believed it impossible to build a durable civilization without faith in God—that he sincerely subscribed to the words of the prophet, 'Where there is no vision, the people perish'.

"That Washington felt this faith should have visible expression in the national capital is attested by the fact that, at his suggestion, Major L'Enfant included in the plans for America's 'federal city' a 'great church for national purposes'.

"For more than one hundred years George Washington's vision of a great church structure in the nation's capital lived on without material expression. In 1891, however, the task of constructing an inspiring edifice on the heights of Mount Saint Alban was taken up by a group of consecrated men; and progress since that time has been continuous. It is fitting, therefore, that American Churchmen should have been selected the Sunday nearest George Washington's birthday anniversary as the day on which they should annually rededicate themselves to the task of hastening the day when it can no longer be said that Washington—the capital of our country—is without an adequate expression of the religious faith upon which the strength of the nation has built.

"President Coolidge in a memorable Washington's Birthday address, last year, suggested that the religious institutions of this country have a part in the nation-wide commemoration, planned for 1932, the two hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth.

"What more glorious contribution could be made to such a commemoration by Churchmen of America than a completed Washington Cathedral, crowning the heights of the national capital in testimony to this nation's faith in divine guidance—the realization of a cherished dream of our first President?

"Surely such a consummation would be a noble tribute to the ideals of this country's first leader; and a Hosanna of thanksgiving to Our Heavenly Father, who in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to endow these United States with a founder as illustrious, as noble, as deeply religious as George Washington.

"Although the commemoration in question is four years in the future, the time is all too short. The building of a great cathedral is a long and difficult and costly undertaking. If, therefore, the desired progress is to be made by 1932, it is essential that Churchmen make a notable showing of devotion on this Washington Cathedral Sunday, February 19, 1928. A generous offering at this time will mean much in the way of encouragement as well as in additions t othe Cathedral fabric."

Noonday Lenten Services.

The noonday Lenten services at Keith's Theatre, which have proven so popular and largely attended since their beginning several years ago, will feature a departure from the established custom of other years. Instead of a different speaker each day, there will be one speaker at all of the services for one week, thus making possible greater continuity of theme and bringing the people into closer fellowship with the speaker.

The order of appearance of speakers will be: February 27 to March 2, Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo, pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church; March 5 to 9, Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, Canon of Washington Cathedral: March 12 to 16, Bishop W. F. McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will follow three speakers from outside of Washington, an evangelistic leader, Dr. Charles L. Goodell, secretary of the commission on evangelism and life service of the Federal Council of Churches, New York City, March 19 to 23; Dr. Daniel L. Poling, pastor of Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, New York City, president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, March 26 to 30; Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of the Rochester, N. Y., Baptist Theological Seminary, April 2 to 6.

Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Young People's Diocesan Council.

The eighth annual council of the Young People's Service League of this diocese opened Friday night, January 13, Austin, Texas. Mr. Tom Bagby, President of St. David's Y. P. S. L., was toastmaster at the banquet and a welcome to Austin was given by the Rev. Valentine Lee and Miss Julia Drake, also of St. David's Y. P. S. L. The Diocesan President, Mr. Edwin Sharpe, of Nacogdoches, made the response. The Rev. Dargan Butt, of Wharton, and the first Life Recruit of the Y. P. S. L., in active service in the diocese, made a splendid talk. The opening service was held in St. David's Parish, the service being read by the young people and the sermon preached by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin.

Saturday morning there was Corporate Communion with some two hundred young people attending. The council convened at nine o'clock. The National Constitution was ratified, proposed changes in the Provincial Constitution were accepted, and the officers for 1928 were elected. Place was given on the program to the "First Young People's Provincial Summer Conference", held in Winslow, Arkansas, last summer, which resulted in a keener interest and a greater enthusiasm to send delegates to the 1928 conference.

For the past two years we have been working toward the establishment of a library in the Boys' High School, Wuhu, China, and have received splendid cooperation from the Young People's Societies throughout the country. We have decided to take for the coming year for our special project the establishing of a library for the boys and girls in the Rev. J. T. Mulcare's missions in the Canal Zone. We are working hand in hand with the Church Periodical Club in the establishing of these libraries and are indebted to them for their suggestions in these opportunities for service.

A budget of $700 for 1928 was adopted by the young people—delegate to the National Conference, Sewanee, $100; for the Church's Program, $100; Provincial pledge, $50; for the diocese, $200; to help some boy or girl studying for life work, $150; postage for diocesan officers, $25; emergencies, $75—total, $700.

A conference on Personal Religion and also one on Life Work were conducted. An installation service for the newly-elected diocesan officers concluded the afternoon session.

We then drove to Barton Springs for recreation and frolic and an out of door supper. The Y. P. S. L. of the Church of the Redeemer, Houston, and the Y. P. S. L. of Hempstead, were awarded the Honor Shields for the best work done in the five fields of service during the year. The evening was given over to a dance.

Annual Council.

On account of the illness of the Rev. John W. Sykes, rector of the Church of Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi, the twenty-fourth annual council of the Diocese of West Texas, which was to have been held in Dr. Sykes' parish, has been postponed until May 1, SS. Philip's and James' Day, which will mark the fourteenth anniversary of Bishop Capers' consecration to the episcopate. The dates of the council were fixed for January 17, 18 and 19.

WEST MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. S. C. Partridge, D. D., Bishop.

Diocesan Convention.

Old-timers pronounced the thirty-ninth annual diocesan convention of West Missouri, held in Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Kansas City, on January 17 and 18, to be the largest, most progressive and altogether "the best convention" ever held in the diocese. All the clergy and large delegations from the parishes and missions of the diocese were in attendance from the opening service on the first day to the close of business on the second.

In his address at the celebration of the Holy Communion on Tuesday morning, Bishop Partridge stressed the urgent need of permanent diocesan endowment and proposed the establishment of a fund of one hundred thousand dollars. He reported the accession of seven new priests to the diocesan forces and increase of active work in all parts of the diocese.

In business session the convention heartily approved and endorsed the Bishop's project for endowment and created a Commission of Ten, all laymen, to proceed toward the raising of funds.

Remission of old delinquencies was granted to a number of parishes and missions, all of which gave assurance of future prompt payments.

Pledges for the Church's Program were made in convention by representatives of the churches, to a total amount of $20,000.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese, in session on the first day of the convention in Grace Parish House, was addressed by Deaconess Massey, Miss Beardsley and Dr. Morehouse. The Rev. Mr. Trelease addressed the convention. Notable among the features of the convention were the facilities and hospitality extended by the rector and people of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, culminating in a diocesan dinner with speeches by Bishop Partridge and Dr. Morehouse.

Diocesan elections resulted as follows:

Executive Secretary—The Rev. Henry N. Hyde.

Diocesan Treasurer—Mr. B. C. Haward.

Standing Committee—The Rev. Messrs. Robert Nelson Spencer, B. M. Washburn, J. P. DeWolfe and C. H. Molony; Messrs. B. C. Howard, J. D. Warren, A. C. Stowell and H. T. Poindexter.

Deputies to General Convention—The Rev. Messrs. C. H. Molony, R. N. Spencer, B. M. Washburn and J. P. DeWolfe; Messrs. B. C. Howard, L. T. Golding, Wm. G. Holt and Henry D. Ashley.

Alternate Deputies to General Convention—The Rev. Messrs. B. N. Lovgren, Henry N. Hyde, Charles G. Fox and D. E. Strong; Messrs. A. C. Stowell H. T. Poindexter, J. D. Warren and W. W. Mantz.

KENTUCKY.

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop.

One Hundredth Diocesan Convention.

The one hundredth annual diocesan convention of Kentucky convened on January 25, in Louisville, preceded by a large gathering of clergy and laity for the celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop of the Diocese officiating. As the day was also the commemoration of his consecration, the Bishop made a brief address, recalling the twenty-three years of his episcopate, and expressive of his deep appreciation of the unfailing love, loyalty, and cooperation, accorded him throughout.

In the opening session of the convention, Bishop Woodcock read his annual address. Attention was called to an annual discrepancy deeply deplored and difficult to explain, existing between reports of large confirmation classes and small increase in the diocesan list of communicants. Allowing even liberally for losses occurring through removal, by death, and possible desertion from the ranks, a large leakage yet remains unaccounted for, both in parochial and diocesan reports. The Bishop also spoke of the great conference of Lausanne and its purpose, expressing firm belief in the ultimate attainment of unity among Christians, despite present discouragement.

Full consideration was given to conditions represented at present within the youth of the Church, and commendation was rendered touching the loyalty, and efficiency visible in the Y. P. S. L., forecasting enduring fruit for the future.

The annual Laymen's Dinner, in honor of the Bishop, was attended by the largest assembly in the history of this observance. The Rev. H. S. Musson, rector of the Church of the Advent, acted as toastmaster.

As special speakers were Lieutenant

The Kingdom of the Meek.

By Priscilla Leonard.

Kings choose their soldiers from the strong and sound,
And hurl them forth to battle at command.
Across the centuries, o'er sea and land,
Age after age, the shouts of war resound;
Yet, at the end, the whole wide world around,
Each empty empire, once so proudly planned,
Melts through Time's fingers like the dropping sand.

But once a King—despised, forsaken, crowned
Only with thorns—chose in the face of loss
Earth's poor, her weak, her outcast, gave them love,
And sent them forth to conquer in His name
The world that crucified Him, and proclaim
His empire. Lo! pride's vanished thrones above
Behold the enduring banner of the Cross!

De Profundis.

In Hall Caine's "Maximam" two lads stand on the seashore. One says to the other, "The sea is calling me", and the other answers, "The sea is calling me". It is the challenge of the sea to those lads on the shore. The lads cannot but hear, for they belong to the sea. The salt of the sea is in their veins, the song of the sailor on their lips.

Out of the wide sea of being comes to every soul the challenge of the spiritual. It arrests us. We cannot but hear, for we belong. The boundless deep from which we came calls to the deep within us, "Deep calleth unto deep".

There is a deep within to which deep calls. We are in a world of mystery, mystery without, and mystery within. We look upon a wide sea as into thick darkness. Dark clouds of doubt hang low over life. For many there seems no clue to the ever-deepening mystery. For them it is spiritual tragedy, for the doubt of the time touches the whole substance of life. The mind rocks as it realizes the deeps on deeps on which the world has been built. And deep calls unto deep, for there is a deep within that answers to the deep without. There is a sense of eternity, of infinitude felt within ourselves. There is a beyond, not only outside of us, and above us, but a beyond within us. God has set eternity in the heart of man.

God? We cannot divest ourselves of the thought of God. The feling of Him is below the deepest deep of thought. Deep as is the mystery, there is a sense of something spiritual and eternal.

There is a deep to which deep calls. There are deeps and lower deeps—deeps of thought, deeps of fear, deeps of pain and sorrow and still deeper deeps of thought. The lower deeps are reached when the soul sinks into fathomless brooding thought. Then De Profundis. Eternity calls to eternity across time.

The sea called the lads on the shore, and the lads heard the call because they belonged to the sea. Do we belong to that boundless deep whence we came? Is it the call of God because to Him we belong? Is our true life to be found in a divine adventure of faith? That is the challenge of Christianity to man, and at his best man recognizes the call. He belongs. It is true, man is not always at bis best. He may turn his face back toward the jungle. There is "the underworld of the mind", with underworld filth and garbage. We know what deeps of lustful sin and shame, what hate and cruelty man is capable of, and the challenge of life is nowhere written in characters so glaring as on the human breast. It is the sharp challenge of the "ought". What is the answer from out the deep of the soul? That sets the face toward heaven or back toward the jungle, for it determines our philosophy of life.

Where do we belong? It is the question for modern man. The materialisms of life weigh heavily, and may still the Voice out of eternity, but the call persists. Deep ever calls to deep. Sometimes the man gets a look into the deep within, and finds darkness there. Then De Profundis. Out of the soul's sense of sin and the cry for peace, out of the pain of life and the confession of doubt may be the answer of deep to deep.

We face the question in the solemn appeal of Lent. There will be open churches everywhere. There will be much preaching, and great congregations to hear. The one question for each one of us is, do we belong? What will be our acknowledgment of it?

From out of the deep of God's judgments comes the challenge to conscience. From out of the deep of the Heart of God comes the challenge of faith. That is the challenge of the Christ. If man will hear, if the world will hear, then

"That which drew from out the boundless deep Turns home again".

—Rev. A. L. Urban.

A Luther of Mexico.

The Story of Francesco Gandara is told by the Rev. Alfred Wright, the veteran Congregationalist missionary in Mexico. Born on a remote ranch in the State of Zacetecas, Gandara served, as a boy, as acolyte in a village church at the salary of one peso, or fifty cents, a month. The priest said mass out of a book, which, besides the missal, had the whole of the Scriptures in Spanish bound between its covers. When asked by the boy where a copy could be bought the priest replied that the book was for priests alone, that common people could not understand it and were forbidden to read it, that its price was also prohibitive (eighty pesos, six years' salary of an acolyte), and that, in any case, one would have to travel to a large city such as Guadalajara to buy a copy.

The boy asked if he might borrow the book. Not so! Later, however, when the priest's heart had been softened by a present of five pesos (five months' salary of the acolyte), he consented to lend it after mass, on condition that the boy should have it back before mass the next morning. By no means should he mention the matter to any one.

So, after mass, Francesco took the bulky volume, wrapped it carefully in his blanket, so that no one should discover what it was, carried it to the hills and there in a lonely canyon read all day until it was too dark to read longer. Then he secreted it in a hole, covering it with his blanket, went to the store, bought three candles at two cents apiece and returned and read his precious volume until the last of the candles had burned out. He was deeply moved by what he read and today, twenty years after, recalls three texts that stand out clearly in his mind, just as he saw them on the page, and that finally led to his conversion and separation from Rome. They were, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man" (Jer. 17:5), "Who can forgive sins but God only" Mark 2:7)? and "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24).

After some years, Francesco left his priestly employer, learned the trade of saddler, and settled in a place where there were evangelical Christians. Here he found a Bible at the price of one and a half pesos, bought it, and at times spent the whole night reading it.

Then came a period of persecution. His own father threatened to kill him, plots were laid to abduct him and force him into a course at Catholic instruction. All unavailing! Francesco has been for many years, now, an active and faithful member of an evangelical church, and his father, when death came, refused priestly aid, saying, "I have already confessed to God. Let my son read to me from the Bible".—Selected.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Shears.

I have a friend whom I love, and from whom a Call is always welcome, save that I am never able to help him as much as I could wish. For while he is not an unsuccessful man, he is one who hath ever shrunk from Opposition, and from the stern necessity of Facing Adverse Conditions, and it hath not been easy to tell him this. And he hath many fine qualities.

Now as we sate and talked, I drew toward me some Newspapers that lay upon my desk, and certain Articles that were Marked, I began to Cut Out. And each of them I pasted on a sheet of Paper, with a penciled note as to why I had decided to save it.

And he said, 'Thou seemest to me to make rather liberal use of the Shears and Paste Pot.

And I said, They are among my Best Friends.

And he said, What dost thou see in this little insignificant clipping?

And I said, I think I see the possibility of something that the man who wrote it did not see, and I intend to try to make other people see what I see.

And he said, Dost thou then get the idea at second hand?

And I said, Not so. I get the bald fact at second hand. But that which the writer of the fact sowed was a bare fact, and I give it a body as it pleaseth me; and the new life of the fact after I have nurtured and grown it is mine own. But of Originality the Shears are the Father and the Paste Pot is the Mother.

And he said, Thou seemest to get a Parable out of almost anything. I suppose thou couldst get one out of the very Shears.

And I said, Sure thing. And I could draw a lesson from the Steel, and another from the Sharpness, and others from other Qualities. But most of all would I draw a Lesson of the Value of having something always that must be Opposed.

And he said, Tell me about that.

And I said, The most significant fact about these Shears is that what would otherwise be only two rather curiously shaped Knives are so Riveted together that neither can cut without the other, and their success is in the Benevolent Opposition.

And he said, I had not thought of it in that way.

And I said, It is not always well for for a man that he eliminate Opposition. We measure our strength in terms of things successfully opposed, of Pounds Lifted, and Miles Traveled, and Tasks Accomplished. And if we seek to evade them, we do but waste our strength in evasion, strength that would have Lifted the Load, or Climbed the Hill.

And he thought a moment and said, Or Cut the Knot.

And he was silent for a little time, and he rose to go. And he said, I believe I can finish that Parable myself.

Our Father's Comfort.

Martha Shepard Lippincott.

Dear Lord, what comfort Thou wilt give
When we will humbly trust in Thee,
Thou wilt uplift our trusting souls
Till we, Thy wisdom, learn to see.
Thou wilt free us from many cares
And teach us of the nobler life,
Until our souls will seem to live
Above the world of care and strife.

Oh! let us, Thy sweet power, feel,
Until we know that God is love,
And let us, by our loving deeds,
Lead other weary souls above.
Dear Father, shed Thy gracious light
Within the hearts of every one,
So, through the power of Thy love,
Life's highest mission will be won.

The soul can never come to harm,
When placing all its trust in Thee;
It will be near the heavenly way,
In paradise, will seem to be:
And sweet contentment bless the heart,
With happiness, it will be filled,
And those who rest within Thy care
Will find their every trouble stilled.

I Am Looking for God.

There recently came to the door of one of our missionaries a young Japanese college graduate, twenty-three years old. He was a pilgrim, as his dress and big hat showed. He had completed on foot the weary circuit of the eighty-eight shrines and was only twenty-five miles from his home. But he realized that he had not found God. Hearing there was a missionary in the town, he came to his door as a last resort, and knocked. When the door was opened, the young man said, "I am looking for God; can you show Him to me"? Said the missionary, "I think I can; come in". For two hours they studied together the Gospel of Matthew. The young man found lodging in the village and gave himself to the study of Christianity, aided by the missionary. At the end of three weeks, he said, "Teacher, I have found Him and I am going home". Said the missionary, "If you have found Him, tell Him so and thank Him". The young man dropped his head on his arm and said, "O Thou Whom my ancestors groped about in their darkness for generations to find, for Whose discovery I came to this island, blindly looking—at last, at last, I have found Thee; I thank Thee. Amen". He took the missionary by the hand with a new light on his face, and his last words were, "Goodbye, I have found Him, I have found Him, I have found Him".

That young man is Japan saying to us, "I am looking for God; can you show Him to me"? In a very special sense he represents young Japan.

For the Southern Churchman.

Janus-wise.

Mary W. Hamilton.

Backward we look, nearing the last milestones on our way,
And we meet sad yesterdays in the passing of the year;
Clear-cut they front us, as on such and such a day
Here lie our failures—graved in memory by our tears.

Here dead lie days we might have been so militant for good,
Launched out into the deep and wrestled with the flood;
Care-obsessed or pleasure-hired, high calls misunderstood,
Yet all the while the crying need of Jesus and His blood.

Like dead faiths on their altars, earth's fading joys illume,
Looking backward, "in the shadow", death holding us in thrall;
Youth gaily notes the "speeding years", eyes dim with gathering gloom,
Vision the spectral over mirth, handwriting on the wall.

Now would we judge ourselves, O Lord, disrobed of all our pride,
Sad contrite hearts o'er waste of years for sacrifice we bring,
May faith, and hope, and love transcending all, absolve, abide,
Hiding our multitude of sins, Love over all shall sing.

Far off, beyond the bound of time, we sense the glorious dawn
Of radiant love's effulgence, the captive's loosening chains;
We wait the day star in our hearts, that ushers in the morn,
Of the King in all the beauty of His limitless domains.

Wise Watchfulness.

Hilma was just at the age when she could walk alone and, like all other children, enjoyed the independence of it. To indulge her in the new pleasure, her father took her to the park where there were no automobiles to dodge. But there were other difficulties to be encountered—curbs against which little feet might stumble, people to be passed without collision and deep holes to be avoided.

I had watched other people "taking care" of children about Hilma's age. Many of them would repeatedly seize the child by arm or garment, which ever came first, shouting, "Look out"! "Take care"! "There, I told you you'd fall if you went there! Just look at your clean dress, now. It's all covered with dirt! Aren't you ashamed"? "There! If you can't stand up alone, you'll have to keep hold of my hand all the time". And the poor child would be dragged along, resisting every step and trying to pull away.

Today one mother was fussing at her child's clothes every minute. "Here, let me pull up your stocking, Mary dear." But "Mary dear" had just sighted a brilliant yellow dandelion in the grass, and, in her haste to reach it before her mother's forceful hand could imprison her she fell on her face and was dragged to her feet and made to regard, ruefully, the grass stain on her white dress.

Two other little children were frolicking happily on the grass, rolling about like two healthy puppies. "Children, don't do that; it isn't pretty. Sit up and play nicely together." They sat up obediently but, having no idea how to "play nice", they sat primly looking at each other and, no doubt, wondered vaguely why what they had been doing wasn't "pretty" when it was such fun. I wondered, too.

"Come here, Henry," called another anxious mother. Henry left his digging in the sand regretfully. So far as I could see all the mother wanted was to brush back the stray lock that fell picturesquely over his moist forehead and to give his blouse a needless pull.

In happy contrast to all of these were Hilma and her father. He never uttered one single "don't", never touched her except when her hand crept trustfully into his own. But this father was more watchful of Hilma than any of the nagging parents were of their offspring. If she veered toward some unsuspected danger, he stepped between it and her, turning her toward safety as if of her own will. Once she stumbled and fell. Her father did not run to pick her up and stir her emotions with pity. He let her alone to manage a return to the upright which she did with no apparent expectation of outside assistance. She was used to meeting her own personal difficulties alone.

And is there anything we older people desire more than to be let alone in the pursuit of our own innocent desires? We resent interference. Why should we expect our children to feel different? Don't for a moment think I am preaching against parental discipline and a definite exercising of authority when necessary. I am merely advocating less unnecessary interference. Many restraints and reproofs are of no importance whatever. A little added watchfulness such as Hilma's father gave, will avoid the need for many reproofs. A little restraint on the part of parents will eliminate many needless and irritating "do's" as well as "don'ts".—Florence Milner.

My Friend.

My dog and I are the best of friends,
We always go together;
Over the hill where the woodland ends,
Scrambling through bush and heather;
Down by the mill where the river bends,
Through any kind of weather.

Down through the woods through the purple haze;
Down where the leaves are falling;
Through all the gold of the autumn days
Filled with the west wind's calling;
Skipping along by the streamlet's maze,
Where the waterfall comes brawling.

Crossing the fields in the twilight's glow,
Where soft the wind comes creeping;
Where e'er I lead he's sure to go,
From morn till the stars come peeping;
So that is the reason I love him so—
He's faithful, awake or sleeping.

Prayer.

Dear Master, we are only boys and girls,
We may not travel yet across the sea
To tell the gospel story in far lands,
But when we pray, we whisper, "Lord, send me",
And "Here I am" we say to every task
Thou sendest us in this our training time.
We listen for Thy errands day by day
And looking up, we catch Thy smile sublime.
Love's secret is to ever work for God,
And not to mind because He seems to care
To have us do such very little things;
So, Lord, we'll learn to serve Thee anywhere.

Messengers of Friendship to Mexican Children.

Sidney L. Gulick,
Secretary, Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Church of Christ in America.

Thousands of young people had wonderful fun last winter in dressing and sending to Japan 12,739 beautiful "Doll Messengers of Friendship". These messengers were welcomed by millions of Japanese children in schools, at official receptions in which mayors, governors, princes and princesses took part and at railway stations, steamship wharves and scores of huge department stores.

"Miss America" and her forty-eight state sisters were given many special welcomes. In addition to all the rest of their entertainment, they were received and spent an entire week at the imperial palace. When they left, the empress presented each little messenger with a toy and also donated a doll palace for their permanent home. This palace, enclosed in a great glass case, is in the Imperial Educational Museum in Tokyo, where for decades to come the dolls will continue to tell their story of America's friendship gesture and Japan's response.

The rest of the 12,739 little messengers have found their homes each in a separate primary school or kindergarten. Every doll festival day they will come out of their show cases, say "Mama", roll their eyes, and be hugged by new generations of Japanese school children. "Thank-you letters," photographs and art work have been coming by the thousand to the senders of the friendship dolls. Thus waves of goodwill have been rolling back and forth over the Pacific.

But this is not the end of the story. To let the American people know how happy they have been to hear the voices and to learn the stories told by the American "Messengers of Friendship", 2,610,000 Japanese school children have joined their pennies and have sent to America fifty-eight superb "Doll Ambassadors of Good-will". These dolls have wardrobes of silk kimonas, beautiful jet black lacquer chests of drawers, trunks and study desks and special stationary. The dresses and possessions of several of the more important dolls are marked with their own family crests. They came to share in our Christmas festivities. After attending many receptions in Washington and New York, the little Ambassadors will separate into many parties to tour our country. Communities and even individual schools which desire to see them and give them welcome receptions may communicate with the Committee on World Friendship Among Children", which has charge of the itineraries.

New plans have recently been announced by the Committee on World Friendship Among Children. The new adventure is with Mexico. The plan is to send "Friendship School Bags" for boys and girls in the schools of our neighbor to the south. Each bag will contain articles of interest and help in the life of school children. The Mexican vice-minister of education has approved the project and will distribute the bags in the schools, of which there are about 15,000, with 1,2500,000 pupils.

The bags, which will be made of durable fabrikoid, decorated with a beautiful design, are to be especially manufactured for the committee. The school or group participating in the project will add certain articles to be made or bought and will send the bag by parcel post direct to Mexico City. The bags will be officially distributed in the schools on Mexico's Independence Day, September 16, 1928, which is universally observed in the public schools. The project may be undertaken and the bags sent to Mexico at any time between January and July, 1928, according to the convenience of American schools and communities.

Now that our Ambassadors, Dwight W. Morrow and unofficially, Charles a Lindbergh, have started a new spirit in Mexican-American relations, these plans for Friendship School Bags give one opportunity for scores of thousands of our young people to have a concrete and practical part in carrying forward the goodwill spirit.

Groups of every kind, of young people and children, are invited to nave a share in this adventure in international fun and friendship. Classes in public and private schools, Sunday Schools, the Junior Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Girl Reserves, Pioneers, Friendly Indians—in fact, all kinds of groups and organizations are invited to share in the fun. It is hoped that each group will send two bags so that there will be equal numbers for boys and girls. A pamphlet giving detailed instructions and suggestions has been prepared and will be sent free (send a stamp to cover postage) to those who desire to share in the project No one should begin work on this enterprise before the pamphlet has been secured from the Committee on World Friendship Among Children, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York.

The project aims to cultivate in American boys and girls an increased appreciation of and good will toward the Mexican people. Culminating on Mexico's Independence Day, it also aims to reveal to the Mexican people that there is a widespread feeling of sympathy among hosts of Americans for Mexico's struggle for a better national life

Mrs. Knitslippers and the Butterflies.

Once upon a time there was a dear little old lady named Mrs. Knitslippers. She lived in a small red house, and round about the house was the most lovely garden. In it were violets and sweet peas, hollyhocks and marigolds, roses and lilies and ever so many other gay and beautiful blossoms.

And, dear me, how Mrs. Knitslippers did love that garden! Every morning, when breakfast was done, Mrs. Knitslippers would put on her broad floppity hat and her soft garden gloves and take a basket and her scissors and perhaps a trowel. and out into the garden she would trot. With her always went Drowsy-Eye, her fluffy white cat, for Drowsy-Eye liked the garden, too.

Here and there they would go, among the flowers, trimming this one and straightening that one, and having the time of their lives.

Whenever Mrs. Knitslippers found a new flower in bloom, she would clap her hands and say, "O-o-o-o-ooh, goody"! And every time she found one that had died, she would wring her hands and cry, "O-o-o-o-o-oh, dearie me"! For that was the only trouble with Mrs. Knitlippers' garden—it just would not live forever.

Drowsy-Eye was very fond of Mrs. Knitslippers. In fact, he liked her better than any one he knew, for she was so kind to him. She gave him a saucer of rich cream every morning, and a piece of fish each night. So it made him feel very badly to see Mrs. Knitslippers crying over her dead flowers.

A toad lived under the garden walk, and Drowsy-Eye asked him how to keep asked the toad how he would keep the flowers from dying, if he were going to do it.

"I wouldn't plant 'em," croaked the toad, who was a cross old fellow, and generally had a sore throat. "If you don't plant 'em they won't die, will they?"

And the toad shut his eyes, which is a habit toads have, if you've noticed; so Drowsy-Eye walked away.

In the bird bath was a saucy fat robin, and Drowsy-Eye knew him well. He the flowers from dying.

"Dear me!" chirped the robin. "I wouldn't even try! Why, if they kept on blooming and blooming and none of them withered, we should soon be covered with flowers."

"That's so," said Drowsy-Eye sadly.

"Of course it's so," chirped the robin. who was proud of having solved the problem. "Indeed, yes! They would cover the garden, cover the walls, cover the house, go down the chimney—" the little robin liked to talk so well that he went on and on, chattering and fluttering and splashing—"climb over the tables, go into the cupboards, climb out of the windows—"

But Drowsy-Eye had heard enough and had walked away. He went back to the house and sat on the steps. He was thinking very deeply. How could one keep lovely flowers from shriveling up into little wads of ugly, faded blue and pink and yellow? He reached over and broke off the head of a lavender sweet pea (which showed that he was thinking deeply, for he would never have broken one of Mrs. Knitslippers' flowers if he had not been lost in thought). As he sat there he tossed the little blossom up and down in the air It looked like something with tiny lavender wings, flying about it, and it amused Drowsy-Eye so much that he kept throwing it higher and higher. When the little flower was way up in the air, it looked like a tiny winged creature; not a bird and not a bug, but something softer and prettier and daintier than either of them.

"Oh," he thought, "if only the flowers could just fly away, when they are through blooming, how fine they would be!"

And then Drowsy-Eye had such an exciting idea that every hair on his tail stood out.

But Drowsy-Eye was a sly old puss. He didn't run right off to Mrs. Knitslip-pers and tell her what he had thought of. Oh, no! He smoothed down his excitable tail, and he walked very slowly along the walk and watched Mrs. Knitslippers.

It was not until that night when every one was asleep, that Drowsy-Eye crept out of the house, through the garden to where the moon made a great white patch on the soft green grass.

Drowsy-Eye had been out to this patch before. He had seen soft, brown rabbits playing on it, little gray field mice; and, best of all, he had seen fairies dancing there in the shining white moonlight.

Now Drowsy-Eye was no ordinary cat, and you may be sure that he did not lie there in the shadows and watch the fairies play without learning some of their magic. So, after looking carefully about to see that there were no rabbits or mice or wide-awake birds to see him at his antics, he began to dance slowly around in a circle, singing in a soft, purry-furry voice:

"Little fairy, elf and sprite,
Tiny gnorme and dwarf and fay,
Give the fading, dying flowers
Wings, to fly away.
Grant my wish, this moonlight night,
Fairy, elf and sprite."

Then, standing on his left feet, he cried, "Me-ow"! and, standing on his right feet, he cried, "Me-oo"! and, finally, standing on all four of his feet, he cried, "Sssss-pppppttttt"!

After this he went into the house, but he was so excited he could not sleep. He was so afraid that the charm wouldn't work!

He had thought that he would wait until Mrs. Knitslippers went into the garden after breakfast, to tell her about it, but as soon as the sky got crimson in the east and the sun slipped up over the hill, he could wait no longer. So he ran and called Mrs. Knitslippers, saying, "Something has happened to the flowers—do come at once"!

Mrs. Knitslippers came at once, with her pretty white curls still tucked in their curl-papers, and she and Drowsy-Eye hurried out into the garden.

The garden was lovely in the early morning sunshine, and the flowers looked fresher than ever before.

"Why, you naughty, naughty kitty!" cried Mrs. Knitslippers, shaking her curl-papers at him. "How could you frighten me so? There is nothing at all the matter with the flowers."

"Look!" cried Drowsy-Eye, whose eyes were anything but drowsy now.

All the flowers in the garden seemed to be trembling; at first very gently and then stronger and stronger grew the movements. Some of the flowers actually seemed to be pulling away from their stems, and while the excited cat and his mistress watched that is just exactly what those flowers did! They pulled until they broke away from their stems, and then there rose into the air dozens of lovely winged creatures, blue and lavender and pink and yellow!

"But they fly!" cried Mrs. Knitslippers in squeals of delight. "But they fly!" (She was so astonished that she could not believe it even when she saw it.) And Drowsy-Eye, who was so excited that he hardly knew what she said, replied, "Butterflies! Butterflies"!

So now when you see butterflies hovering over your flower beds you may be sure that they are only flowers from Mrs. Knitslippers' garden which, instead of withering up, have flown away. Perhaps they have just come to visit your flowers, and perhaps, if you listen close enough, you can hear what they have to say.—Christine Govan, in Youth's Companion.

Rosella's Promised Land.

Rosella sat down by the stile to rest. She had been carrying water from the spring, and the bucket was heavy.

Aunt Louisa, who was not strong, liked the water from the spring best. It was so clear and cold and sparkling.

Rosella, as she stopped to draw breath, reflected. She had been up since five o'clock. She had prepared breakfast for Uncle Malcolm and the hired man. She had washed the dishes, cleaned the pantry shelves and made a custard pie. She had swept upstairs, and mended Aunt Louisa's dressing saque, and now it would soon be time to begin dinner.

Rosella was in a brown study, because upstairs in her top dresser drawer, in her sandalwood box, was a letter which she had said nothing about.

Miss Minerva Strong, who had a little millinery shop in the city, had asked her to come down and help her.

"For any one that can tie a bow as you can, Rosella," she said, "ought to be a milliner, not living on a farm."

Rosella looked off towards the hills. things to see, pretty things to sell and perhaps to wear; then, too, she would not need to work as she did now.

Rosella looked og towards the hills. She had always, since she had been a little child, loved that view. The hills so many times were wrapped in purple haze. Sometimes the clouds rested on them. Many times the sun, after a storm, illumined them with sudden splendor. And over them at night hung the little twinking stars like so many jewels.

And now Rosella wanted to go beyond the hills and see life from a different angle. She was tired of the farm and the monotony. How she would enjoy handling soft ribbons and fashioning from them lovely bows!

Of course she loved Aunt Louisa and Uncle Malcolm. They were all the parents she had. But she couldn't see why she must always stay with them. She would only be young once.

Rosella sat still and looked off toward the hills. "I'll settle the question right now," she mused. "I won't go back to the house until I've decided it one way or the other. If I stay, it means comfort for Aunt Louisa and Uncle Malcolm but hard work for me. If I go, there is a chance for a good time, pretty clothes and the opportunity of seeing things—an education in itself.

She sat there and meditated. And as she saw the line of purple hills she thought: "How beautiful they are today!" She paused. "I wonder how Moses must have felt when the Lord showed him the Promised Land and told him he could not enter. Poor Moses! I was always so sorry for him, but he should not have smitten the rock."

And then, all at once Rosella started. "There's a promised land for me, and I wonder what God would think if I turned my back on Aunt Louisa and Uncle Malcom just for the sake of a good time, for that is all I've been thinking of. Moses missed the Promised Land because he spoke unadvisedly. I might miss it if I went away to the city. Perhaps I might grow careless, as so many do. Perhaps I might neglect my Bible and I couldn't hear Uncle Malcolm pray. He made such a good prayer this morning. And what would Aunt Louisa do when she wanted to invite the minister to supper and have the aid meet here? She couldn't do it alone."

And then the years rolled back, and Rosella saw herself a little, sobbing child beside a sick-bed, and she felt herself lifted by a pair of strong arms, and a cheery voice said: "Don't cry, little Rosella. Uncle Malcolm will take care of you."

And when mother had died, as she had a day or two afterward, Uncle Malcolm had taken her home to Aunt Louisa, and she had been their child ever since.

She remembered still Aunt Louisa's warm kiss, and the little white bed she had tucked her into, and the cookies she had made for her that memorable nevt day. And now Aunt Louisa wasn't strong, and Uncle Malcolm was growing old. He misplaced his glasses, and he couldn't remember the things Aunt Louisa told him to get at the store unless he had a list. And if she went away, who would brush his clothes and make him custard pies? For Aunt Louisa couldn't.

Was making bows in Miss Minerva's millinery shop as important as this?

And there was Aunt Louisa herself. What would he do with no one to read to her, or cheer her up, or take care of her when she had her headaches? Would she rather make bows than do this?

She looked down at her hands, a trifle rough, but firm and strong. "They may be good for tying bows," she whispered; "but I fancy, after all, that isn't their mission. I believe I could make up a little verse on that," she added, as she smiled, and then she repeated softly:

"Miss Minerva Strong says that surely I belong
To the city, since I make such lovely bows;
But I'll stay in my own place and daily duty face,
Happy always, since my heavenly Father knows."

And then she knew—knew that she couldn't leave Aunt Louisa. Miss Minerva must get somebody else to help her in her shop.

She picked up her bucket of water, and started for the house. Uncle Malcolm must have his dinner.

And then, suddenly, she began to sing the old hymn:

"Sweet fields, beyond the swelling flood,
Stand dressed in living green."

Aunt Louisa came out to meet her as she brought back the water.

"You dear child," she said, "you should not have carried that from the spring for me. Like the water David's men brought him from the well of Bethlehem, it is almost too precious to drink." And then she put both arms around her neck. "Oh, Rosella," she said in a choked voice, "what would I do without you?"

And that afternoon Miss Minerva's letter was answered. Rosella did not want to miss her promised land.—Exchange.

JUDGE R. CARTER SCOTT.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Richmond, Va., at a special meeting on Sunday, January 29:

The announcement of the passing away of JUDGE ROBERT CARTER SCOTT was received by the members of this vestry with a deep sense of sorrow difficult to portray. Senior Warden of the church, Chancellor of the Diocese, he stood forth in the religious life of this parish and of the Diocese of Virginia as a marked and prominent figure in the Church's life. His selection to these positions of leadership and trust attest the admiration, the confidence and the affection with which he inspired his associates. Our congregation will miss his services so untiringly consecrated to the interests and welfare of St. Paul's. The Diocese has lost a counsellor, helpful, wise and far-sighted, ever ready with skilled and discreet advice to guide to sound conclusions. But the members of this vestry, together with our beloved rector, so continually associated with Judge Scott in the work for the church, are most profoundly sensible of the great loss we have sustained. It is with unaffected sorrow that we grieve over the departure of not only an associate of wonderful consecration and fidelity, but a valued and lovable friend, who endeared himself beyond measure to one and all by those great and charming qualities which marked his contact with his fellowmen. Judge Scott was a wise and a just judge in this community, and as such enjoyed the esteem of its citizens. Still, it is as the man and the Christian that he endeared himself to us and held our hearts. He accepted the revealed truths of Christianity with simplicity and reverence, and without ostentation or display sought to follow humbly in the footsteps of the Master. Handsome and commanding in appearance, gracious and hearty in greeting and intercourse, he was a most striking and attractive personality at all times and in every gathering. Strong in his convictions, he was yet eager and ready to listen with open mind to all suggestions that seemed to shed a guiding light on the solution of any of life's problems. Endowed with a mind naturally broad and perceptive, cultured by study and reading, and filled with the best traditions of the Virginia gentleman, he exemplified the highest qualities of a noble life. Impulsive, warm-hearted, whole-souled, generous and forgiving, he was a man whom to know was to love. He was gifted with a wonderful and intuitive clearness of vision, of seeing the right, accompanied by a dominant fearlessness of action in doing right. Frankness and candor shown forth in his every speech and action.

Such a loving Christian gentleman, mingling for more than a generation past with the people of St. Paul's Church, setting an example of exalted and consecrated living, naturally became a leader in many phases of our religious life. Elevated to the vestry more than a quarter of a century ago, his influence was felt in all its deliberations. He became our Junior Warden, then Senior Warden, by the voice of all.

For many years he has been a delegate from the Church to the Annual Council of the Diocese. His splendid qualities were at once recognized in that gathering of guardians of the Church's welfare, and he was selected as the Chancellor of the Diocese.

Bowing to the will of Almighty God, it is with unspeakable sadness that we bid farewell to this beloved associate, friend and Christian man, reverently treasuring sweet memories of him which will not be easily effaced.

A Virginia gentleman of the highest attributes of character, a jurist of learning and untiring effort, a stainless Christian in all the walks of life, of exalted ideals and noble sentiments, faithful to every trust undertaken, as husband and father an example for all, unfailingly loyal in friendship, universally respected, trusted and esteemed, loved by a large circle of friends, he has obeyed the final call of his Creator, leaving the grateful fragrance of a well-spent life full of high endeavor and honorable achievement.

Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we here Thy servant sleeping

Resolved: That this memorial be spread upon the minutes of the vestry.

That a copy be sent to the family of Judge Scott.

MRS. GERTRUDE LONG WILLIAMS.

Died, January 23, 1928, at "Redwood", Culpeper, Va., GERTRUDE LONG, widow of George Morton Williams and daughter of Ellis B. and Elizabeth Pendleton Long, of Baltimore, Md. Married in early girlhood, she came with her husband in 1860 to "Redwood", where their twelve children were born, seven of whom survive. During the more than sixty-seven years she has been mistress of "Redwood", it has been known far and wide for its gracious and kindly hospitality, and during the Civil War its portals were thrown open to the wounded and suffering soldiers of either side. The daughter of distinguished ancestry, she was gifted with rare beauty and charm of person and loveliness of character, to which were added those splendid qualities of head and heart which defied the erosive effect of time.

She was a true type of the old-fashioned Southern lady, a gentle, compassionate, loving Christian woman, the queen of her home and greatly beloved by a host of friends in every walk of life. As sweetly closes the flowers at eventide, so her pure spirit passed away, in the assurance of her own strong Christian faith, that the "everlasting arms" were her support, and so ended her long life of usefulness, gentleness and peace in the riches of her grace, and we can safely say that among the many who have passed away, none were lovelier in life, none more deeply mourned in death than this beloved Virginia matron.

NATHANIEL BURWELL PAGE.

NATHANIEL BURWELL PAGE died of pneumonia at Memorial Hospital in Winchester, Va., on Wednesday, the 4th of February. His sudden death, at the age of forty-five, came as a great shock to his many relatives, friends and business associates and has occasioned a very genuine and widespread grief.

Born at "Saratoga", Clarke county, Va., Mr. Page was the son of R. Powel Page, a man of many honors and much beloved. His mother, before her marriage, was Agnes Atkinson Burwell, of "Carter Hall", Clarke county. Thus, born to the highest traditions and cradled in such an environment, Mr. Page early developed the qualities that demand respect in the world! To this birthright was added a fine training at Clay Hill Academy and the Virginia Military Institute. Mr. Page left the halls of his alma mater well equipped for the battle of life.

Energetic, forceful, enthusiastic. The capstone of his character was an unfaltering integrity which drew to him the trust and confidence of men. These principles of rectitude supplemented by industry and judgment, Mr. Page applied to all his business ventures, and his death brought to a close a career of success and promise.

He is survived by a widow, formerly Miss Henrietta King Welton, of Texas, and two children, N. B. Page, Jr., and Henrietta King Page.

For many years he was a vestryman of the Episcopal Church of Millwood, a director of the Bank of Boyce, a member of various clubs and organizations at Winchester and elsewhere, all of which bear testimony to a full and useful life, but it is rather for his sweetness of character, his ardent spirit, his sturdy loyalty and his warm heart that the memory of "Nat" Page will linger as the years pass on.

MRS. CORA DAVIDSON WATSON.

On Tuesday, January 3, 1928, MRS. CORA DAVIDSON WATSON suddenly died at her home in Blacksburg, Va. She is survived by her husband, Dr. J. W. Watson, and four small sons; her mother, Mrs. R. S. Davidson, and a sister, Mrs. J. M. Cobb. She was a devoted and loyal worker in Christ Church, Blacksburg, and her loss is mourned by all who knew her.

"The strife is o'er, the battle done,
The victory of life is won,
The song of triumph has begun.
Alleluia."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

Governor James G. Breathitt and Mr. Whitefoord R. Cole, President of the L. and N. Railroad.

Two pre-convention meetings of interest were held: one, a united diocesan gathering of the Y. P. S. L. on Sunday afternoon, January 22, in the Cathedral, with address by the Bishop. Another, on the evening of January 24, a laymen's conference, discussing questions bearing on the work and development of the diocese.

Two post-convention meetings were also held: one on the evening of January 26; a successful G. F. S. interstate conference under the leadership of the Diocesan President, Miss Henrietta Bullitt. Mrs. H. C. Salmond, Vice-President of the Province of Sewanee, was present.

On January 27 occurred the annual all-day meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, with record-breaking attendance both at the Corporate Communion service, and the morning and afternoon sessions, Miss Elsa Almstedt, Diocesan President, presiding. An encouraging address was made by the Bishop. The two selected speakers were Miss Grace Lindley, National Executive Secretary, and Miss Mildred Buchanan, Missionary to China.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Episcopalians in Convention.

Georgetown, Jan. 25 (By The Associated Press).—The one hundred and thirty-eighth convention of the Episcopal Diocese of South Carolina opened here today in the historic Church of Prince George Winyah with eighteen clergymen and twenty-five laymen present.

Following a celebration of the Holy Communion, the convention was called to order by Bishop William A. Guerry, who presided over the session.

The Rev. William B. Sams, of Mount Pleasant, was reelected secretary, and William Godfrey again chosen treasurer.

The Rev. Peter Ainslie, of the Church of Disciples at Baltimore, will be the speaker at a special service this evening. The convention is expected to last through tomorrow.

Urges Unity.

The importance and necessity of a united Church, composed of all Christian bodies was forcibly stressed by Bishop Guerry during the course of his annual address at the one hundred and thirty-eighth convention of the Diocese of South Carolina, which convened here this morning. Declaring that if "we believe Church unity impracticable and impossible. We admit that Christ was the most deluded and mistaken leader that ever trod the earth", the Bishop said that the Church was once united and could be fused into one body again.

"If we see no possibility in such a union, I can see no future for our race or our country," Bishop Guerry asserted. "A united Church is needed to combat the materialism, and grossness of the age," he said.

The Bishop told of his deep interest in the subject, and how he had proposed a plan which had met with approval in many quarters. "I would like to feel that I have the full support of the diocese in this matter," he asserted.

As to the proposed cathedral in Charleston, Bishop Guerry expressed his approval of the plan submitted by St. Paul's Church, and recommended that the convention accept the generous offer on the part of St. Paul's Parish. This matter will come up for discussion at the business session tomorrow morning.

Personal Notes

PERSONAL NOTES.

The Rev. Robert J. Murphy, now assistant to Dean Chalmers, of St. Matthew's, Cathedral, Dallas, Texas, has accepted the rectorship of St. John's Church, Versailles, Ky., change to be effective in March.

The Rev. Lewis Chester Morrison, late rector of St. James Episcopal Church, Old Town, Maine, with residence at 11 South Brunswick Street, Old Town, Maine, having resigned that parish January 15, 1928, is now Vicar of St. Andrew's and St. Luke's Churches,

ORDINATIONS.

On January 6 the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of Florida, ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Robert Ashton. The ordination service took place in St. Andrew's Church, Jacksonville, the rector of the parish, the Rev. Edgal L. Pennington, presenting the candidate. The Rev. Charles A. Ashby, of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, read the Gospel and the Rev. Douglas B. Leatherbury, of St. Mark's Church, Ortega, the Epistle. The Rev. Charles W. Frazer, of St. Mary's, Jacksonville, read the Litany and the Bishop of the diocese preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Ashton isl minister-in-charge of the Church of Our Saviour, Mandarin, Our Merciful Saviour, New Berlin, and St. Paul's-by-the-Sea, Jacksonville Beach.

In Trinity Church, Marshall, Texas, on November 29, the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Texas, ordained James Whitcomb Egan Airey to the diaconate.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. James M Owens, D. D., of Shreveport, La., and the Rev. Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker preached the sermon.

The newly ordained deacon is to be deacon-in-charge of St. John's Church, Columbus, and Christ Church, Eagle Lake, with address at Columbus.

In the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, Long Island, on St. Thomas' Day, December 21, the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., Bishop of Long Island, advanced to the priesthood his eldest son, the Rev. Ernest Van Renselaer Stires.

Mr. Stires was presented by the Rev. Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, D. D., professor of Church History in the Virginia Theological Seminary. Other assisting clergy were the Rev. Alexander Zabriskie, of Alexandria; the Rev. Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, New York, and the Rev. Stephen Webster, of East Orange, N. J.

The Rev. Mr. Stires was ordained deacon last spring by his father in the chapel of the seminary at Alexandria. He was at once appointed to establish a new mission at Ballerose, one of the recently developed parts of Queens Borough, under the supervision of Archdeacon Duffield. He will continue in charge of this work.

On St. Thomas' Day, December 21, in the Cathedral of the Incarnation at Garden City, Philip DuMond Davis, presented by the Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, was ordered deacon by the Bishop of Long Island.

On the fourth Sunday in Advent, December 18, 1927, the Bishop of Minnesota advanced the Rev. Clarence Burnett Whitehead to the priesthood in St. Peter's Church, New Ulm. The sermon was preached by Bishop McElwain, and the candidate was presented by the Ven. Everett W. Couper.

The Rev. Mr. Whitehead comes to the Church from the Methodist Episcopal Church, having served as local pastor of a large Methodist congregation in Iowa for five years. Prior to that he was in educational work as teacher, principal and superintendent. After being admitted candidate, he was placed in charge of St. Peter's, New Ulm, where he also served during his diaconate, and where he will continue as priest-in-charge.

On November 19, John A. Wilson, Jr. was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D.D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia.

The Rev. Edward W. Hughes, of Pearisburg preached the sermon. The Rev. Herbert H. Young, dean of associate missions, presented the candidate and read the epistle. The Rev. John S. Wellfrd of Norton said the litany. The newly ordained deacon read the gospel.

In 1925 Mr. Wilson became the lay missionary at Trinity mission, Richlands. Since that time he has continued in this work and has also rendered valuable service at other points in that section of the diocese under the direction of the dean of associate missions. As deacon he will continue in the same capacity as heretofore, having his headquarters at Richlands.

On December 22, in St. Andrew's Church, Louisville, Ky., Mr. Charles G. Mears was ordered Deacon. Many of the city clergy were present. Rev. J. S. Douglas presented the candidate, and the Rev. H. S. Musson, rector of the Church of the Advent, delivered the sermon. Mr. Mears will at once assume duties as minister-in-charge of St. Stephen's parish, Louisville, now vacant for some months past.

In Trinity Church, Toledo, O., on December 4, the Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio, ordained Theodore Lee Rynder deacon. He was presented by the Rev. E. F. Talmadge, rector emeritus of Trinity Church, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. E. R. Hart of St. Alban's Church, Toledo.

In St. John's Pro-Cathedral, Providence, R. I., November 30, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D.D., Bishop of Rhode Island, advanced the Rev. George L. Fitzgerald and the Rev. Arthur Wood to the priesthood. The Rev. Dr. Frederic S. Fleming, of Providence preached the sermon.

Mr. Fitzgerald, who was presented by the Rev. Dr. Fleming James of Middletown, Conn., is to be missionary of St. Thomas' Church, Greenville, and Mr. Wood, who was presented by the Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Aucock of Providence, is to be assisted at All Saints' Memorial Church, Providence.

READY FEBRUARY 20TH
FOURTH EDITION—REVISED AND ENLARGED—OF

THE REAL LINCOLN

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By DR. CHAS. L. C. MINOR
(Edited by M. D. Carter)

Startling but little known facts about the life and administration of the great Civil War President.

A composite analysis of the character and achievements of the man who guided the ship of State during the four most critical years of our history. A book that should be in the hands of every student of American history, and especially of every teacner or American history.

POSTPAID, ,2.50

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

JAY ZORN, New York City Business Man.—Dr. Minor's "The Real Lincoln" should appeal to two different classes and for two opposed reasons. To the Northern admirer, who wishes Lincoln's fame to be established and admitted everywhere, because servile flattery and fulsome praise always in the end defeat their purpose by inspiring disgust rather than agreement. To the Southern admirer, because Southerners are more likely to accept Lincoln as a great and worthy man if one from whose acts they suffered so bitterly is not forced upon them as the acme of all perfection. Setting up Lincoln as an idol will sooner or later excite some iconoclast to tear him down in the same ruthless manner we have of late seen demonstrated in the case of more than one American celebrity, not excepting the Father of His Country himself. The higher the statue is set, the lower it must fall when the feet of clay at last give way.

GEN. MORRIS SCHAFF, Officer in the Union Army during the Civil War.—No lover of historical truth, no teacher of American history, can afford to neglect reading Minor's "The Real Lincoln," for it lays bare the facts of Lincoln's civil and political life—what his contemporaries, who knew him intimately, and men of prominence, who met him officially or casually, thought of him personally and of his administration of affairs. . . . No reader of this book will fail to see the waves of propaganda set in motion for political ascendancy immediately after Appomattox and the death of Lincoln, waves leaving a detritus of revenge and falsehood on the pages of about any history written by a Northerner since the War Between the States; but the foliage of Myth has hidden many a counterfeit god.

DR. PAUL G. AUCHAMPAUGH, Department of History, State Teachers' College, Duluth, Minn.—Charles L. C. Minor's "The Real Lincoln" merits the consideration of readers of American history. Dr. Minor would not hold, with some of Lincoln's present-day biographers, that he reached the heights of statesmanship while President. Whether or not all follow him in his indictment of Lincoln's personality, none can deny that he wrote an invaluable epitome of the opposition in the North to Republican rule. No student of the War Between the States can afford to miss this book, while those who are appreciative of the struggle for Constitutional guarantees in the North during the war will rejoice in its timely appearance.

MAJOR GILES B. COOKE, last surviving officer on General Robert E. Lee's staff.—To all who would like to have a true life of Abraham Lincoln I commend "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, giving an account of that part of Mr. Lincoln's life well known to his life-long friends and boon companions.

FRANKLIN L. RILEY, Professor of History, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va.—In recent months the "de-bunking" of biography has become a literary fad. The efforts to paint the Father of Our Country as a "red-blooded man" have aroused mingled feelings of alarm and disgust as well as of tolerance and approval. Although some of us feel that Washington has not received justice at the hands of his recent critics, we refuse to become excited over the matter, realizing that after the romancers have had their say the historians will separate fact from fiction and will give a verdict that will approximate justice. In the case of Lincoln, the hero worshippers have industriously mixed fiction and fact for so many years that they have made his life a real enigma to the searcher after truth. Here the "de-bunking" process has assumed an interesting and novel phase. Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, the compiler of "The Real Lincoln," has confined his statements to extracts from Northern writers, many of whom were friends and admirers of President Lincoln. To my mind, no harm can come from a review of the opinions and estimates of Mr. Lincoln's contemporaries and of more recent eminent historians of the North. If such a compilation should lead readers to undertake a more detailed study of the career of Mr. Lincoln and of the books from which these extracts are taken, this book will be doubly valuable.

MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, Richmond (Va.) Banker and Publisher of The Southern Churchman.—A new edition of that great book, "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, will soon be available to the public, I am informed, and I strongly recommend that all persons interested in the true history of America secure a copy of it. "Time's glory is to calm contending kings, to unmask falsehood and bring truth to light," and it is high time that American writers cease to whitewash Lincoln and give the reading public the true facts about him and his policies. This is done in Dr. Minor's book, which I highly recommend to the reading public.

H. R. McILWAINE, State Librarian of Virginia.—I am glad to know that you are soon to publish a new (fourth) edition of Charles L. C. Minor's "The Real Lincoln." Made up almost altogether of excerpts from the writings of Lincoln's friends, the book gives facts largely overlooked in present-day biographies and which should be known by all who wish to form a just conception of Lincoln's character. It also gives much information as to widespread opposition in the Northern States to coercion of the South. On this account, too, it ought to be widely read everywhere, for such reading has a tendency to strengthen the good feeling now existing between the two great sections of our common country.

DOMINUS FRUSTRA VISIN 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 18, 1928. No. 7.

I AM happy to say that in my early ministry the preachers of God's Word were not hamstrung by any doubt OF THE DIVINE INSPIRATION OR INFALLIBILITY OF THE BOOK THAT LAY BEFORE THEM ON THEIR PULPITS. The questions, "Have we got any Bible?" and "If any Bible, how much?" had not been hatched. Then follows this tribute: "When I was in Princeton Seminary, our profoundly learned Hebrew professor, Dr. J. Addison Alexander, never disturbed us with the much-vaunted conjectural Biblical criticisms, and for this fact I feel deeply thankful. I comfort myself also with the reflection that the great British teachers, Drs. McLaren, Spurgeon, Hall, Liddon, Dale and Parker, have suffered no more from the virulent attacks of the radical and revolutionary higher criticism that I have."—Dr. Theodore Cuyler.

THE Bible is indeed a wonderful book, alike inviting and rewarding the study of its contents. It is immense in the dimensions and relations of these contents. It covers a vast field of history of this world, is full and copious in its ethics, and is as high as God Himself in its spirituality. It deals with the great problem of sin and its remedy. In Christ and His offices it discloses the fact and the doctrine of a Saviour, and in both the plan of God for the salvation of sinners. It pours light upon the great future, and by the lasting issues of immortality shows what this life really means. The Bible is not, upon its own showing, a book for a hasty glance, or merely an occasional and careless thought. It solicits protracted and earnest study, and it is only upon this condition that it yields to the soul its richest treasures. A lifetime thus spent will not exhaust it, or make it tame and commonplace by reason of familiarity. —"Bible Champion."

Through the Eye Gate

THE old Chinese proverb, "One picture is worth ten thousand words", is just as true today as when it was first uttered.

Almost everybody thinks in pictures. Our mental images are all photographs of people, places, or occurrences. In presenting a story with pictures the mind is saved the work of translating words into known picture forms. Picturized messages remain in the mind.

Optical experts the world over have devoted a large part of their time to the perfection of projection equipment especially adapted for use in church work.

Three types of projection are available to the church interested in the purchase of such equipment. They are slide, strip film, and opaque projection.

The fully equipped church will possess all three methods of still projection, for conditions and needs vary with almost every speaker. Every limitation of this nature obviously curtails the possibilities of a fully satisfying address or lecture.

Many companies are producing straight slide projectors varying in both quality and price. Being the most common, this type is the least expensive. Next in cost come the strip film projector and opaque projector.

At least one company produces the combined slide and opaque projector with an attachment that enables the operator to use strip film as well. This instrument, so adapted, makes up a complete series of still projection equipment in one unit and leaves nothing to be desired.

The advertising columns adjacent to this department will help you with many suggestions, but should you not find here that which seems to fit your problem, Church Equipment Service stands ready to put you in touch at once with experts who will give you information and advice. ## Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"You can trust Jesus to minister to you without increasing your pain."

Who comes a step toward God through doubtings dim,
God will advance a mile in shining light to him.

God's silences may be long, but they are never the silence of forgetfulness.

Man without religion is the creature of circumstances; religion is above all circumstances and will lift him above them.—Selected.

Some pray as the attitude of their life; others pray only when they get into trouble.

"It takes less sense to find fault with all than to be fair with all."

In life—not death—
Hearts need fond words to help them on their way;
Need tender thoughts, and gentle sympathy,
Caresses, pleasant looks to cheer each passing day;
Then hoard them not until they useless be;
In life—not death—
Speak kindly. Living hearts need sympathy.
—Selected.

"Of one thing we may be sure—if we have all that we want in any sphere of effort or influence, we have a lower standard than we ought to have. The best worker is always behind where he would like to be. His ideal is ever ahead of him."

"Love is an infinite capacity for taking pain."

Economy that has no setting of magnanimity is always an uninspiring picture.—Rev. William Porkess.

While you kneel,
Although you feel
No special kindlings of the soul,
Upon the whole
Of spiritual thought and life will be
The dew of heaven, falling tenderly.
—William Olney.

"One of the hardest things in Christian work—in all work for that matter—is to get within one's self the spirit which keeps the work from degenerating into drudgery. For that result it is necessary to have in mind a great and lasting motive. Sometimes we find that motive is the possible fruits of our work. A man with a keen imagination, which enables him to look beyond the present duty to the fruit that is sure to come if he remains faithful, may grow weary in well-doing, but he will not faint."

REST

Perhaps no other hymn has brought to penitence, faith, hope and worship so many people in this country as the old one, written by a Scotchman for people inured to hard work and scanty living and rarely heard now in any churches—

"On the other side of Jordan,
In the sweet vales of Eden,
Where the tree of life is blooming,
There is rest for you.
There is rest for the weary;
There is rest for the weary;
There is rest for me."

In the days when in many regions churches and ministers were few and the camp meetings, usually Methodist, were sources of revivals and teaching of religion among the masses, this hymn was sung always every day, frequently several times each day, because it appealed straight to the hearts of the poor, the isolated and the tired laborers. Great congregations, in the open air, united in the singing. The vast volume of sound from hundreds or thousands of strong voices, rising among the swaying treetops, far above, gave to discordance a noble dignity, made real music where there was little melody, because it was the outcry and the longing of strong souls. Quavering notes of age attained in toil and the lusty tones of youth and maturity accustomed to toil mingled. Faces furrowed with years and cares, browned and tanned by sun and weather, softened and shone with the radiance of confident expectation. Hearts, responding to the stimulation and inspiration of the promise, were lifted from the troubles and tangles and tribulations of the constant struggle for food and raiment and went onward with the simple words to sweet and soothing assurance of rest to come presently.

Usually another hymn followed—a hymn with shout and ring and swing of rapturous, triumphant confidence—

"There, anchored safe, my weary soul
Shall find eternal rest
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across my peaceful breast."

Rest and peace and mansions in the skies carried delicious meaning to toiling, lonesome, anxious men, to overburdened women, tasting the one holiday of the year from ceaseless, exhausting labors in squalid homes. To their lonely, homely, dull, worried lives the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest", was a glorious gleam of the mercy and goodness of God, and they received it with heart-strings vibrant to its tenderness and love and beauty and with humbly ecstatic gratitude for the Supreme Sacrifice through which it came to them.

What they learned and felt was widely and wonderfully different from the wail of the brilliant, cultured agnostic of their time, who, having killed three men in duels, blew out his own brains, after writing:

"As the galley slave longs for the night wind's breath
At the heat of noon,
So do I long for thee, Oh Death!
Come soon! Come soon!"

They did not wish for death. Oblivion, the Nirvana of the Hindoo, the extinction of the infidel, were thoughts too dreary and horrible to be harbored. Vital, sturdy, normal, with definite purposes in the life here and fixed faith in rewards for earnest striving to come in the life hereafter, they fought to live and lived to fight and go forward and to do the work and the building given them to do. Yearning for rest as the sweetest of all prospects, they were glad to wait until God, in His time, called them to it. The endless rest and peace, where the wicked should cease from troubling and tired hands should toil no more after the final sleep, was real and sure to them as the morrow of labor to follow the evening of weary lassitude and heavy eyelids and the night of slumber.

So feeling and believing and doing, they created civilization on many wild and dangerous frontiers, made wilderness and swamp yield new strength and wealth for the building of a mighty nation. Their millions of descendants are the unpretentious, decently behaved, staunch, straight-thinking citizens and impregnable Christians who yet believe and work and who make the nation's stability and assure its progress.

The rest for which they longed is craved by all of us, impossible in this world for any of us who intend to do our parts and duty as men and women. None of us but those who have fallen, or have reduced themselves to the level of animals, can endure long idleness. Those of us who find no useful work to do drift surely to follies, vices, crimes. Old or young, poor or rich, the idler is an abject object, doomed to discontent or the most infamous of content, earning nothing for here or hereafter but contempt of God and man.

There is so much to do, for the strong and weakest, the most fortunate and unfortunate, of us. There is so much sorrow to be healed and comforted, misery to be softened or cured, sin and error to be resisted, by word, deed, example, influence; so much evil within ourselves to be watched and fought and overcome. Rest is not here for the earnest and loyal. It is to be looked for, longed for, expected, where the rugged, toiling people who sang from their hearts the old camp meeting hymns, and many other people in different conditions, have trusted, yet trust, to find it. It is for those who perform diligently and bravely the work given them and that always they can find. These will go to the last sleep humbly and happily confident of waking to brighter and more beautiful light than they ever have known, to hear the welcoming benediction of the Merciful Master and Father, "Well done, good and faithful servant"; to be bidden by the Living Lord to enter endless and living joy.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE CENTENARY OF "THE RECORD"

The Well-Known Evangelical Paper of the Church of England.

By the Reverend Samuel A. Wallis, D. D.

IT no doubt will be very interesting to the Evangelical members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America to have a short account in the old Southern Churchman of the centenary of "The Record", which occupies the same position in the Church of England as the Southern Churchman does in our communion. The Record made its appearance on the first of January, 1828, and its editor was Mr. P. F. Aiken. At first it was not a Church paper or a religious journal in the sense in which we now regard them. So in its early days and for over fifty years it appeared in the form and size of a daily newspaper, with many of the essential features of the ordinary daily paper. There was, however, this fundamental difference—the whole tone of the paper was definitely and truly Christian, and it excluded from its columns those objectionable features which characterized many of the papers of that period. We might make the same remark about many of the leading papers of the present time in our own country. Why should they think it necessary, for example, to give a full account of awful murders or of trials for murder and of executions as they do?

It is rather remarkable that whilst the Record has always claimed to be the organ of the Evangelicals, there is no definite reference in the original prospectus or in the early records to the word Evangelical. In fact, it is distinctly stated in the first number that the paper is primarily and substantially a political journal. Yet the founders of the paper and those who have been responsible for it throughout the century have been staunch Evangelicals and foremost in their efforts to advance the cause of Evangelical Truth.

These statements we gather from the quotations found in the Centenary number of the Record. Now we go on with one or two more important of these quotations: "We shall hold, too, that to Christians, Christianity cannot be indifferent; and that our readers, therefore, must choose to mark its progress at home and throughout the earth, which is its destined territory, and to enquire anxiously with us by what means its obstacles may be surmounted, and its successes may be accellerated and confirmed." Thus the Record, from the beginning, has been a strong promoter of Christian missions.

The founders of the Record had no intention of opening its columns to religious disputations, though it will earnestly and constantly stand up for what it believes to be the truth, while it will be ever studious not to allow so much as a casual expression calculated to wound the feelings of any class of Christians.

"The standard of morals in a Christian country we shall assume to be—the New Testament. We shall not admit that the wisdom of God has there prescribed a rule of conduct too pure to be observed in any station of life or too strict to be carried into any sphere of life duty." These are high and noble sentiments, and when churches and nations at length rise to the moral strength which enables them to carry them out, then will the Kingdom of God come on earth. The call of the Record for a higher standard of public as well as of private morals to which it gave rise had the effect of improving the periodical press in a very short time, and it was soon heard that many excellent words were spoken in every direction about the fine influence of this paper in many directions. The paper was first published as a bi-weekly, then it came out three times a week, and then, on a suggestion made by Captain Seton Churchill it was changed to a weekly in 1870. Its circulation had always been good, but the change to a weekly greatly increased this and consequently its influence. It has often been said that Cardinal Newman contributed to the Record in his early days, and a Mr. Gordon, who was connected with the paper in its early publication, told his son that this was true, and we know from Dr. Newman's sermons he was a man of deep spiritual power. Writers of great influence and reputation, both clerical and lay, have been and are frequent contributors, such as the late Bishop Moule, Dr. Griffith-Thomas, well known in this country; also the Rev. T. J. Pulverleft, a regular contributor to "the Chronicle"; Dean Wace, Dr. Watts Ditchfield, now Bishop of Chelmsford, and Mr. Elliot Stock, now ninety-two years old, whose natural force is not abated, also known in this country as a noted Sunday-school worker; not forgetting Dr. Dyson Hague, of Toronto, Canada.

Congratulatory messages in abundance have come in to "the Record" revealing its high standing among English religious papers, from the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London, with many other Bishops and clergy, and all the other Church papers, together with the leading Nonconformist journals. We can only give two, if the editor of the Southern Churchman can allow room for them.

The first is from the Dean of St. Paul's, London, Dr. Inge, an outstanding writer and thinker of the present day:

"So the Record is a centenarian, and still going strong. You have kept your flag flying through a disheartening time, and now I believe that a vigorous revival of Evangelical Christianity is in sight. My best wishes go with you. May I add a few words to express my own hopes? The centre of gravity is passing from authority to experience, from Church and Bible to the living experience of Christ in the hearts of men. But "where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty". Do not let us old people be too conservative, too much afraid of the young. The new Evangelicalism will be adventurous and independent. It will welcome allies where the old school suspected enemies. Let us encourage, not hinder, the younger generation."

In general, while we deem the standing of Dean Inge as high among the leading writers of this period, we might ask where but from the Bible can we get any knowledge of Christ and His power over and in the hearts of men?

Our last congratulation comes from "the Tablet", the leading Roman Catholic journal in England, published in London:

"Throughout eight and eighty years 'the Record' and 'the Tablet' have stood for different and—in some important respects—for opposed versions of Christianity. My own years in 'the Tablet's' editorial chair have been only five; but they have sufficed to convince me that 'the Record's' usages of exposition and controversy are exceptionally honorable. Of course, we hope that 'the Record' will not see a second centenary on its present theological and ecclesiastical basis, but so long as the school of thought called 'Evangelical' remains an appreciable force in England, we trust that such a 'Record' as we have today will be its organ."

We should add just here that the former editor of "the Tablet" paid a very high tribute to the late Mr. Hogan, for many years the accomplished editor of "the Record". We are glad to make a note of this, as it shows a happy change in the personal relations of these editorial corps with each other. The Southern Churchman will no doubt express its heartiest congratulations to "the Record" on the completion of its centenary and pray for the continuance of its great work in promoting and upholding Evangelical Truth in the Great Anglican Communion.

The Southern Churchman heartily congratulates "the Record" and hopes that it wil continue its helpful ministry until the Lord comes.

THE BIBLE---WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT CAME DOWN TO US

By Dr. Williamson

III.

The New Testament.

THE twenty-seven separate books which form that portion of our Bible called the New Testament were all written in a relatively short period of time when compared with the separate books of the Old Testament—probably some sixty years as contrasted with over fourteen centuries in the case of the Old Testament.

Though these were all written at much the same time, they represent the work of many very different minds, all of whom were intimately familiar with the Scriptures of the Old Testament; references to and quotations from these are found in more or less abundance in all the New Testament books. The careful and impartial reader of both the Old and the New Testament will recognize the same inspiring mind and commanding authority in each. Further, it is not merely that the one is the sequel to the other, but that they afford continuous and progressive revelation of Divine Truth. In other words, as has been concisely stated, "The New is in the Old concealed, the Old is in the New revealed".

The New Testament books were originally written in Greek, and there are in existence no less than 4,000 manuscripts of these books, of which about 100 are in uncial (or capital) characters, the rest in cursive or small running hands. In addition to this, the writings of the fathers of the early Christian Church contain so many quotations from New Testament writers, that even had every manuscript and every translation of the New Testament been irrecoverably lost in the fierce persecutions from which Christians and their sacred writings suffered in the early years of the Church's life, nearly the whole New Testament could still have been recovered from the patristic writings of the first three centuries.

The Authenticity of the New Testament.

The original documents being mainly written on perishable papyrus, appears to have all perished; and we are now dependent on manuscript copies and translations. The number of these now available for comparison is so great, however, and the care known to have been taken by the early copyists and translators was so scrupulous, that we have no reason to doubt that we today possess the Scriptures of the New Testament in all essentials as they were originally inspired by God.

When, in contrast with this, we remember that the only verification we have of the text of most of the great Greek and Latin classics is limited to ten, or, at the most, fifteen manuscripts (and in some cases much fewer), dating only from the eighth to the tenth centuries of the Christian era, we shall better appreciate the incomparable weight of the evidence available for verifying the authenticity of the New Testament Scriptures.

One who has thought much on this subject says of the New Testament: "It was very widely circulated, so that any alteration would have been quickly discovered, for before the middle of the second century the greater part of the books of which it is composed were read in every Christian Assembly. . . . These writings were held in the highest reverence, were received as a divine rule of faith and conduct, received as such to the rejection of many others pretending to Inspiration (as the Gospel of Valentinian and of Marcion, etc), and even to the exclusion of those written by eminent Christians, as the Epistle of Clement, etc., and received as divine by those who were called upon to lay down their lives in proof of their belief, and who therefore would exercise the greatest jealousy over the preservation of those writings unaltered. Thus we learn from Tertullian and Jerome that when a Presbyter of Asia had published a spurious piece under the name of Paul, he was immediately convicted, and notice of the forgery was conveyed to Carthage and to the Churches of Africa. . . . The New Testament is more quoted than any other book in the world by a succession of writers from the very time it was written to the present day, and these quotations agree with our Scriptures."

Tertullian and Jerome spoke and wrote in Latin. The former quoted abundantly from Latin versions which he found in existence before the year 200; the latter revised the old into a newer Latin version, referred to later. By careful use of these and other versions, of quotations and of Greek manuscripts, Lower or Textual Critics have been able to give us a Greek text in which there are no important passages as to the meaning of which there is any doubt.

Some Higher Critics (so-called) of today have rejected the authenticity of the Gospels, contending that they were composed much later than the time of the apostles whose names they bear. Apart from the circumstance that for nearly two thousand years they have been accepted by the Christian Church as the authentic writings of their reputed authors, we are confronted by the fact that they were accepted by the members of the Christian Church at the beginning; and further, that it would have been practically impossible for a writer or writers at a later date to have perpetrated a pious forgery without being detected and exposed.

IV.

Early Translations.

The New Testament was originally written in Greek, and by the close of the first century of the Christian era the entire Bible was in existence in the Greek language—the Old Testament in the Septuagint translation from the Hebrew, and the New Testament in its original form. As Christianity spread over the then known world, a very great number of translations were made of the books of the New Testament into Syriac, Ethiopic, Gothic, Armenian, Arabic and other languages. It is believed that Latin and Syriac translations of these books are almost as old as the originals. In the second century what is known as the Old Latin Version came into existence.

There are a great many old Latin Manuscripts which were in use among the Christians of Northern Africa, and in the Western Churches of Gaul and Spain, which have contributed very greatly to the understanding and verification of the translations of the Scripture as we have them today in our English Bible.

It must be remembered that printing was unknown until the fifteenth century A. D., and that prior to that date books could only be reproduced in manuscript form; and although the original manuscript have long since disappeared, there has been a divinely protected succession of copies, which have brought down the Inspired Word with marvelously little change to our own day.

The Vulgate Version.

In the fourth century Bishop Damasus, the head of the Christian Church in Rome, conceived the idea of having the entire Bible translated into Latin in an authoritative form for the use of the whole Christian Church throughout the world, and he instructed Eusebius Hieronymus (better known as St. Jerome) to execute the task. It is said that St. Jerome embarked on the undertaking very reluctantly, owing to the tremendous responsibility which he felt devolved upon any one man engaged alone upon such a work. He is reputed to have been engaged twenty years upon its accomplishment, and the translation which he made, being intended for the common people, has received the name of the Vulgate Version. Though at first greatly disliked and opposed, this celebrated version gradually won its way to a complete pre-eminence, which it retained till the Reformation.

Three copies of the Greek Bible which were made about the end of the fourth or the beginning of the fifth century have survived to the present day, and form the three principal existing manuscripts. These notable manuscripts are known as:

Principal Ancient Manuscripts.

Codex Vaticanus, or the Vatican manuscript, which is in the keeping of the Pope at the Vatican. Till comparatively recently it was quite impossible for scholars to get much benefit from this manuscript, so jealously was it hoarded by the Papal authorities; but by an edict of Pius IX, photographic facsimiles were made, and are now in possession of all the principal libraries of Europe.

Codex Sinaiticus. The circumstances attending the discovery of this manuscript are peculiarly interesting. Professor Tischendorf, a German scholar, who devoted his energies to searching for manuscripts relating to the Bible, in the course of his wanderings found in the Monastery of St. Catherine, at the foot of Mt. Sinai, a waste-paper basket containing parchment leaves, which excited his attention. An examination of these satisfied him that they were portions of an ancient Biblical Manuscript. He learned from one of the monks that many more similar leaves had already gone to light their fires, as they considered them of no value. Perceiving, however, Tischendorf's keen desire to possess what were left, the astute clerics refused to part with them, and it was not until after the lapse of fifteen years that Tischendorf, through the assistance of the Emperor of Russia, finally secured his prize. Notwithstanding the mutilations this manuscript had suffered, it still included much of the Old and the whole of the New Testament; and careful examination and comparison of it with other manuscripts proved that it must have been written about the beginning of the fifth century.

This manuscript is now in St. Petersburg, but facsimiles of it may be seen in the principal libraries of the world.

Codex Alexandrinus. This manuscript was executed, it is believed, in Alexandria, and is a copy of the complete Greek Bible, containing both the Old and New Testaments. This manuscript is in the British Museum, but facsimiles of it are the principal libraries both of this country and of the rest of Christendom.

These three manuscripts are believed to be the oldest manuscript of the Bible now in existence. Two other translations deserve mention:

The Palimpsests.

Codex Ephroemi. This is specially interesting from the fact that it is what is known as a palimpsest, that is to say, a vellum which has been written upon twice. As in ancient times, vellum for writing material was expensive and rare, it sometimes happened that an author who wanted to record his ideas in a durable form had the writing obliterated from an old vellum manuscript, and then superimposed his own composition thereon. This is what had happened to this document. In the twelfth century an old Syrian father of the name of Ephroem had had the hardihood to sufficiently remove from this skin the precious writing of an old Greek manuscript of the Bible, in order that the material might be available for his own writings. Careful examination revealed the faded lettering of the older writing, and it was ultimately found possible, by the application of chemicals, to revive that writing; and now the "Codex Ephroemi" ranks as one of the oldest of the Bible manuscripts, probably dating from the fifth century.

Another important document of this nature in Old Latin is the Fleury Palimpsest.

These manuscripts, together with the various translations already referred to, the Patristic Quotations, and many other documents and inscriptions, are now in the possession of one branch or another of the Christian Church, and are thus available for the authentication and verification of the books of the Bible.

The Bible in Britain.

Christianity is believed to have been introduced into Britain at a very early date, but the terrible invasion of the English is said to have nearly exterminated Christianity except in the West, Cornwall and Wales. From them Ireland is believed to have been evangelized; and by the fifth century, if not earlier, quite remarkable progress in the diffusion of Christian knowledge had taken place through the labors of St. Patrick and St. Columba and other early fathers, and it was from this source that the Gospel was first reintroduced into Britain. Bede tells us that in A. D. 431: "Palladius was sent by Coelestinus, the Roman Pontiff to the Scots (Irish) that believed in Christ, to be their first Bishop."

Columba and his followers in Scotland, and Aidan and his followers in Northern England, were active missionaries nearly a hundred years before the arrival of St. Augustine on the coast of Kent; but until the seventh century there was no translation into the native language of any part of the Bible, and even then the first approach to a translation into Anglo-Saxon was what we may call the paraphrases of Caedmon. Originally a cowherd, attached to the Abbey at Whitby, Caedmon developed so remarkable a gift of poetic composition that he has left an imperishable name through his metrical paraphrases of portions of the Bible.

Wycliffe's Translation.

The next translation in this country was made by the Ven. Bede at Jarrow-on-Tyne. He translated the Gospel of St. John and some other portions of the Bible in the eighth century. There were other Anglo-Saxon translations of parts of the Bible during subsequent years, including that of King Albert the Great; but it was not until long after the Norman Conquest that the first translation of the Bible into English was made. The honor of this translation belongs to John Wycliffe, who in his day filled many parts—first as lecturer at Oxford, afterwards in Parliament as an ardent reformer and opponent of papal tyranny, and then, when rector of Lutterworth, translator of the Scriptures into the English language. He only completed his translation two years before his death. He must have had many helpers, as there were many copies made from his manuscripts which he sent out over the country for the teaching of the people by a band of men who were called "Wycliffe's Poor Preachers". Wycliffe's translation, which was made towards the end of the fourteenth century, was a translation from the Latin Vulgate. It was widely read, though its price was necessarily very high, and it aroused keen interest. It also aroused, however, bitter opposition from the prelates of the Church in England; for the pure light of God's inspired Word did not suit the wickedness and corruption which then abounded amongst the clergy. Thus we find Archbishop Arundel writing to the Pope. "That pestilent wretch, John Wycliffe, the son of the old serpent, the forerunner of Antichrist, who has completed his ingenuity by inventing a new translation of the Scriptures." Wycliffe himself had powerful friends, and was permitted to die in his bed, but his followers suffered sore persecution. Referring to the prayer in the preface to this old Bible, "God grant us to ken and to keep well Holie Writ and to suffer joiefullie some pain for it at the laste", Dr. Paterson Smyth writes: "What a meaning that prayer must have gained when the readers of the books were burned with the copies round their necks, when men and women were executed for teaching their children the Lord's Prayer and Ten Commandments in English, when husbands were made to witness against their wives, and children forced to light the death fires of their parents, and possessors of the banned Wycliffe Bible were hunted down as if they were wild beasts."

Tyndale's Translation.

The next translation, by William Tyndale, a hundred years later, enjoyed a far wider circulation through the then recently discovered art of printing.

In the fifteenth century the art of printing, which had been practiced in China for centuries, was independently discovered in Europe, and the first book published was the Latin Bible.

In 1516 the renowned scholar, Erasmus, published his Greek Testament, which he had prepared at Cambridge, and a time of very great intellectual activity followed. His work was carried on for England by William Tyndale.

I should very much like, did space permit, to dwell upon the noble career of Tyndale, his difficulties and dangers, and the various steps that ultimately led to the publication of his New Testament, and also of parts of the Old Testament in English. His translation, which was issued in the early part of the sixteenth century, was a rendering of the Greek text. He was compelled to fly from this country, and carried on his labors in different parts of the Continent, ultimately at Worms, the city made famous in connection with the reformer Luther. Well might he write: "I perceived that not only in my Lord of London's palace, but in all England, there was no room for attempting a translation of the Scriptures."

After Tyndale's translation was printed, there was the greatest difficulty in getting copies conveyed to England, so fiercely hostile were the rulers of the English Church, still under the dominion of Rome, to the dissemination of the Scriptures in the vulgar tongue. By one device and another, however, copies were transported and distributed. Sermons were preached against both the translation and the translator, five Papal bulls were launched against him, and every port was closely watched and every copy that could be seized burned at the old Cross of St. Paul's. Alluding to this, Tyndale remarked: "In burning the New Testament they do none other thing than I looked for. No more shall they do if they burn me alive also. If it be God's will, it shall be so." Later this actually happened, and for his faithful work Tyndale at last suffered martyrdom. But his death was not in vain. To quote Dr. Paterson Smyth again: "Day by day it became clearer now that the tide of public opinion in England was setting too strongly to be resisted in favor of a People's Bible. In spite of all opposition, the book was everywhere talked about and read. 'It passeth my power,' wrote Bishop Nikke, complaining to the Primate; 'it passeth my power or that of any spiritual man to hinder it now, and if this continues much longer it will undo us all.'" There was no room for questionings about it. The path of the Bible was open at last. Neither King nor Pope could stay its progress now. Over England's long night of error and superstition and soul-crushing despotism God had said: "Let there be light, and there was light"

The Covedale and Matthew Translation and "The Great Bible".

A few years after Tyndale's death the first complete printed Bible in the English language was issued. This translation was accomplished by Miles Coverdale. Following the Bible of Miles Coverdale came another of special interest, by John Rodgers, but known as "Matthew's Bible". It is remarkable that while Tyndale's Bible was banned, Matthew's Bible received the Royal license from Henry VIII, and on its title page appeared a list of Bishops who accorded it their special approval, among them Bishop Tunstal, that "Lord of London", who had remorselessly opposed the Bible of Tyndale.

Though the expense of this edition was borne by John Mathew, of Colchester, its editor was John Rogers, an intimate friend of Tyndale, and really his literary executor. He used the whole of Tyndale's work, printed and manuscript (except the book of Jonah), and completed the work from Coverdale's translation. He also added a large number of notes and comments which were very offensive to the Romish authorities, and it was decided that another Bible must be published to take its place, also under Royal authority. Miles Coverdale and others were sent to Paris for the purpose of ensuring that this edition should be done in the best possible style. It has been described as practically "Matthew's Bible" revised by Coverdale. It was printed in large form, and from this it obtained the name by which it has ever since been known as "The Great Bible". The version of the Psalms in the Prayer Book, which, as we all know, differs in phraseology in many respects from the Psalms as printed in the Authorized Version, is taken from this "Great Bible", and the "Comfortable Words" in the Communion Service are also derived from the same source. This Bible, by command of Henry VIII, who had now broken with Rome, was placed in the various churches, and for greater security chained to desks or pillars, whence the copies thus used obtained the name of the "chained Bibles".

This Bible was also chained in the courts of law, and both jurymen and witnesses had to come up to it to be sworn. It is an interesting fact that, although these Bibles have now all disappeared, the words still used in our courts today, when a prisoner is told of his right to challenge the jury, inform him that if he wishes to do so, he must do it before they come to the Book to be sworn, and he will be heard.

The "Geneva Bible".

After the brief seven years' reign of Edward VI, ensued the five dark years of the reign of the "Bloody Mary", during which Rogers (the editor of "Matthew's Bible"), Latimer, Ridley, Cranmer and many others, suffered martyrdom for their fidelity to Bible truth. Many devout and learned men fled the country, and a band of Christian scholars at Geneva united in carefully revising and annotating the English Bible. Their labors resulted in a translation known as the "Geneva Bible", which was published in 1560, and, with her consent, dedicated to Queen Elizabeth.

This edition (also known as the Breeches Bible, from its rendering of Gen. 3:7, "made themselves breeches"), was well equipped with references, notes, maps, pictures and concordance; it had set the fashion of putting each verse into a separate paragraph. It was soon adopted in Scotland, where every church and every substantial householder was ordered to buy a copy. While the Bishops set their faces against it, and delayed its being printed in England for many years, it yet became extremely popular, and held the field along with the Great Bible till the publication of our Authorized Version.

(To be concluded.)

THEN HE BEGAN GOING TO CHURCH.

In a recent number of Hearst's Magazine, Monroe W. Morrow tells of his efforts to live independent of religious organizations and of carrying the thing to such an extreme as to require his children to do likewise. It was because he disapproved of some things that were done in the name of religion.

One day, however, he departed from his custom and went with his children to a service. Suddenly it dawned on him what an injustice he had done his little ones, the recital concluding as follows:

As the choir came in, I suddenly realized how much that was beautiful I'd been robbing them of. "Onward, Christian Soldiers"—"I'm a Pilgrim"—"Oh, Mother Dear, Jerusalem!"—all that glorious music was new to them, and after all, how inexpressibly dear to me, enwrapped in memories of my mother and the happy Sundays she made for us!

And the prayers—suddenly I found myself joining in them with heartfelt sincerity. "We have erred and strayed like lost sheep. . . . We have left undone those things which we should have done and we have done those things which we ought not to have done, and there is no health in us." Not my prayers, but superb phrases from some contrite heart dead 400 years, that still could express my failure and of need of better than myself. "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done."

As I knelt, the enormity of my own stupid narrowness came home to me. Without regard to my personal skepticism, how blind I had been not to see in a regular attendance at church that larger affirmation of the family standards that I was seeking for the children. Without regard to their petty divergencies of creed weren't the churches still the strongest, the most obvious force at work to lift men's faces from the sod?

From that Sunday on, we have gone regularly to church. The beautiful services are becoming a part of the children's cultural facts. They no longer question the authenticity of our family standards and they are not yet old enough to question those of the church. This is all I know now as to the effect of the church upon them. As to their conduct, what the church will do for that, again, only time will tell.

As for myself, an alien among the faithful, the church, after all these years, seems to fill some need that I cannot diagnose. Perhaps, since so much of the spiritual has gone out of our poetry and our music, the church supplies the need for it. Perhaps the conviction that it so solidly fills the demand in the children's disciplinary progress makes for real satisfaction. Perhaps I still have a wistful hope that some happy Sunday a sermon will give the key to God and I must be there to receive it. Whatever the reason, I shamelessly admit that I thoroughly like to go to church.

HOLINESS OR SANCTIFICATION

By P. R. Nugent

"God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness."—1 Thess, 4:7.

"Christ is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."—1 Cor. 1:30.

Attention is called to the fact that, as God has made Christ to be sanctification for His people (1 Cor. 1:30), it necessarily follows that one's attitude (whether of acceptance or rejection) towards sanctification is an attitude towards Christ (1 Thess. 4:7, 8).

The Need.

1. God's people are called to holiness (1 Pet. 1:15, 16; 1 Thess. 4:7).

2. Holiness is connected with seeing the Lord (Heb. 12:14).

3. It is also connected with the first resurrection (Rev. 20:6).

4. It is also connected with standing before God's throne (Rev. 7:14, 15).

5. The unclean are cut off from fellowship with God and from the "holy city" (Isa. 6:5, margin; Rev. 21:2, 27).

6. An object God has in chastening His people is to make us partakers of His holiness (Heb. 12:12).

Man needs a work done in his heart that will satisfy God, and Christ is God's provision to meet this need (1 Cor. 1:30).

What Sanctification Is Not.

It is not the result of man's efforts or works (Eph. 2:9); nor is it natural graces or gifts (Rom. 7:18); nor merely an outwardly correct life, however important this is (1 Sam. 16:7); nor freedom from mistakes and infirmities of understanding (Ps. 77:10); nor the suppression of inward evil, or unrighteousness, by will power (Rom. 7:19-23); nor spiritual pride and self-exaltation (Isa. 64:6). On the contrary, a truly sanctified person knows he has nothing of himself to boast of—all the glory belongs to God. Nor is it freedom from temptation and liability to sin (Acts 20:19; 1 Cor. 10:13; 1 Jno. 2:1). Adam and Eve were not created with sin in them, but they both yielded to external temptation and transgressed. Nor is a person made perfectly like Christ when thus sanctified (Jude 24), for there is progress on this line afterwards. Nor does this experience mean that one is made perfect in wisdom, or knowledge, or judgment, or service (1 Cor. 13:12); nor does it mean (as some charge) that a person claims to be "as good as God", absolutely sinless, and beyond the need of God's continued grace and sustaining power (Jno. 15:5). Finally, it is not identical with conversion (Jno. 17:9, 17); nor is it consecration (Ex. 29:9, 33, margin).

What Sanctification Is.

The words sanctification and holiness are used interchangeably in the Bible and have the general meaning of separation, but this separation has different phases. In the experience of holiness dealt with here, and which is entered at a definite time (it is not gradual), there are three phases of separation included: (1) Separation from worldly, selfish purposes and ownership by voluntary dedication to God to be fully owned and ruled by Him (Ex. 28:36; Zech. 14:20; Rom. 6:13; 2 Cor. 6:17; Num. 6:8; 16:v8). (2) Separation from inward uncleanness by having the heart cleansed by God from all unrighteousness. Sin and its results are gone so that there is purity within (1 Pet. 1:22; 1 Jno. 1:7, 9; Rom. 8:2; Ps. 24:3, 4; 1 Tim. 1:5; Isa. 6:5-7). (3) Separation, because God, the Holy Spirit, comes to abide and thus make the soul His dwelling place. Such a person is then holy, or sanctified, not of himself but because God is there with his own holiness, for the divine nature is essentially separated from what is unclean (Ezek. 36:26; Mal. 3:1; Ex. 40:34, 29:34; 1 Cor. 3:16, 17; Jno. 14:23; Gal. 2:20, 4:6; 1 Jno. 3:24, 4:12, 13; Rom. 8:9-11; Col. 1:27; 2 Cor. 6:16). The temple is holy because of the One who abides within. When a person is thus dedicated to God, cleansed from all unrighteousness and the Holy Spirit has come to abide, he is sanctified. . . . A natural accompaniment of this is that the law is written on the heart; divine love rules the heart without a rival within; and the soul is in a healthy state for "the root of bitterness" is gone (Jer. 31:33; Ps. 40:8; 1 Jno. 4:16, 17; Deut. 6:5; 3 Jno. 2; Heb. 12:15).

Of those who enter this experience, some testify that the cleansing and coming of the Spirit take place at the same time; others, that there was an interval between the cleansing and the coming. In the final outcome the result is the same. Of course, a clean heart is not the Holy Spirit, but is the result of His work. The Holy Spirit is a Person. He is God (Acts 5:3, 4).

How Obtained.

(1) Yield yourself unto God unreservedly (all you know and all you do not know) for Him to sanctify you and always have His way with you (Rom. 6:13; 1 Cor. 6;19). (2) Definitely, believingly, ask God to cleanse you from "all sin and unrighteousness" (1 Jno. 1:7, 9), and give you the Holy Spirit to abide forever (Gal. 4:6; Jno. 14:16; Luke 11:13; Acts 2:38, 39). (3) Apart from all attention to feelings, or to manifestations, believe God's Word that you receive what you ask for because you have asked according to His will (1 Jno. 5:14, 15; Mark 11:24; Matt. 7:7, 8; Luke 11:13). God surely keeps His Word and will make it real if you really and steadfastly trust him.

When Obtained.

Not necessarily at or near death, but in the present time to those who will. Death is not a saviour, but an enemy, and cannot rightly be expected to do Christ's work in His stead (1 Cor. 15:26). Peter speaks of purity as already wrought in people. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth" (1 Pet. 1:22). "Purifying their hearts by faith" (Acts 15:26)—not by efforts, works nor growth." See also 1 Tim. 1:5; 2 Tim. 2:22. The same is true about receiving the Holy Spirit (Gal. 3:2; Acts 15:8; 8:17; 2:4). It is spoken of as having taken place—not a mere "hope so", but a reality.

How Retained.

This is a matter of daily faith and obedience (Num. 15:40; Rom. 1:17; 2 Cor. 1:24; Phil. 2:12, 13). The experience of holiness is rightfully followed by the practice of holiness. There should not be a holding on to an experience—an impersonal thing—but a continued faith in the Lord Jesus, not only in the glory above, but also in your own heart, as the source of all holiness both in the soul and in the outer life. God within is mightier than all the foes without (1 Jno. 4:4). Daily prayer, Bible reading and study, Christ exalting testimony to holiness, and service in God's will—all enter into the continuance of the experience of holiness, or sanctification, in one's life. Yet no dependence should be put in fulfilling these conditions, but only in the Lord. Faith should always be in Him alone. He is the Keeper (1 Pet. 1:5) and it is all of grace.

What Hinders.

In general, whatever hinders faith, or obedience, is a hindrance to entering this experience. . . . (1) Ignorance of the truth. Some have never heard it (Rom. 10:14). (2) Unbelief as to the possibility of it. It is possible to see only the difficulties and not see that the power of God is far greater than the difficulties (Eph. 3:20; Mark 10:27). (3) Unteachableness. Some are not willing to be taught (Acts 17:11). (4) Waiting for some sort of feeling before believing. This is putting feelings in the place of God's Word. The latter is the true ground for faith (Acts 27:25). (5) Laying down ways for God to work—expecting Him to deal with you exactly like He did with some one else. God manifests Himself, and His works, in different ways, as He chooses. (6) Listening only to opponents of the truth instead of searching the Bible prayerfully for the right way (Jno. 7:26, 48). (7) Misunderstanding. This may be owing to mistaken ideas of what is taught on this line (see second paragraph). Or it may come through seeing inconsistent upholders of the truth whose ways do not agree with their profession. (8) Love of popularity. By standing for what is not popular there may be a loss of friends (Jno. 12:43; 5:44). (9) Pride. Some think it too humbling to confess their need because they have some reputation as Christians, or preachers. (10) It might injure business, or cause loss of a living (Heb. 12:16). (11) Stubbornness. Some are not willing to yield to God; they prefer their own way (Luke 13:34). (12) Shame. There is reproach connected with this experience and some are not willing to bear it, nor be thus identified with Christ (Heb. 13:12, 13). (13) Fear. People think something dreadful will happen if they let God have His way with them. There is lack of confidence in His wisdom and love (Heb. 19:35). (14) Experimenting. "I'll try it and see how it works," about expresses the way some take, and of course do not succeed. (15) Trying to reason it out (Rom. 10:10). (16) Expecting from people the help that can come from God alone (Jer. 17:5-8). (17) Dependence on efforts, works, prayers (your own or others'), or even upon faith, instead of on God alone (Mark 11:22). (18) Slowness of heart (Luke 24:25). (19) Satan (Luke 8:12). (20) Double-mindedness (Jas. 1:7). (21) Half-heartedness (Jer. 29:13). (22) Failure to persevere (Heb. 12:15; 6:12; 10:38; 2 Kings 2:4-15). Sometimes this comes through undue attention to the "cares of this world". (23) Ignorance of need and consequent indifference to having it supplied (Rom. 7:9, 12, 13). (24) Joy. "Too good to be true" (Luke 24:41). (25) Seeing only the growth phase of the Christian life. This definite experience of sanctification is a crisis (Mal. 3:1; Acts 2:2). (26) Self-justification, or self-righteousness. Luke 10:29 shows this as regards loving one's neighbor, and the same disposition may cause a person to bolster himself up on his present state of grace when confronted with the need of sanctification. (27) Loving, and clinging to, some worldly thing. It may be something gainful, or pleasurable, or fashionable (1 Jno. 2:15; 2 Tim. 4:10).

When any one comes to a final decision towards God about holiness, the decision is either for holiness or hell.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 22.—Topic: The Angels.

A study of the revelations of Scripture concerning the angels is of intense interest, and of which every Christian should have a general knowledge at least.

Angels are an order of spiritual beings or creatures, created by God to execute the Divine will, their number being so vast as to be referred to at times as "the heavenly hosts that cannot be numbered". Angels represent the court and armies of heaven, and apparently exist in various grades or ranks, the designations of which as to their meaning have not been revealed.

These heavenly hosts are also divided into two difficult realms or spheres; i. e., Angels of God and Angels of Satan; Holy Angels and Fallen Angels.

Angels are of great power and strength, and can make themselves visible when necessary. Their visible ministry to human beings in past Ages has been superseded in this present church Age by the Holy Spirit within. Their astounding rapidity of locomotion is akin to the lightning's flash, which along with voices we know from radio development are flashing through the air, remind us of the wonders of the eternal habitation, yet to be revealed. The following Scriptures afford glimpses of these wonderful creatures with whom we shall some day come in close communion:

1. Their origin; created by God.—Neh. 9:6; Ps. 148:2-5.
2. Their purpose; ministering the Divine will.—Heb. 1:7; Col. 1:16, 17; Acts 8:26.
3. Their number; innumerable.—Jer. 33:22; Dan. 7:10; Heb. 12:22.
4. Their habitation; the heavens.—Luke 2:13; Matt. 22:30; Rev. 5:11.
5. They possess spiritual bodies, with power to visualize.

—John 20:12.
6. Angels do not marry.—Mark 12:25 (revealed as masculine).
7. Angels never die.—Luke 20:36.
8. Angels partake of food.—Gen. 19:1-3; Ps. 78:23-27.
9. They possess great power and strength.—Acts 5:19; Ps. 103:20; 2 Thess. 1:7.
10. They worship Christ.—Heb. 1:6-9; Rev. 5:11-12.
11. They are individually named, i. e., Gabriel, Michael, etc.
12. Can move with lightning speed.—Ezek. 1:14.
13. Believers rank superior to angels.—Eph. 3:10, 11; 5:6; Heb. 1.
14. Satan also has angels, and powers.—Matt. 25:41; Eph. 6:12; Jude 6:7.
15. Satan's forces eventually overcome.—Rev. 12:7-12.
16. Angels are graded: Angels; Archangels; Authorities; Cherubim; Dominions; Dignities; Principalities; Powers; Seraphim—Rom. 8:38; Col. 1:16; 1 Pet. 3:22; Jude 8:9; Gen. 3:24, etc., etc.
17. Angels will act as harvesters, and also gather the elect of Israel, in the great day of the Lord.—Matt. 13:30, 31.
18. The angels will accompany our Lord when He returns to set up His Kingdom.—Matt. 25:31; Rev. 19:14.
19. The angels observe our actions.—1 Cor. 4:9.
20. Angels receive the departing believers, and convey them to their eternal habitation.—1 Cor. 16:22.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

STUDIES IN EPHESIANS (Continued) By the Rev Duncan Thomas.

Chapter 1:4-14. Note that in God's provision for us each Person of the Trinity has a part—the Father in planning, the Son in redeeming, the Holy Spirit in sealing. His provision covers salvation from the past, in the present, and for the future; Justification, Sanctification, Glorification—complete provision for every phase of the life here and hereafter.

Verse 3 is a doxology for the gift of every spiritual blessing that heaven contains, which have all been given to us, in Christ. There are three fundamental needs of every man who has come into the world since Adam sinned, and these three things, which cover all and include all spiritual needs, Christ supplies for us. The basic needs of all men outside of Christ are for a change in Relationship towards God, for a change of personal Condition, and for a change of Motive-and-Motor-Power or Dynamic.

First. Every man who is not a Christian needs a change of relationship. Without exception—no matter how cultured, well-educated, amiable—all men are naturally alienated from the life of God. The relationship of every man—whether he admits it, or in spite of his protest against the statement—is one of enmity to God. He is antagonistic to God, and to His will and ways. One statement is sufficient to prove it. "Without Christ means without God and without hope." That brings his protest; yet that is the statement of God Himself in this very Epistle, and the protest against it or rejection of it shows that the mind is unwilling to accept God's Way—"the only Way under heaven". If not for Him, then against Him! And the pathetic thing about it is that men were created to be sons, not enemies.

And here is the marvelous love of God that He should provide for ingrates and rebels a change of relationship, and in such wise and at such cost. For while we were yet enemies, God gave His Son to die for us and reconcile us to Himself. Christ did not die to reconcile God to us, for though there was a penalty necessarily due for sin, yet, even as condemning Judge, God still loves us and His heart is grieved if we insist on paying that penalty. No, Christ died to change our enmity to God. Before we were changed, while still at enmity, God in His love chose us to be His sons, and provided that former aliens might in Christ become heirs. As when a millionaire adopts a penniless orphan, his whole life is changed, so that change in relationship for us means a readjustment of our whole life. "Now are we sons of God"! "and have a right to all the privileges of the sons of God"!

Second. That brings us to the second change, of Condition. We were, while enemies, dead in trespasses and sins. Our lives show what we are. But now having made us to be sons of God, He provides that we may live the part. So Christ cleansed us in His precious blood from all the stain of sin, and we are made alive unto God in Him, in order that we should be unto His praise and not His reproach. Men judge the father by the son. Having made us sons, God would be blamed if His sons are unworthy. Therefore He provides a change of condition, as great as between death and life. In ourselves we were dead, but now in Christ we are made alive and His life is ours. Accordingly "we who died in sin, how shall we any longer, to any degree, keep on living in sin, or keep on sinning"? How much sin should a Christian commit? What business has he in any sin whatsoever? All sin is unclean. Even the so-called "respectable sins". Before we were Christians we worried, or were impatient, or were unloving at times, or selfish, etc. If we are now, even slightly or occasionally, we are living as we did before, and we are unclean. And Christ did not shed His blood that we should be unclean, but "whiter than snow", "that we fall into no sin".

Third. But even being made sons and cleansed, we are so weak that we cannot keep clean. So God provides another change for us, of Dynamic. We are impotent, but He is omnipotent. And He takes up His abode in us in the Person—not in the influence or power—but in the Person of the Holy Spirit. Who is God Himself. For every child of God has His Spirit—"except ye be reprobate", that is, not sons. God is living in us, literally, actually, personally; not merely in figure, fancy or by influence. And the Holy Spirit changes the Motive of our lives. Formerly we lived for self, no matter how apparently philanthropically; our lives were directed by what we wanted. Now we have the mind of Christ and His Spirit to control and direct every motive and impulse, as the "love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit".

Formerly we lived in our own strength and effort, and such a weak motor impulse resulted in shame and failure. Of course we can live that way now, if we choose; and some people unscripturally feel that, having been justified by God, they must now fall away from grace and sanctify themselves by their own efforts. Doing so, there is inevitably, as before, defeat, and reproach to His name. But God has given us the Holy Spirit to energize us by His power in the inward man. He works in us both the desire and the accomplishment, willing and doing. And the dynamic of God is sufficient for the most helpless. In fact, the more we recognize our helplessness, and so yield ourselves to His control the better; for then His "power is made perfect in weakness". The vessel is still earthen. Yes. But remember that it is now God who is in charge of it, and His power and grace more than make up for all weakness. We are just as liable to failure as ever of ourselves, but in His hands there can be no failure.

LOVED ONES GONE AHEAD.

We seem to give him back to Thee, dear God, who gavest him to us. Yet as Thou didst not lose him in giving—so we have not lost him by his return. Not as the world givest, giveth Thou, O Lover of souls. What Thou givest, Thou givest not away, for what is Thine is ours always if we are Thine, and life is eternal: and love is immortal: and death is only a horizon: and a horizon is only the limit of our sight. Lift us up, Strong Son of God, that we may see further: cleanse our eyes that we may see more clearly: draw us closer to Thyself that we may know ourselves nearer to our beloved, who are with Thee—and while Thou dost prepare a place for us, prepare us for that happy place, that where they are and Thou art we, too, may be, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

How can I cease to pray for thee—
Somewhere in God's great universe thou art today.
Can He not reach thee with His tender care?
Can He not hear me when for thee I pray?
What matters it to Him who holds
Within the hollow of His hand, all worlds, all space,
That thou art done with earthly care or sin?
Somewhere within His ken thou hast a place,
Somewhere thou livest and hast need of Him—
Somewhere thy soul sees higher heights to climb—
And somewhere there may be valleys dim,
That thou must pass to reach the hills sublime.
Then all the more that thou canst not hear,
Poor, human words of blessing, will I pray,
O true, brave heart—God bless thee wheresoe'er
In His great universe thou art today.

DAILY NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE PORTIONS

By the Reverend W. G. Scroggie, D. D.

THE SCRIPTURE UNION.

Sunday, February 19—St. John 3:25-36.

Subject-Title: The Conclusion of a Great Testimony.

THE MESSAGE.

In vs. 22-30, we hear the last from John the Baptist: he closes as he commenced, and is loyal to the last. John and Jesus' disciples were both baptizing (22, 23; and 4:1, 2). This led the Jews to start a controversy (25, 26): they were very good at that, as a lot of people are. There would be less debate if everybody did his own thinking; but numberless people "put out" their thinking, as they do their washing. Well, John soon silenced their cavil. What, in effect, he said was, "I am Jesus' friend, not His rival". He confirms his first testimony (28 and ch. 1). Do you bear a consistent witness? John's business was to bring the bride and the Bridegroom together; that done, his work was done; "this my joy has been fulfilled" (29). How great a thing it will be if, at last, you and I can say, "We have done what God sent us into the world to do". John's was unselfish success. "He must increase, but I must decrease" (30). Could one finish his life's task more nobly than that? Selfish success is utter failure, but to magnify Christ is to "win through" gloriously. The patron is surely greater than the protege! And the head than the hand! Vs. 31-36, like 16-21, are considered by many to be the Evangelist's, not the Baptist's, words, and not without good reason. The Apostle John is eminently theological in his reflections, and mystical. Note two things only in these verses: first, that the Word of God (1:1) speaks the words of God (34); and second, that the Father, Who loves Him, has given all things into His hand. Do you really believe that all things are in the hands of the Lord Jesus? Then you will have no panic, and no unnerving fear.

Monday, February 20—St. John 4:1-14.

Subject-Title: Method in Soul-Winning.

THE MESSAGE.

Here is a superb detailed illustration of how Christ dealt with souls, and of the method whereby we, too, may reach them. The great underlying principle is, find a point in contact with the one whom you would win. Follow this out in the present instance. From start to finish there are seven stages in this capture, two of which we consider today. 1. The Preparation (1-6). This leads up to the main story, and is full of practical interest. Mark a few points. Vs. 1. "The Lord." During His earthly sojourn He was known and spoken of as Jesus, but John, writing at the close of the first century, rightly calls Him Lord. Vs. 2. A note of the Evangelist's, correcting a rumor. The Master of the house does not do the porter's work. Vs. 4. The necessity here referred to was partly geographical, but predominantly spiritual. There was another route from Judea to Galilee, which some took for the reason stated in vs. 9; but Jesus' purpose to bless cuts through all prejudice. Vs. 6. "Well," that is spring, or fountain, as in vs. 14; but in vs. 11, 12, it is well, or cistern; this is an important distinction. "The sixth hour", that is, 12 noon, the hottest hour of the day. Jesus was tired and sat down to rest; but He was never too tired to do good. Place, time, circumstances, all prepare for the great event. 2. The Approach (7-15). Mark how naturally the conversation opens up. The Lord of Glory asks an adulteress for a drink of water. Why? Incidentally because He was thirsty, but principally because He wanted to give her a drought of "living water". Thirst and water, therefore, are the points of contact (10, 13, 14). "If thou hadst known" (10, cf. Matt. 12:7). Think of the things you would and would not have thought, and said, and done if only you had known what you might well have known. Ignorance of the things that matter most is folly, and weakness, and a curse. Slowly Jesus is leading this woman to God. Let us pray for a measure of His patience.

Today's Thought: The Soul of the Springing Well (14).

Tuesday, February 21—St. John 4:15-30.

Subject-Title: Method in Soul-Winning.

THE MESSAGE.

See yesterday's two points. Now, 2. The Assault (16-18). The moment had now come when a raid must be made upon this woman's conscience. Nicodemus' difficulty was intellectual; this woman's was moral; both needed the Gospel, but both were not reached in the same way. Note the suddenness and directness of Jesus' attack: He stormed the fort with vigor. That is the only hope in many a case: some people must be awakened to realities by means of surprise. Jesus said, "Go . . . and come" (16): He was not sending her away. Let us not imagine this woman to be worse than she was; she had been married to the five men, but not to the sixth; at a point in her life there was a moral breakdown. I wonder how that came about! Beware! 4. The Advance (19-24). The woman, by her reply to Jesus, admitted her guilt: an innocent person would not have said what is recorded in vs. 19. But her guilt admitted, she wishes to dodge the matter, and so starts an argument; but the shaft has found a lodgment. Mark the growth of Christ upon this woman: Jew (9); Sir (11); Prophet (19); the Christ (29). Is Christ becoming more and more to you? Have you a pet sin in your life? A man may be quite willing to discuss the outer matters of religion, and yet be quite unwilling to be judged by its inner truth. Is that true of you? 5. The Capture (25, 26). Here the conversation ends, because the goal has been reached. Jesus first revealed this woman to herself, and then, Himself to her. That is always the way: it is only the sick who need a physician, only the sinner who needs a Saviour. Jesus here plainly claims to be the promised Messiah (26). 6. The Witness (27-30). Surely the most proper and natural thing for a saved soul to do is to tell some one else of the Saviour. Have you done that?

Today's Thought: There Is Not a Human Being Who Is Not Worth Winning.

Wednesday, February 22—St. John 4:31-42.

Subject-Title: Sustaining Service.

THE MESSAGE.

Review the six points of the two previous days. We now come to the seventh and last in this story: 7. The Consequences (31-42). There are two great paragraphs here:

(i) Jesus' lesson on Sowing and Reaping (31-38). Mark His absorbing enthusiasm in soul-winning (31-34). Some people are more anxious about suppers than souls, and would rather dine than seek a degenerate. That was not the Lord Jesus' case: soul-seeking and soul-saving were to Him nourishment (32). Have you ever felt like that? The Master had a great consciousness of vocation, and an engrossing ambition to complete His task. How great is the thrill of worthy accomplishment! Let your pleasure and your profit go hand in hand as you carry out the program which God has made for you (34). And now, out of His action comes a lesson (35-38). Contemplate the great truths here taught—that there is a harvest waiting to be reaped (35); that not only are we called to sow what others will reap, but also to reap what others have sown (37, 38); that both sower and reaper will meet at the granary in the glory (36). Let us remember more what they who went before us have done. Our churches are products of men and women whose footprints across the pages of Church history can be traced by blood.

Our second paragraph tells of (ii) The Verification of Experience (39-42). Why do you believe? Because some one has borne a testimony, or because you have felt? Another person's faith will not save you; you must believe. Assent and consent are not the same. Assent comes of knowing Christ mediately (39), but consent, by knowing Him immediately (42). Nothing will do but direct contact with the Saviour Himself, "the Saviour of the world".

Today's Thought: There's a Field Awaiting Our Sickle Today.

Thursday, February 23—St. John 4:43-54.

Subject-Title: A Noble Nobleman Ennobled.

THE MESSAGE.

1. It is a thousand pities that so many folks have to go from home to be appreciated (43-45), yet so it is. Many a preacher is more used in other pulpits than in his own; and the reason, not infrequently, is to be found in the pew—his own people do not come with the expectation and give him the encouragement which he gets abroad. "It is a shame to support a stranger and starve a son." 2. The story of this nobleman is very illuminating (46-53), for it is a lesson in the development of faith. Three times his faith comes into view; when he came to Jesus he was exercising faith (47); when Jesus said his son was healed he believed (50); and when he got home again he believed still more (53). Faith is not like a brick, but like a plant; it is as a grain that grows, first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. Such was this man's faith; it came to maturity. Has the development of your faith been arrested? How? Why? This man came to Jesus on behalf of his sick son. Perhaps you have children who will not come to the Saviour for themselves; see then that you come to Him for them. Many a son and daughter has been saved from disaster and death because a father or mother came to Jesus on their knees. 3. With vs. 54, a great division of this Gospel ends. Jesus has been at work in Judea, Samaria and Galilee, and we have seen Him giving life to a man, a woman and a child. His first miracle was wrought at a marriage, and His second, in a house of mourning. His work sweeps the whole horizon between happiness and hopelessness; if it did not, He could not be the Saviour of the world. The Lord has a heart for laughter and tears; He meets us in the sunshine, and in the shadows. He is the Lord of the whole life: He will guard our gladness, and transfigure our tears. Have you found Him to be all that to you?

Today's Thought: "I Trace the Rainbow Through the Rain."

Friday, February 24—St. John 5:1-14.

Subject-Title: Omnipotence Meets Impotence.

THE MESSAGE.

Let us divide this chapter into three parts, and call them the Sign, the Sequel and the Sermon. We take the first two today. 1. The Sign (1-9). Watering places did not begin with Buxton, and Droitwich, and Harrogate; there was one at Jerusalem over 1,900 years ago. It is astonishing how careful people are of their bodies, and careless of their souls: they take their bodies to the springs, and leave their souls by the sewer. This man had been impotent for thirty-eight years (5), and evidently his infirmity was due to his sin (14). Contrast 9:1-3. Jesus had a way of finding out hard cases; the great Physician occupied Himself more with heart disease than with headache. The Master sought out this meeting-place of pain, and dealt with the worst case there. The greatest of all blessings is not forced upon us; we are consulted, and must give our consent (6). Many still are looking to a pool instead of resorting to the Physician (7); are trusting ritual, and passing by the Redeemer. Are you? The man who desires Christ need wait for no one—come right along just now (7), and hear Him say, "Rise—take—walk" (8); and believe that always His commands are His enablings (9). 2. The Sequel (10-18). What follows is more than disappointing. We have no reason to expect much of the Jews (18), but certainly we expected more of the healed man, who, however, betrayed his Benefactor (13, 15). How base human nature can be! What was the complaint? That Jesus had healed a man on the Sabbath. But surely there was no better day in the week for such an act! Beware lest, while being as orthodox as heaven about the Sabbath, you be as heterodox as hell about salvation. Do you prefer convention to conversion? What is the good of a system which shackles the Saviour? The Jews unwittingly were true commentators (18).

Today's Thought: There Is Work Which Is Rest; and There Is Rest Which Is Rust (17).

Saturday, February 25—St. John 5:15-29.

Subject-Title: An Unveiling of Coming Judgment.

THE MESSAGE.

3. The Sermon (19-47) arises out of the Sign (1-9) and the Sequel (10-18). The Sermon appears to fall into two parts, in the first of which the Lord bears witness to Himself, and in the second of which He calls other witnesses. The first of these is our subject today. (i) Christ's Witness to Himself (19-29). The Jews had just questioned the right of Jesus to heal on the Sabbath, and challenged His claim to be equal with God (10, 18). In reply, He declares, first, the ground of His authority and claim (19, 20), and then, the extent of it (21-29). You will observe that here a more profound note is struck than we have heard before: these are the "heavenly things" of 3:12. There is no room in this discourse for Unitarianism. The Father and the Son are One, and They share Their powers and honours; albeit, providentially and dispensationally, the Son is subject to the Father (19-23). Read these verses again, with this sentence of exposition. The reality and solemnity of what Jesus says is intimated by the thrice repeated "Verily, verily" (19, 24, 25). In what follows (24-29), Christ claims to be two things, Life-giver and Judge. Vs. 24 is another of the verses which Luther called "little Bibles", that is, verses which contain the whole Gospel (cf. 3:16; Isa. 45:21). How momentous is the revelation of Christ Himself, and of the Future, in these verses! He is the Son of God (25), and the Son of Man also (27), and it is as the God-Man that He will judge the world. Both the saved and the unsaved are to be resurrected and judged, and destiny will be determined by character (28, 29). Do not imagine that it does not matter how you live and die. Our age is as sceptical of coming Judgment as was Noah's age, but it came then, and will come again. Ask yourself two questions: "What do I think of Christ?" "What does Christ think of me?"

Today's Thought: Because God Is Just, a Judgment Day Is Certain.

"BY A WAY THAT THEY KNEW NOT!"

There was a time when men thought that unless sight could be restored to the blind, there was no service to be rendered them—no emotion but pity to be spent upon them. Our Lord's action in restoring physical sight to Bartimaeus was emphasized far more than the spiritual awakening which accompanied it.

In the twentieth century social organizations, made up of philanthropic and far-sighted men and women, have undertaken to better conditions by educating the blind so they may be able to take their places in the industrial and professional world; much has been accomplished toward attaining this desirable goal, our Jewish friends aiding materially with their service and money.

But, as laudable as these efforts are and as important as it is that those who are already bearing the burden of blindness be relieved of the additional burden of economic dependence, we must realize that there is something else—something of infinitely more value to the human soul. Education and economic independence are useful stepping-stones by which man may attain the end for which he was created, but they are not that end. The blind are neither more nor less spiritually minded than the sighted; they need the same means of grace; they are helped by the same sermons, personal contacts and great books. Because of their handicap, however, they are deprived of many of these means of spiritual growth. Especially is this true in the realm of books.

Only a small number of inspirational books, with the exception of the Bible, the Prayer Book and the Lutheran Catechism, have been published in Braille (embossed type for the blind). To help meet this need, the Braille Circulating Library, Y. M. C. A. Building, Richmond, Va., is circulating the books of James H. McConkey (in Revised Braille) among some 450 readers scattered all over our country, Canada, England, China, Austrialia and India. These books have been translated into eighteen different languages and have been the means of bringing thousands into the joy of consecration. To those who have read these messages in print, they need no recommendation.

The books may be borrowed by any applicant; there is no cost attached—not even that of postage. All expenses of the library are met by voluntary offerings from those who are interested in the work. The office work is done by volunteers from churches of various denominations. Their service is made joyous by the assurance of the comfort and inspiration the books are bringing into darkened lives. Last year 110 letters of appreciation were received from them.

A hundred years ago who would have thought that God would use this method of sending the light of His Word to those who sit in physical darkness? Truly these words of the prophet are being fulfilled today: "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not."

Said the robin to the sparrow:
"I should really like to know
Why these anxious human beings
Rush about worry so."
Said the sparrow to the robin:
"Friend, I think it must really be
That they have no Heavenly Father
Such as cares for you and me."

The Great Commission

WITH BISHOP CLEIGHTON IN MEXICO.

Bishop Creighton writes of his pleasure in his return to Mexico and in the share which he and Mrs. Creighton had in the ceremonies and functions attending the arrival of Ambassador Morrow. He writes also of visiting Hooker School and the House of the Holy Name:

"At Hooker School, Miss McBride, our director, showed us the wonderful improvements made during our absence. The old wooden stairway to the second floor, which gave our teachers so much concern and on which they were drenched during the rainy season ,has been replaced by a beautiful enclosed stairway on the front of our west patio. The patio has been plastered and made a playground for the children; an electric light has been installed so that they can play during the twilight and early evening hours. The dormitory at the head of the stairs has been made a recreation room for the younger pupils; two of the Mexican teachers' rooms have been turned into a new dormitory. The unfurnished portion of the main building facing the American teachers' quarters has been finished and made a music practice room. The Mexican teachers are now in the old music room. . . .

"At La Casa del Sagrado Nombre we found that the stairway to the patio above was beautifully decorated and the rooms hung in purple and white, every here and there were 'welcome' signs in English, and one reading, 'Welcome Home to Our Dear Bishop', and another, 'God Bless Our Bishop', made me swallow hard. The program was given by the Escuela Dominical of San Jose. There were many numbers and the climax was reached when the newly organized mandolin club played 'Home, Sweet Home'. They have been practicing the words in English and had intended to sing them, but were afraid to risk it. They want us to feel that their Mexico is our home. Many of the parents came in, and altogether it was a delightful affair, ending with tea in the school dining-room.

"On Sunday, November 6, I celebrated and preached at the cathedral at 11 o'clock. The Ambassador and Mrs. Morrow were present.

"At 6 P. M. Mrs. Creighton and I attended the Girls' Friendly service at San Jose. Our two branches, one from the Hooker School and one from La Casa del Sagrado Nombre, united to hold this service to synchronize with the service of the National Convention of the Girls' Friendly Society in Boston. Ours was in Spanish, of course. Mr. Orihuela preached. I sat in the chancel and gave the benediction. . . .

"On Sunday, November 13, as Mr. Nash was out of the Republic, taking the body of an American school teacher, who died in Pachuca, to the States, I went to Pachuca to take the service and had an opportunity to meet with the Sunday school. Nowhere can a finer, more reverent and attentive group of children be found."

THE REV. E. H. FORSTER ORDAINED IN SHANGHAI.

On December 21, St. Thomas' Day, in St. John's Pro-Cathedral, Shanghai, the Rev. Ernest H. Forster, B. A. (Princeton), was advanced to the priesthood. The sermon was preached by the Rev. B. L. Ancell, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. Pott, President of St. John's University.

Mr. Forster came to China in 1920, and as a layman taught for five years in Mahan School, Yangchow. In 1925 he returned to America, and after a course at the Philadelphia Divinity School, was ordained deacon and returned to China. He was in charge of Holy Trinity Chapel, Yangchow, until all of the missionaries were called out of that city in March, 1927. Since then he has resided at St. John's University, and has been teaching in the divinity schools now concentrated here, and performing other duties. The return of the missionaries to Yangchow in the near future begins to seem a possibility. Dr. Ancell, the senior missionary there, has had a communication from the Nanking Government, intimating that the military occupation of the mission premises may be discontinued after a few months more. The Officers' Training School, which has been billeted at Mahan School, numbers about eight hundred men—in quarters built for two hundred. These young officers will graduate in March, and it is hoped that possession of our premises may be then regained.

FAITH.

Mr. Editor:

The Presbyterian minister, Mr. Coffin, who has been invited by the Virginia Theological Seminary to lecture before them, after they had declined to permit me to send some great Bible scholar of national reputation and undoubted Christian faith, is quoted in the Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia, January 28, 1928, as saying:

"Faith in God is a risk just as love and friendship are risks, but it is one gloriously worth taking."

The whole paragraph in the Sunday-School Times reads as follows:

"Is there anything free from risks? Man says, 'No'. God says, 'Yes'. Which shall we believe? The Modernist believes man. The normal Christian believes God. It is a significant statement from Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, President of Union Theological Seminary, that well-known training school for ministers whose tragic teaching destroys faith in God: 'Faith in God is a risk just as love and friendship are risks, but it is one gloriously worth taking.' This is the logical, consistent, inevitable position of Modernism. For Modernism puts the subjective judgments and opinions of the individual man above the objective authority and revelation of the Word of God; and when man does that, he loses all possibility of assurance and conviction concerning the truths revealed by God. If, as Dr. Coffin states, 'faith in God is a risk', then the here and the hereafter are uncertainties concerning which we may hope for the best, but never know definitely in this life. The meaning of risk is 'hazard', chance of bad consequences, loss, exposure to mischance. Thus Modernism teaches that faith in God is a hazard; faith in God means taking the chance of bad consequences, loss, exposing ourselves to mischance. But that is just what faith in God is not. There is no risk or uncertainty as to the final outcome. Nor is there 'risk' of temporal loss or persecution to the believer; on the contrary, there is definite assurance of that, and assurance is not risk. Paul did not 'risk' losing all for Christ; he settled with finality the fact that he would lose all for Christ, as he declared: 'What things were gain to me (before I knew the unsearchable riches of Christ), those I counted loss for Christ: . . . for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ' (Phil. 3:7, 8). Having settled this, Paul could declare with praise and thanksgiving: 'I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day' (2 Tim. 1:12). We risk nothing when we trust God. We know that we have gained all that is worth while when we trust God. Risk is the result of unbelief. Knowledge is the reward of faith."

Mr. Berryman Green turns down my offer to send, free of cost to the Seminary, some great learned Bible scholar, partly on the ground that it would be a reflection on his present staff of teachers, as if they claimed to have a corner on Biblical knowledge and accepts Mr. Coffin.

What right has the Virginia Theological Seminary, under the present administration, to expect believers, in the inspiration of the Bible and men of unquestioned faith in God, to contribute further to the support of that institution? I deny most positively that there is any risk in faith in God, and Mr. Coffin must have been seeking some personal advertisement in putting forth such a statement. Choris de Pisteos adunaton enaristaesai.

THE SPORT BAY.

Mr. Editor:

I write these few lines in regards to the sports of the world. Especially about the sport bay in the nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine of New York City, conducted by the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of New York. The sacred building being used for the place of world sports; clean sports and games have their place in life and they are pleasing to God, but not in His house of worship. Jesus said, "And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand". Again,

"My house shall be called the house of prayer". Ye have made it a house of sports.

I have spoken to men about this. They think the Church is getting in the world very fast these last days.

I wish to extend to you many thanks for the article in the January 28 Churchman—Boy and Girl Scouts. I have shown it to many. They all say that is the truth. I hope others may copy from it.

Following letter received from Mr. Ellis for publication:

They Laughed.

Thank you on behalf of my people and our stake in the Church, dear Ellis, for your brave words in the Southern Churchman. I marvel that they were willing to print your letter, "editorial courtesy" being what it is. * * *

I was nothing less than appalled as I sat in N. O., as a deputy from this Diocese, at the conditions you so graphically describe. So far as I can recall, Rosewell Page was the only deputy from either of the Virginias who raised his voice definitely in opposition to those radical changes in the Prayer Book, and they laughed at him! * * *

Book Reviews

A CONCORDANCE TO THE ENGLISH POEMS OF GEORGE HERBERT: Compiled by Cameron Mann. Cloth, pp. 277. Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.

Dr. Mann, Bishop of Southern Florida, has during many years been preparing this concordance of the poems of George Herbert, made with special reference to the collected edition of the English works of the poet, edited by George Herbert Palmer, though servicable also with other editions.

It is of course a book with other editions of English poetry, and for the Poets' Corner in extensive libraries, or for the shelves of devout Churchmen of cultivated literary taste who have the leisure to enjoy the beauty and fragrance of this "box of spikenard poured in unappeasable love over One who has attended my life", as the poems have been characterized.

Herbert's poems, entrusted to a friend, and published shortly after his death in 1633 under the collective name of The Temple, consist of more than one hundred and fifty short religious poems. They are so sincere, so earnest, so practical that they were loved from the first. His is an every-day religion; he is not afraid to speak of simple needs and simple duties; as witness the homely, helpful stanza from his Elizir—

> A servant with this clause
> Makes drudgery divine:
> Who sweeps a room as for Thy laws,
> Makes that and th' action fine.

And so, these poems, so full of quaint conceits, at the same time breathe in a tender sunlit atmosphere of churchly devotion a Christianized common sense. As an English devotional classic they will reward the thorough study which this Concordance invites.

A SHORT PSYCHOLOGY OF RELIGION: By G. J. Jordan, D. D., Litt. D. Cloth, pp. 160, $1.50. Harper & Bros., New York.

The study of psychology is one of the dominant trends in the thought of today, and it is brought to bear in numberless books on many relationships of life. The modern teacher must be a student of psychology to deal with the problems of his pupils. The medical profession is more and more recognizing its prime importance in the treatment of disease. The ministers of the Church from the earliest days of Christendom, as they have studied under the great Teacher, have recognized the potency of psychological concepts in religion even before it became a developed science.

To any one interested in this field of thought, this inviting little book will come as a help and inspiration. The writer is thoroughly conversant with the recent research work, and at the same time is a devout Churchman and shows how it all leads up to a clearer vision of God and experience of Him in the individual life and in the corporate life of the Church.

Like the use of the sword of Goliath in the hands of David to cut off the Philistine's head, so the science of psychology, dreaded by many devout Christians, because of its associations with the sceptical philosophy of much so-called higher learning of the day, may also prove a trenchant weapon in the hands of the Church.

THE GREAT MAGDALENS: By the Rev. Hugh Francis Blunt, LL. D. Cloth, pp. 335, $2.25. The Macmillan Co., New York.

The stories of sixteen "Magdalens" who became penitents of the Roman Catholic Church are told by Dr. Blunt with graphic realism that will make the book popular perhaps for the average readers of the Church. But we question its moral or religious value for others. In too many instances the morbidness of the general theme is cloaked, like the sordidness of many modern movies, under a thin veneer of pious moralizing at a death-bed "in the odor of sanctity". Condonation of a life of lust and crime seems at times to be suggested by the satisfaction found in the profession of a belated repentance, as St. Paul puts it—a glorying in sin that grace may abound. And such repentances, like that of Ruth Snyder, are based upon a very uncertain benefit of doubt. Who can say whether they are actuated by a deeper motive than a cowardly fear of death and the hereafter at a time when the possibility of the old sinful life is no longer a matter of choice.

Protestant tourists visiting the Vatican often wonder whether the cause of religion is advanced by those gruesome paintings of Christian martyrs being disemboweled and done to death by other ghastly tortures. If public executions are now banned as crime-excitant rather than crime-deterrent, should not the visualizing by pictures or by vividly portrayed narrative the horrors of lust and abominable crime be also kept from the general public mind? Whether it be against the sensational yellow journalism of the day or the publication of such books as this under the guise of religious authorship, we trust that in time the general public taste will rise in condemnation. Fox's Book of Martyrs, once piously approved for general reading, has long since become repellant to taste of Protestant readers of normal background and culture.

OUR YEARS ARE AS A TALE THAT IS TOLD.

By B. A. M. Scahpiro.

The year is swiftly waning,
The summer days are past;
And life, brief life is speeding,
The end is nearing fast.

The ever-changing seasons
In silence come and go;
But Thou, Eternal Father,
No time or change cans't know.

O! pour Thy grace upon us,
That we may worthier be,
Each year that passes o'er us,
To dwell in Heaven with Thee.

Our barren hearts make fruitful
With every goodly grace,
That we Thy name may hallow,
And see, at last, Thy face.

DIOCESAN CONVENTIONS

NORTH TEXAS.

Extracts from the address of Rt. Rev. E. Cecil Seaman, D. D., to the Eighteenth Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of North Texas. Held in Abilene, Tex., January 15, 1928:

Altar Gifts—
- Paten at Big Spring.
- Alms basin and collection bags at Coleman.
- Vases at Stamford.

Property Improvements—
- Abilene Parish House, $6,000.
- Amarille Parish House, $37,000.
- Lubbock, moving and enlarging church, $2,500.
- Plainview, moving and repairing church, $1,400.
- Paving. Fourteen contracts.

An important matter of information which should be of general interest to every member of the Church is the status of Prayer Book Revision.

In England the Prayer Book was revised by the Convocation of Bishops and submitted in the form of an alternative book for approval of Parliament. The House of Lords approved; but when the revised book was considered by the House of Commons it was rejected.

It seems to many Americans that the House of Commons, representing as it does the masses of the people who through taxation and otherwise are the real support of the Church of England (even though many of them are nonconformists), detected in some of the proposed changes in the Prayer Book a tendency to repudiate the Protestant position of the Church of England and bring back into use some of the distinctly Roman doctrines and ceremonies which had been explicitly repudiated at the time of the Reformation.

The action of the House of Commons seems to leave as the only lawful Book of Common Prayer in England the book which has kept practically the same form since 1662.

Many of us in America think that our commission appointed to revise our Book of Common Prayer has disregarded the instructions of General Convention "that no proposition involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church shall be considered or reported upon by the Commission", and that no proposal to . . . change the name of the Church shall be referred to said Commission".

Many of us think that the alterations already adopted by two successive General Conventions cannot rightly be interpreted as expressing any change in the doctrinal position of our Church so long as the Thirty-nine Articles are printed in the same book, to serve somewhat as commentaries on the forms of Service.

But there are further alterations pending, notably in the Prayer for the Church Militant, and rubrics in the Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion, which would reflect a change in the Church's teaching against purgatory and transubstantiation.

Moreover, there is pending a further amendment that would omit from the Prayer Book and from the Constitution of General Convention the Thirty-nine Articles or any reference to them.

This would omit the definition of the visible Church as "a congregation of faithful men in which the pure Word of God is preached", and it would omit our Church's specific disclaimer of the Roman doctrines of purgatory, pardons, adoration of images and relics, invocation of saints, transubstantiation and celibacy of the clergy.

We believe that as the laity of the Church of England, represented in the House of Commons, objected to the proposed revisions of the English Prayer Book on the ground of their tending to put the Church of England under the influence of the power of the Church of Rome, so the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America will by all means possible seek at the General Convention to be held in October in Washington to prevent any further changes in our Prayer Book, and especially those changes which would tend to dim the National and Protestant nature of our Church and reflect the attitude of the Roman Church, spiritual or temporal.

Although the clerical and lay deputies from the Missionary Districts have no vote in the matter of amendments to the Prayer Book or the Constitution, yet I sincerely hope that the clergy and laity of this District will realize the seriousness of the nature of the pending alterations above referred to and do all in their power to help maintain the integrity of the doctrine, discipline and worship of our Church as we know her now in the Book of Common Prayer.

To the Committee on the State of the Church, I refer an inquiry as to how many of our churches and chapels in North Texas are anonymous, how many bear signs corresponding to the Book of Common Prayer and the Constitution of the Church, and are clearly marked: "Protestant Episcopal Church."

In these days of accurate labels and in this section where "Protestant" is the only term that means non-Roman, and when for many reasons people have a desire and a right to know whether our buildings are Roman or Protestant, it is of very great importance that our buildings themselves should answer the question.

Next Sunday is Social Service Sunday and I trust that Rev. Mr. Foreman will give us suggestions for its observance.

I sincerely hope that every clergy in the district will consider it in line with the purpose and spirit of the day to reiterate and emphasize the Church's emphatic teaching expressed in the Church Catechism: "My duty to my neighbor is to honor and obey the civil authority."

The civil authority is today very much dishonored and disobeyed in many respects, chiefly, perhaps, in the matter of murder, adultery, illegal liquor traffic and Sunday law violations.

Our Church is holding to the Ten Commandments and to the precepts and example of our blessed Lord, and in that part of our discipline known as "the duty to our neighbor", as well as in explicit pronouncements of General Convention stands with all good people for law enforcement, and there are many of our people who would be greatly heartened by frequent expressions of prophetic force and clearness from our clergy on these subjects: and there are strong forces of social righteousness and deep religious life which would be much more inclined to trust the doctrinal position of our Church if they were more often assured that the Protestant Episcopal Church is in sympathy with ideals and expressions of American Constitutional Government.

I believe that the Anti-Saloon League of America has been one of the most powerful champions of law and order this country has ever had, embracing as it does the militant element of the Christian Church. I believe the Eighteenth Amendment and the statutes based upon it have dealt mighty blows to organized lawlessness, as evidenced by the furious attacks against this organization and the laws it has fostered; and as a Bishop in the Church of God, I would be very proud and very happy if our Episcopal Church would raise its voice next Sunday in every pulpit in sympathy for the men and women and little children who have suffered sickness and poverty and shame at the hands of the victims of the organized liquor traffic even in the days of prohibition, but infinitely more in the days when the traffic was licensed; and I would be glad if in commisserating the sufferers we could with one mouth and one heart commend the national law, now eight years old, which has accomplished so much, I believe, toward saving America from the confusion which has come since the World War into Russia and China and Mexico.

Deputies to General Convention: Rev. Frank B. Eteson, Plainview; Mr. Thomas R. Smith, Colorado.

Alternates—Rev. Willis P. Gerhart, Abilene; Mr. W. W. Rix, Lubbock; Sec. Ven. Hall Pierce, Amarillo.

Rev. Harrison W. Foreman and Miss Laura Boyer, from New York, were speakers.

SOUTHERN FLORIDA.

Marked by the largest attendance in its history, of both clergy and lay delegates, and by united, harmonious purpose to further the work presented for its consideration, the sixth annual Convention of the Diocese of South Florida (the thirty-sixth since the Missionary Jurisdiction of Southern Florida was set apart), was held in the Cathedral Parish, Orlando, on January 24-26.

Bishop Mann, who presided at all sessions, expressed his hearty commendation of the work accomplished and of the fine spirit of cooperation manifested in all its undertakings, thus bespeaking determined advance in Church work, both within and without this Diocese.

Most welcome and helpful guests were the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., who presented the need of further work by the Church among students in our State colleges at Gainesville and Tallahassee; and the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., who gave a fervent, inspiring address on Evangelism and on the purpose and results thus far of the Bishops' Crusade, appealing to further consecrated effort individually to make Christ known to those we meet in daily life.

"We must not be simply receptacles, but channels through which God can reach others," said Bishop Darst. "I do not believe there was ever a time when men were more desperately anxious for the Gospel of Christ in all its beauty and fullness than now. We must learn what it means to be disciples of Jesus Christ and go out with Him to swing the world into paths which lead to God."

Bishop Mann's annual address gave the number of persons confirmed during 1927 as larger than in any preceding year, and mentioned especially the rapid growth made within that year by the Young People's Service League, which now has twenty-one organized Leagues, a membership of 934, and plans for large increase within the present year.

Bishop Wing's address noted growth and development, with the rebuilding of several churches which were destroyed or damaged by the hurricane of September, 1926, and the new buildings added at other points, especially the excellent parish house recently completed by Holy Cross Parish, Sanford (where church, parish house and rectory were all destroyed by fire some three years ago, a beautiful new church erected in 1926). Bishop Wing added earnest call to further work and growth, especially stressing zealous effort to meet all assessments.

Cordial greetings were telegraphed to four other Diocesan conventions in sessions at the same date (Dioceses of South Carolina, Upper South Carolina, Kentucky and Atlanta), and their greetings were returned.

Ven. James G. Glass, Secretary of this Diocese, and John W. Claussen, Treasurer, were unanimously re-elected, and Floyd L. Knight was reappointed Chancellor. The Standing Committee consists of Rev. G. I. Hiller, Rev. Willis G. Clark, Rev. Mortimer Glover, T. W. Bethea and J. M. C. Valentine.

Deputies to General Convention are Rev. F. A. Shore, Ven. James G. Glass, Rev. Willis G. Clark, Rev. Robert T. Phillips, clerical; John W. Claussen, J. M. C. Valentine, M. P. Cornwall and Floyd L. Knight, lay.

Alternates are Rev. G. I. Hiller, Very Rev. P. S. Gilman, Rev. W. B. Curtis, Rev. W. P. S. Lander, S. L. Lowry, Sr., B. F. Whitner, John W. Carter and W. G. Hankins.

Trustees of the University of the South are Ven. James G. Glass, Floyd L. Knight and J. M. C. Valentine.

The work and needs of the University of the South were ably presented by Archdeacon Glass.

A Commission on Evangelism was formed, consisting of the following members: Rev. William P. S. Lander, Very Rev. P. S. Gilman, Rev. Mortimer Glover, Rev. A. H. Beavin and Rev. E. A. Edwards.

A Commission on Student Work in the two State colleges consists of Rev. Willis G. Clark, Rev. G. I. Hiller, Randall Chase, John H. Carter and Arthur Lane.

Decision was made, on motion, to set aside a fund of $5,000 as a Diocesan church building fund.

Miss Hope Baskett, student worker in the Florida State College for Women at Tallahassee, told of our church work there; of 175 students belonging to our Church; of their student branch of the Woman's Auxiliary with a membership of eighty-five and an average attendance at meetings of seventy; of their Corporate Communion each second Sunday with average attendance of fifty, and of classes in Church courses each Sunday.

Rev. Melville Johnson, chaplain in the State University at Gainesville, described active work there, including three baptisms and six confirmed; also of the need for a chapel. Plans are under way for supplying this chapel; also for building a hall for our student work at Tallahassee.

Christian Social Service was strongly emphasized by addresses in a special service held for this purpose on the second night of convention, when Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, from New York, was the principal speaker.

Cordial invitation for the next convention was extended by Rev. F. A. Shore, of Fort Myers, and by Rev. Mortimer Glover, of Sanford, Fort Myers being chosen, the date to be the fourth Tuesday in January, 1929.

Bishop Wing voiced for himself and for the convention heartfelt tribute to Bishop Mann in his great work for this Diocese, and a unanimous rising vote of deep appreciation was given.

Hearing that Mrs. Mann had resigned as Diocesan President of the Church Service League (their annual meeting then in session), the convention extended a rising vote of appreciation for Mrs. Mann's efficient work through many years in that office.

C. R.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Church, addressed the Convention of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina on the evening of January 24, 1928. He pointed out the fact that of the $1,404,000 which was attempted at New Orleans to meet the national deficit, only $26,000 remains to be paid or guaranteed. The "pay-as-you-go" plan has worked well, he said, up to the present time. But prospects for 1928 are not so hopeful. There is a prospect of having to reduce the appropriation in the domestic field by 10 per cent. He thanked Upper South Carolina for having paid last year $2,000 more than had been pledged, and for pledging the full quota for 1928. He urged that at next General Convention a definite step should be taken toward meeting the advance program of the Church.

In speaking of the work of the Church in the field, Dr. Franklin praised the splendid work which Bishop Creighton is doing in Mexico, and spoke of the encouraging prospects for China in the face of difficulties.

The reports which were made during the two days of the Convention manifested a better financial condition and a more optimistic outlook for the work than has existed for some years.

At the lunch hour six boys, students at Voorhees Industrial School for Negroes, Denmark, S. C., sang negro spirituals for the Convention. Afterward Dr. J. D. Blanton, principal of the school, spoke of the work and ideals of the school. In speaking of the singing he said at Voorhees they are trying to preserve the songs and spirituals just as they were sung on the plantations during slavery times. He said that in all the training the school tries to fit the negro youth for useful service for the race and for humanity.

The Advent Offering, which in past years has been collected during Advent and presented at Epiphany, was directed to be presented the second Sunday in December, having been collected during the period beginning the first Sunday in November. This offering goes for Diocesan missions.

The elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee of the Diocese—Rev. A. R. Mitchell, Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Rev. M. S. Taylor, Rev. H. D. Phillips, D. D., Rev. L. N. Taylor, J. Nelson Frierson, F. P. Henderson, James S. Middleton, B. H. Boykin, Sr., W. B. Moore, Jr.

Trustees of the Church Home Orphanage—Rev. M. S. Taylor, Rev. I. deL. Brayshaw, Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Carl Hart, W. B. Moore, Sr., R. I. Manning, M. C. Heath.

Trustees of the University of the South—Rev. T. P. Noe, Dr. LeGrand Guerry, William M. Barnwell.

Trustee of the Diocese (in place of Judge W. W. Johnson, deceased)—E. R. Heyward.

Trustees of Voorhees Industrial School—Rev. H. D. Phillips, D. D., Rev. G. C. Williams, Rev. J. B. Elliott, B. H. Boykin, Sr., R. I. Manning, W. B. Moore, Sr., Mrs. James R. Cain, Mrs. Joseph E. Hart, John Ramey.

Trustees of St. Mary's School, Raleigh—Rev. William Johnson, J. N. Frierson, Edmund R. Heyward.

Deputies to the General Convention—Rev. H. D. Phillips, D. D., Rev. T. T. Walsh, D. D., Rev. M. S. Taylor, Rev. A. R. Mitchell, R. I. Manning, W. B. Moore, Sr., W. F. Robertson, Christie Benet.

Alternate Deputies to the General Convention—Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Rev. G. C. Williams, Rev. I. deL. Brayshaw, Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, J. S. Middleton, W. M. Barnwell, Dr. W. W. Long, Dr. G. C. Stuart.

Following are the departments of the Executive Council of the Diocese:

Missions—Rev. A. R. Mitchell (chairman), Rev. T. T. Walsh, D. D., J. S. Middleton, J. W. Arrington, Jr.

Field—Rev. H. D. Phillips, D. D. (chairman); the chairmen of the other departments

Finance—Hon. R. I. Manning (chairman), Rev. H. D. Phillips, D. D., Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, E. R. Heyward, W. B. Moore, W. S. Manning.

Religious Education—Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton (chairman), Rev. M. S. Taylor, Rev. I. deL. Brayshaw, Mrs. Alexander Long.

Christian Social Service—Mrs. James R. Cain (chairman), Rev. M. S. Taylor, Mrs. Joseph E. Hart.

Publicity—Rev. I. deL. Brayshaw (chairman), Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, James S. Middleton, Dr. T. C. Stone.

The seventh annual Convention of the Diocese will meet in Christ Church, Greenville, on the fourth Tuesday, being the twenty-second day of January, 1929.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

The most memorable event in connection with the fifty-fourth annual convention of the Diocese of Southern Ohio was the presence of the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, and Mrs. Murray. The attendance was one of the largest in the history of the diocese. Bishop Murray was presented to the convention during the session of Wednesday afternoon just after his arrival in Dayton. He was the preacher at the inspirational service which closed the convention Wednesday evening.

The Rt. Rev. Walter H. Overs was also present at the convention as the representative of the National Field Department and addressed a mass meeting Wednesday morning, speaking of his experiences while Missionary Bishop of Liberia, and of the plans and problems of the National Council in connection with the new triennium opening in 1929.

The Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, Executive Secretary of the Department of Social Service of the National Council, was an unexpected but cordially welcomed guest and addressed the delegates at the conclusion of the fellowship dinner on Tuesday night.

After the adoption of the many amendments at the previous convention in connection with the establishment of suffrage there was very little legislation of a canonical nature.

There were only five of the congregations of the diocese which did not return women on their delegations and in actual attendance the women among the lay delegates slightly outnumbered the men. There were ninety of the former and seventy-nine of the latter.

Only three of the clergy canonically resident were absent. Forty-six out of fifty-five parishes were represented by lay delegates and seventeen out of twenty-four missions.

In connection with the addresses of Bishop Vincent and Bishop Reese, the convention stood to pay tribute to the memory of the notable Church members whose deaths were recorded, the list containing as it did the names of the lay deputies who had represented the diocese at the last eGneral Convention in New Orleans, viz.: Judge Daniel H. Sowers, Mr. Mortimer Matthews and Mr. Wilfred O. Frohock.

Much interest was occasioned by that portion of the address of Bishop Reese which had to do with his change of residence from Columbus to Cincinnati, together with the removal of the diocesan offices and the staff. The convention authorized an appropriation for the moving expenses and also approved the expenditure of $5,000 upon the remodeling of the Bishop's House on Mount Auburn, converting it into the Diocesan House.

Bishop Reese closed his address with an appeal in behalf of the advance work of the diocese, challenging the Church in the diocese to recognize a greater responsibility and to aspire to greater achievements than the mere payment of the current expense budget of the diocese and the national quota. The appeal took the definite form of a proposal to wipe out sixty thousand dollars in mortgages incurred in building mission churches and the raising of fifteen thousand dollars additional annually for the next five years for new work. His address closed with a stirring spiritual justification for this appeal for funds.

The amended resolutions providing for the sale of the Cathedral and old Diocesan House properties were adopted and now return to the trustees of the Cathedral for their approval.

St. Philip's Mission, Columbus, was admitted into union with the convention as the first Negro parish, and the Rev. Herbert Smith, who has been minister-in-charge for the past ten years and who now becomes the parish's first rector, received the congratulations of the convention.

The Field Department of the diocese reported that the pledges secured in the last Every Member Canvass registered a small advance over the year before and also reported that for the second consecutive year the diocese had been able to pay its national quota of $66,600 in full. Following this report the convention adopted a somewhat smaller mission budget for itself for 1928 and provided for the payment of the national quota in full for the current year.

The elections resulted as follows:

Trustees of the Diocese—E. W. Strong and Charles G. Jones, Jr.

Trustee of the Church Foundation—John H. Summers.

Treasurer of the Diocese—Wm. H. Albery.

Registrar—The Rev. J. D. Herron.

Secretary—The Ven. B. H. Reinheimer.

Assistant Secretary—Stuart Miller.

Membership in the Bishop and Chapter (Bishop and Council)—The Rev. Messrs. Frank H. Nelson, Charles G. Reade, A. N. Slayton and Gilbert P. Symons; Messrs. Walter A. Draper, J. B. McGrew, John M. Richardson, Oscar E. Rupp, George E. Wood and Henry R. Mather.

The Standing Committee—The Rev. Messrs. Frank H. Nelson, E. F. Chauncey and A. N. Slayton; Messrs. Morrison R. Waite, Wm. R. Collins and E. W. Campion.

Deputies to General Convention: Clerical—Frank H. Nelson, Charles E. Byrer, B. H. Reinheimer and E. F. Chauncey; lay—Wm. C. Proctor, F. C. Hicks, Robert Patterson and F. O. Schoedinger. Alternate Deputies to General Convention: Clerical—Gilbert P. Symons, S. E. Sweet, J. H. Lynch and Maurice Clarke; lay—J. B. Cartmell, John M. Richardson, Wm. T. Mauder and Austin P. Story.

The next convention will meet at the Church of the Advent, Cincinnati, January 29-30, 1929.

ARIZONA.

"The times call for straight-out, uncompromising preaching and person to person work on the part of the clergy along the line of obedience to the law," stated Bishop Mitchell in his opening address of the thirty-sixth annual convocation of the District of Arizona held at St. Stephen's Church, Douglas, Arizona, the week of January 22.

"It seems as clear as day to me that the father who sets an example in lawlessness to his children by buying bootleg liquor, or the other who sets an example in lawlessness to her children by gambling at cards, must have very much less sense than is necessary to get around the streets in these days, if they think they can by words overcome the power of their examples and have children who will have the slightest reverence for any law which those children feel may stand in the way of what they want to do."

The Bishop also stressed the necessity for careful prepaartion for candidates for confirmation, the family life, marriage and divorce, and gave an account of the proposed new type of work among the Navajo Indians at Fort Defiance, which will include welfare work, education, and perhaps a boarding school under the direction of the superintendent, Miss Anne Cady, combined with definite religious work for the Indians under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Hagearty, who has recently entered this field.

The convocation was declared by all to have set a record not only in the number of attendance, but also in the general interest.

The speakers for the two evening meetings were Miss Mabel L. Cooper of the Department of Religious Education; Miss Mary Sanford, Field Secretary for the Eighth Province of the Girls' Friendly Society, and Mrs. Eleanor porcher, Educational Secretary of the Women's Auxiliary of the District of New Mexico, the first night, and the Rev. W. H. Foreman, of New York, who spoke on rural work, the second night.

In addition to the routine meeting of the convocation, the Women's Auxiliary of the District and the Girls' Friendly Society held separate meetings with reports and plans for their work. The joint meeting of the convocation and these two groups was held Thursday when the various institutions of the District reported and the diocesan missionaries told of the work in their respective fields. Elections resulted as follows:

Clerical deputy to the General Convention, Dean Edwin S. Lane, of Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, and Dr. H. B. Leonard, of Tucson, lay delegate. The alternates are the Rev. B. R. Cocks and Mr. Harold Baxter, of Phoenix.

Clerical delegates to the Synod of the Province of the Pacific to be held at Salt Lake City in May: the Rev. E. C. Tuthill, Tucson; the Rev. E. W. Simonson, Douglas; the Ven. J. R. Jenkins, Phoenix. The alternates for this service are: the Rev. J. L. Patton, Mesa, and the Rev. F. C. Taylor, Nogales. The lay delegates to the Synod are: C. H. McKellips, Phoenix; Ralph L. Motz, Bisbee; V. O. Wallingford, Phoenix. Alternates are: Francis D. Crable, Prescott; Exan Douglas, Prescott, and C. W. Richardson, Tucson.

In the reelection of the Rev. Canon Cocks to the position of secretary, it conferred that honor upon him for the nineteenth consecutive time. He is the second oldest member of the priesthood in Arizona in point of service, being exceeded in length of service here only by the Rev. E. W. Simonson, of Douglas.

To the executive council the following were elected: Bishop Mitchell, Archdeacon Jenkins, Secretary Cocks, Chancellor LeBoutillier; and the Rev. W. J. Dixon, Yuma; the Rev. A. W. Nicholls, Prescott; the Rev. E. W. Simonson, Douglas; the Very Rev. E. S. Lane, Phoenix; the Rev. E. C. Tuthill, Tucson; the Rev. W. E. Cox, Bisbee; E. C. Clark, Tucson; Dr. H. B. Leonard, Tucson; L. F. Brady, Mesa; Ralph Motz, Bisbee, and Harold Baxter, Phoenix.

MICHIGAN.

Cutting down expenses to meet an increasing annual deficit was the course recommended to the executive council by the ninety-fifth annual convention of this diocese, in session at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, February 1 and 2. The average receipts for diocesan purposes in the last eight years have been $165,000. The budget last year was $204,000. After long discussion a motion prevailed to setting a limit of $187,000 on the expenditure for 1928, and the council was instructed to keep its expenditure within its receipts. Part of the financial problem of the diocese arose from overstrain after raising during 1927 an endowment fund of $725,000, which in time will be increased to $1,000,000. That the diocese is in a condition of healthy growth was evident from the reports of the Bishop and the Departments of Religious Education and Missions. Bishop Page reported 1,769 persons confirmed and a gain of 1,800 in the Church Schools of the diocese. The pressing need for Episcopal assistance will be met this year by Bishop Fox, of Montana, coming to confirm in the Detroit parishes. The convention commended Canons XV and XVI of the diocese in the direction of giving more freedom and authority to the executive council. A motion memorializing the General Convention to retain Article XXVIII was carried by a large majority, without discussion. Two new parishioners were admitted to union with the convention: Christ Church, Cranbrook, and Trinity Church, West Branch.

The following officers were elected: Standing Committee, the Rev. W. D. Maxon, the Rev. S. S. Marquis, the Rev. A. S. Gill, the Rev. R. W. Woodroofe, Prof. G. W. Patterson, Mr. Sidney T. Miller, Mr. Dudley W. Smith. Alternates: the Rev. Henry Lewis, the Rev. L. P. Hagger, Mr. John C. Spaulding. Delegates to Synod of Province of Mid-West: the Rev. F. B. Creamer, the Rev. R. D. Malany, the Rev. E. W. Daniel, the Rev. C. C. Purton, Mr. James H. McDonald, Mr. Wm. C. Conover, Mr. F. E. Piper, Mr. John B. Howarth. Deputies to General Convention: the Rev. W. D. Maxon, the Rev. S. S. Marquis, the Rev. A. S. Gill, the Rev. R. W. Woodroofe, Mr. R. McClelland Brady, Mr. Charles B. Warren, Mr. Charles R. Wells, Mr. Wm. T. Barbour. Alternates: the Rev. John Dysart, the Very Rev. Herbert L. Johnson, the Rev. Robert B. Kimber, the Rev. Henry Lewis, Mr. H. J. M. Grylls, Mr. George T. Hendrie, Mr. Fenton R. McCreery, Mr. F. C. Gilbert, Mr. Dudley W. Smith.

Executive Council (for three years):—the Rev. A. S. Gill, the Rev. W. D. Maxon, the Rev. R. W. Woodroofe, Mr. Lewis H. Paddock, Mr. Frank H. Weber, Mr. C. H. Wells, for two years, the Very Rev. H. L. Johnson, Mr. R. McClelland Brady, Mr. Arthur G. Fittelkow, the Rev. John Dysart; for one year, the Rev. R. B. Kimber, Mr. Henry Otis, the Rev. A. E. DuPlan, the Rev. Henry Lewis, Mr. A. B. C. Hardy, Mr. George T. Hendrie. Secretary of Convention, C. O. Ford; Assistant, A. M. McEvoy.

LOUISIANA.

The outstanding achievement of the ninetieth annual session of the Council of the Diocese of Louisiana was in the field of Religious Education. The opening sermon upon the subject, "The Educational Program of the Church", delivered by the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., rector of St. Matthew's, Houma, La., and Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee, sounded the keynote of the Council. Pledges from the parishes and missions of the Diocese, amounting to $12,500 were received toward the erection of the first unit of the Episcopal Student Centre at Baton Rouge the Rev. M. W. Lockhart, rector. This amount, together with the cash and pledges already in the hands of the committee, of which the Rev. Robert S. Coupland, D. D., is chairman, will make possible the beginning of the work at an early date.

There was an inspirational service on Tuesday evening, preceding the Council, with an address by the Rev. M. W. Lockhart, of Baton Rouge, on Work Among College Students, and his talk was supplemented by a very interesting statement by Mr. Hereford Percy, a Senior member of the Law School of L. S. U., who emphasized the importance of the Church's work among the young men and young women at the University. There was also an address by the Rev. C. B. K. Weed on Work in City Institutions, and Mr. Warren Kearny read the annual report of the Nation-Wide Campaign Committee.

After considerable debate, a resolution on Prayer Book revision, offered by the Rev. C. L. Monroe, of New Orleans, to the effect that "there is no good and sufficient reason for removing the Thirty-nine Articles from the Book of Common Prayer", was adopted by a large majority.

Bishop Sessums, in his annual address, gave a general summary of the activities of the Diocese during the past year. With regard to the recent flood, he expressed sympathy for those afflicted and distressed, and appreciation of the interest and services of the United States Government, and of the splendid work done by the Red Cross. He also expressed the deep gratitude of this Diocese for the assistance which had reached the flood sufferers through the appeal of the Presiding Bishop and of the editor of The Living Church; and he expressed the earnest hope that ways and means will be found to prevent these disasters in the future, and also that the people of this and neighboring States will not only be spared from affliction and loss, but may be relieved of the burden so long borne of protection and prevention.

The Rev. G. L. Tucker, D. D., gave the welcome news that the Diocese had paid in full its pledge for the Sewanee Endowment Fund, started in 1917. This pledge was originally $65,000 and was reduced to $21,000 in 1922, and has now been finally paid.

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education, through Dr. G. L. Tucker, Mrs. W. C. Goodfellow and Mrs. Cooper Nelson, presented a report of the work of the Board in the Diocese.

The conference on the Church's Program was informal, information being given as to how the quotas were determined, the payments thereon, etc Mr. Warren Kearny, in his report, made a plea for a truer conception of the meaning of membership in the Church, stating that, if this membership is properly understood and valued, the interest of our people in Church activities would be considerably augmented.

The Board of Missions, through Mr. R. P. Mead, gave a detailed statement of the missionary activities in the Diocese. The Rev. C. B. K. Weed spoke of his work as City Missionary, and also presented the report of the Committee on Christian Social Service. The Rev. Donald H. Wattley read the report of the Committee on the State of the Church.

The Standing Committee was re-elected, as were most of the other Diocesan officers. The following were elected as Clerical Delegates to General Convention: Rev. Robert S. Coupland, D. D., Rev. S. L. Vail, Rev. W. S. Slack, Rev. M. W. Lockhart. Lay Delegates: Mr. Warren Kearny, Mr. R. P. Mead, Mr. George W. Law, Hon. J. Zach Spearing. Clerical Alternates: Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., Rev. Edward McCrady. D. D., Rev. C. L. Monroe, Rev. William Hamilton Nes. Lay Alternates: Mr. E. G. Palmer, Mr. F. H. G. Fry, Colonel A. T. Prescott, Mr. J. W. Soady.

Among those newly elected to boards and committees were: Colonel A. T. Prescott, Board of Missions for Central Louisiana; Rev. C. L. Monroe and Mr. Reginald Oliver, Board of Religious Education; Mr. E. L. Gladney, trustee to the University of the South.

The Rev. Matthew Brewster, D. D., of New Orleans, speaking for the Council, paid high tribute to Bishop Sessums, who is now entering his thirty-seventh year of active service since his consecration. Dr. Brewster spoke of the faithful, loyal and efficient service Bishop Sessums has given the Diocese of Louisiana, pledging to him for the future the affection and loyalty of the clergy and laity of this Diocese.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Reorganization of Chatham Hall and the status of the rural work in the Diocese were the main questions before the Council of Southern Virginia, which met in Newport News, Va., January 24 and 25.

Bishop Tucker, in his Council address, spoke of the Lausanne conference in these words: "That representatives of the various branches of the churches should meet together and consider their divergences and aim to reduce them to a minimum was in itself a forward step towards Christian unity. We may differ in our theology, it has been so always, but we only have the spirit of our Lord when we can say from the heart, 'Grace be with all those who love Jesus Christ in sincerity'. May faith abide in the eternal God as revealed in Christ. May hope abide, hope in the life everlasting, purchased by the cross, and made certain by the resurrection and the ascension of the Christ into glory. But above all, may love also abide, for that we share with God. God has no need of faith; He is the source and object of faith. God has no need of hope. In Him is found the fulfilment of all the possibilities of humanity, the realization of all the dreams of happiness and rest, of glory and of the peace which passeth understanding. But God is love, and we are sharers, through Christ, of His divine nature. 'And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity', which is love."

The Bishop asked for stronger cooperation in the work of the Church's Program, and made the following eloquent plea: "The work of the Church, in the Diocese and throughout the world, is jeopardized by the failure of our people to realize the inestimable riches of Christ to them. Unless there be a larger response to the appeal of the Church, we shall have this year to curtail the work among both the white and colored churches in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. We will have to say to some of the missionaries whom we have sent from our Diocese to labor for Christ in China, in Japan, in Africa, in South America, in the Isles of the Sea, we can no longer take part in your work. The Christ stands not saying, 'Pay your apportionment', but 'Come over and help Me'."

The Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, in a brief address outlined the work being accomplished in the nine districts of the Diocese. He emphasized the part played by the Rev. J. Keith M. Lee, pastor of St. Paul's Church, and the Rev. Harvey A. Cox, of Grace Church, in establishing churches at Hilton Village and Phoebus. He also stressed the accomplishments during the past year of Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin and the Rev. John B. Bentley, of Williamsburg.

The Rev. Edmund J. Lee, of Ankin, China, addressed the Council on the work in China. He declared that the present situation in China is more encouraging than it has been for some time. The Church, he said, had been purified by persecution and strengthened by its patient forbearance under its trials. He concluded his remarks with the declaration that the missionaries must return as integral members of the Chinese church, and not as "guests", adding that they should also waive, as far as possible, their right to military protection, "going to China under the shadow of the cross and not under the shadow of the gunboat".

In addition to the Rev. Mr. Lee, the guests of the Council were the Rev. E. N. Schmuck, D. D., representing the Field Department of the National Council, and the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, who spoke most earnestly on the "Missions of the East".

The Council appointed a committee to make a careful study of the rural work in Southern Virginia, and to submit a report to the next Council.

A full discussion of the policy regarding Chatham Hall, the Diocesan School for Girls, was held during an executive session of the Council, after which resolutions were adopted authorizing the Board of Trustees to borrow $50,000 for the present need of the institution, and to assure the patrons of the determination of the Board to conduct the school on lines conforming to the cherished ideals and convictions of Virginia people. The people of the Diocese and the general public were asked to continue their support of the school.

On the recommendation of Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, reporting for the Committee on New Parishes, the Council accepted Christ Church of Petersburg. Following this, the election of officers for the year was held, with the following offices filled by unanimous vote:

Secretary—Rev. William A. Brown, D. D.

Chancellor—Colonel James Mann.

Historiographer—Miss Mary Goodwin.

Treasurer—Colonel William W. Old, Jr.

Standing Committee—Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., Rev. Newton Middleton, Rev. Charles H. Holmead, Messrs. C. W. Grandy, E. W. Maupin and F. W. Darling.

The following deputies to the General Convention were chosen:

Clerical—The Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., Portsmouth; the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., Norfolk; the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D., Williamsburg, and the Rev. Charles E. Stewart, Powhatan.

Lay—Colonel W. W. Old, Jr., Colonel James Mann, Messrs. T. W. Mathews and F. W. Darling.

Alternates: Clerical—The Rev. D. W. Howard, D. D., Norfolk; the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., Petersburg; the Rev. Newton Middleton, Norfolk, and the Rev. E. Ruffin James, Norfolk.

Lay—Messrs. W. C. L. Taliaferro, C. W. Grandy, G. B. Townsend and J. C. Nelms, Jr.

Members elected to the Executive Board were as follows:

Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., Petersburg; Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., Norfolk; Rev. H. N. Laws, Onancock; Rev. J. K. M. Lee, Newport News; Rev. M. B. Marshall, Halifax; Rev. Newton Middleton, Norfolk; Rev. T. C. Page, South Boston; Rev. Thomas Semmes, South Richmond; Rev. N. E. Wicker, Jr., Danville; Messrs. H. H. Edmunds, Halifax; C. J. Faulkner, Jr., Chase City; T. S. Garnett, Jr., Norfolk; Colonel James Mann, Norfolk; Messrs. G. G. McCann, Franklin; E. B. Meade, Danville; J. C. Nelms, Jr., Norfolk; Ivor A. Page, Norfolk, and W. C. L. Taliaferro, Hampton.

The Council was very deeply impressed with the remarkable vigor with which Bishop Tucker presided over the meetings. Although in his eighty-second year, the Bishop remained in the chair throughout the entire session and dispatched the affairs of Council with an ease that few parliamentarians could surpass.

Mr. T. W. Mathews, Treasurer of the Church's Program in Southern Virginia since the inauguration of the Nation-Wide Campaign, was unanimously re-elected by the Executive Board.

The Rev. W. D. Howard, D. D., rector of St. Luke's, Norfolk, Va., has retired from the office of Secretary-Treasurer of the Diocesan Committee on Missions, which position he has held for ten years. The committee elected to succeed Dr. Howard, the Rev. Norman E. Taylor, Executive Secretary, whose address is Diocesan Office, 519 Law Building, Norfolk, Va.

20,000 Churchmen to Attend Parley.

The following we reprint from the Washington Star:

With the Triennial Convention of the Episcopal Church still eight months distant, committees of the convention already have begun laying plans for the entertainment of the 20,000 visiting bishops, officials, ministers and laymen expected to attend. The convention will open here October 10 and will continue through October 27.

The convention, the supreme law-making body of the Episcopal Church, is composed of two bodies, the House of Bishops and the House of Delegates. All matters of Church law, including revisions of the Prayer Book, come before these bodies. The House of Bishops is composed of 150 members, and the House of Delegates has 638 members.

Following a meeting at the Episcopal Church Office, 1329 K Street, it was announced that preliminary plans for the entertainment of the delegates, the convention program and financial arrangements have already been made and further meetings of committees are expected to have them in shape long before the convention assembles.

Other Organizations to Meet.

In addition to the general convention, there will be meetings of many other organizations of the Church, including the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Society of the Nazarene and its auxiliary, the Daughters of the King, the Girls' Friendly Society and the Church Periodical Club. These conventions, with the great number of visitors, expected to attend the opening service will bring the attendance on the opening date to about 20,000, it is estimated. About 4,000 are expected to be here throughout the convention.

The committee, under the chairmanship of Eugene E. Thompson, will shortly begin work on a campaign to raise the funds necessary to defray the cost of entertainment. These have been estimated at $50,000.

Special rates on all railroads have been secured by the Transportation Committee, of which Merritt O. Chance is chairman. These rates will apply throughout the three weeks of the meeting.

The Triennial Conventions were organized in 1784 and have been held every three years since, with the exception of 1798, when the convention was postponed for a year on account of an epidemic. The last meeting was in New Orleans in 1925, at which time the 1928 convention was secured for Washington.

Headquarters of the convention will be at the Willard Hotel. The small ball-room on the tenth floor will be used for the meetings of the House of Bishops, and the House of Delegates will meet in Memorial Continental Hall. The mass meetings, of which there will be five or six, will be held in the Washington Auditorium and the meetings of the various church organizations will be held in downtown churches and parish halls. The opening session will be held either in the Washington Auditorium or at the Cathedral.

Dr. Freeman Honorary President.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, is honorary president of the convention, and Admiral Cary T. Grayson is general chairman. H. L. Rust is treasurer and Hugh T. Nelson secretary.

Committee chairmen are: Finance, Eugene E. Thompson; Halls, Exhibits and Music, Rev. Z. B. Phillips; Hotels and Hospitality, H. K. Boss; Registration, Rev. George F. Dudley; Ministerial Supply, Rev. Robert Johnston; Services, Rev. Charles T. Warner; Entertainments and Pageants, Rev. George W. Atkinson; Luncheons, Dr. L. W. Glazebrook; Transportation, M. O. Chance; Publicity, Newbold Noyes; Reception, A. C. Houghton; Handbook of the Convention, Rev. H. H. D. Sterrett.

Preaching Mission.

The Rev. Canon Frederick E. Howitt, of Hamilton, Canada, is in Richmond to conduct a preaching mission February 12-19. Canon Howitt will preach every evening during the mission at Christ Church, Rev. Pembroke Reed, rector. He will give Bible lectures every afternoon at 5 o'clock at All Saints' Church, Rev. J. Y. Downman, D. D., rector.

Regional Conference on Faith and Order.

The Continuation Committee of the World Conference on Faith and Order held at Lausanne, Switzerland, August, 1927, is arranging to hold a number of Regional Conferences in various sections of the country. It is the aim of these conferences to give to the ministry and laity of the various churches an opportunity to hear from delegates to the Lausanne Conference a report of the work done by that body. In addition thereto, it is planned to have round-table and general discussions on various topics pertaining to the work of the Lausanne Conference, and matters pertaining to Christian Cooperation and Fellowship. There will be present at the Richmond Conference a number of the official delegates to the Lausanne Conference, representing several of the principal denominations participating therein.

The Local Committee of Arrangements, representing the Richmond churches, is sending out an invitation to the ministers of Virginia to attend this conference and to participate in its work. It is hoped that the attendance will be such as the importance of the gathering warrants.

The letter of invitation is given in full.

Text of Letter.

Dear Brother:

You are cordially invited to attend a conference to be held in the City of Richmond under the direction of the Continuation Committee of the World Conference on Faith and Order, which was held at Lausanne, Switzerland, in August, 1927. This conference will be held at St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, corner Ninth and Grace Streets, Richmond, on February 22 and 23.

The conference will begin with an opening sermon by Bishop H. St. George Tucker at 11 A. M. on Wednesday, the twenty-second. There will be afternoon and evening sessions on Wednesday, and morning, afternoon and evening sessions on Thursday.

Addresses will be delivered on various phases of the Lausanne Conference, principally by official delegates in attendance upon that conference, of whom the following have definitely agreed to speak: Drs. Wm. Adams Brown, Frederick Lynch, Robt. A. Ashworth, W. Cosby Bell, Edward D. Soper, John M. Moore, Ernest T. Thompson, and Bishops W. F. McDowell and James Cannon, Jr. In addition to these addresses, there will be ample opportunity for open conference and round-table discussions at the morning and afternoon sessions, at which time there may be brought forward for discussion any matters pertaining to Christian Cooperation and Fellowship in carrying on the work of the Church of God. ### Collect for Quinquagesima Sunday.

O Lord, Who hast taught us that all our doings without charity are nothing worth; send Thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of all virtues, without which whatsoever of all victues, without which whatsoever liveth is counted dead before Thee. Grant this for Thine only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

Collect for Ash-Wednesday.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who hatest nothing that Thou hast made, and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent; create and make in us new and contrite hearts, that we, worthily lamenting our sins and acknowledging our wretchedness, may obtain of Thee the God of all mercy, perfect remission and forgiveness; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Collect for Matthias' Day.

O Almighty God, Who into the place of the traitor Judas didst choose Thy faithful servant Matthias to be of the number of the twelve apostles, grant that Thy Church, being always preserved from false apostles, may be ordered and guided by faithful and true pastors, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Come Ye Yourselves Apart.

Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile,
Weary, I know it, of the press and throng;
Wipe from your brow the sweat and dust of toil,
And in My quiet strength again be strong.

Come ye aside from all the world holds dear,
For converse which the world has never known.
Alone with Me, and with My Father here,
With Me and with My Father not alone

Come, tell me all that ye have said and done,
Your victories and failures, hopes and fears,
I know how hardly souls are wooed and won:
My choicest wreaths are always wet with tears.

Come ye and rest: the journey is too great,
And ye will faint beside the way and sink;
The Bread of Life is here for you to eat,
And here for you the Wine of Love to drink.

Then, fresh from converse with your Lord, return
And work till daylight softens into even;
The brief hours are not lost in which ye learn
More of your Master and His rest in heaven.

Apart With Christ.

In beautiful phrase Bengel speaks of being "upbuilt in the recollected consciousness of God". Consciousness of God! Is that possible? May we, immersed in the things of time and sense, know God as near, nearer than man can be to man? Is it not rather that we feel that God is a very long way off? May prayer be real intercourse, face to face, or is it as one has expressed it, "Often like conversation over a telephone wire of infinite length which gets out of order"?

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." That is the word of Jesus. How may we know that is true? "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," He said. The amazing revelation of Jesus is that in Him we know God, and knowing Him we share His consciousness of God.

This is wisdom learned only of Him. The conviction that God or some sort of a God is, is common to men. It is part of our human nature; but to find God, to know God, to realize God, that has been beyond any power of the mind of man. Plato speaks for the human mind at its highest when he says that "mind must seek Mind", and then adds, "but it is difficult". Only Jesus Christ made it possible for a St. John to say, "We know Him that is true, and are in Him that is true. This is the true God and eternal life".

St. John had long been with the Christ. Not only had he walked with Him in Galilee, been with Him in the upper room and at the Cross, but through long years of brooding thought in a communion nearer than he had known even in the upper room. He knew as St. Paul learned to know, "God in Christ". So we may know God, but only in a deep sense "apart with Christ".

How may that be? How is God in Christ now present to us? First of all, in the Gospels. The teaching of Jesus is projected into all time. And there is a deeper mystical sense of His presence and the power of His words. You may know it in the hour of quiet when the deeper need of the soul makes itself felt. Then He speaks as spirit to spirit. The mystic speaks for many when he says, "Jesus speaks, and speaks to me".

Jesus knew the disciples' need of the nearer fellowship when He said to them, "Come ye apart into a desert place, and rest awhile", and the evangelist adds, "for there were many coming and going".

Many coming and going. How true a picture of our modern daily life! There is little of the alone. We live in crowds, and in perpetual noise. The life of public daily life has for most people made the quiet hour rare, if not impossible. Even in our religion we emphasize work rather than prayer, forgetting that fervor must find sweetness and rigor of sincerity and emotion poise apart with God. It is the want of this that makes ineffective so much of our religious work. In consequence, what we create has much the quality of the noise in which it is conceived and wrought. The shallow in modern literature, the trifling in the social world, the passion of greed and the lust of war, the ineffective in religion—these are all of the noise.

It is, perhaps, true that in the past the emphasis has been too much upon personal religion. We needed to be made to realize the organic unity of mankind, but there is a very real danger in our putting the emphasis so wholly upon the social consciousness. The cult of the day in the religious world is that of the philanthropist, the charity organizer, or, perhaps, that of the social democrat. The reaction is not altogether wholesome. Personal religion may, indeed, be rooted in selfish desire which will make it utterly untrue to the religion of Jesus. Jesus offers no sterile quietism or spiritual epicureanism. Concentration upon self in religion may easily become mere dreamy mystical rhapsody, and degenerate into unethical and heartless selfishness. The Lord's call is a call to service and denial of self. But as in extreme reaction always, so in this balance may be lost. The personal soul lost to sight, religion ceases to have reality, for religion must be personal if religion at all, certainly if Christian. The fundamental facts of life make it so. Self is real. Self in its relation to other selves cannot be obliterated. The link is unbreakable. We know that at the last responsibility is our own. Personal religion is demanded by the sacredness of our personality and the reality of our moral freedom. The relation of self to God must be personal, certainly relation to the Christian's God. To ignore that in the name of religion is to play with life itself.

In our many activities we may easily forget God, and Lent is a call to a "recollected consciousness" of Him. To realize that we must be much with Christ who alone makes God known to us, and in whom we share that consciousness of God. The whole of the life which Christ reveals as the true and eternal life springs out of a vital relationship with Him, and is so maintained. To draw from Him the inspiration and power to live that life among men we need much to be apart with Him.

Lent may mean that to us. It may be with Christ. If we are to be Christians life must be much with Christ. Even He often went apart. When on earth He often seemed to wonder that man can forget God. We do forget God. Apart with Christ we may be "upbuilt in the recollected consciousness of God".—Church News of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

About Escaping.

How many times we have read that a man, having committed some crime, is arrested and taken to jail. Then, either before or after his trial, he manages to trick the keeper and to escape from his prison cell. Away through the night he flees, trying to get as far from the iron bars and the stone walls as possible before the light dawns in the world and he is missed.

Perhaps he finds his way into a large city, and there buries himself, as he thinks, in the great crowds of moving humanity. He feels that one among so many could never be traced down. Perhaps he goes into the mountain fastness, and there isolates himself, thinking that if he keeps far away from the haunts of men he will be safe. Perhaps he takes passage on a ship and travels round the world, in the belief that if he goes far enough it will be impossible for any one to follow him and bring him back. The man tells himself that he has escaped and thinks of himself as being free again.

But that man has not escaped. He is not free. There is no escape and there is no freedom in the whole world for him. He may not be held prisoner by the iron bars and the stone walls, but there are stronger bars that bar the doors of life than those of iron, and there are thicker, higher walls than those of stone. He may not be in the keeping of the jailer who stands outside the door, but there is another Keeper more watchful still; it is quite impossible to deceive or to pass Him.

Fear of detection and punishment bars the fugitive from all that is highest and best in life, bars him from the best society, bars him from the highest privileges, bars him from a man's place in the world, bars him from the company of his fellow men. The common judgment of his fellows is a wall that shuts him out of their lives and confines him in that narrow, hard life of a lawbreaker.

Conscience is a sentinel at the door of the heart, and conscience never closes its eye, and nothing within the soul escapes it. A man may deceive other men and hide from them his inward thoughts, but conscience can never thus be decieved. That man is the prisoner of conscience, whether he be in the wilds of the mountains or in the underworld of the great city.

There is no sin for which there is no judgment. We may call ourselves free and feel that we have escaped by making light of our sin or by hiding them from men, but we are prisoners still. We must answer to the Judge in the end.—Youth's Companion.

A Statue of Washington in the North.

Valiant he rides, here where the spring comes slow—
Keen etched against our gusty April gray,
East wind at stalwart shoulders, bitter spray
Of sea-wrought mist on rein and saddle bow.
And while the old intrepid hoofbeats go
Along the listening ages, if the face,
Weary with wars—be set a little space
Southwestward, fain and wistful, even so. . . .

That way lies boyhood. Through the scented rain
Of cherry-blooms at dusk the whippoorwills
Are haling truants from the Stafford hills.
And hares go romping down an old red lane,
And minnows fleck the Rappahannock tide
With taunting silver tails. Ride, soldier, ride!

Worshipping at Westminster.

I heard Dr. R. J. Campbell preach in London in 1911. At that time he was a Congregational minister, pastor of the City Temple. Since that time he has become a minister in the Church of England and at the present time is Vicar of Holy Trinity at Brighton. Yesterday I heard him preach again from the pulpit of Westminster Abbey at the morning service.

A sermon at Westminster Abbey by Dr. Campbell is an event even for London, and about one hundred people were standing around the doors thirty minutes before the hour of service, waiting for the gates to open. At 9:45 we passed through the side door and walked over the tablet on the pavement marking the resting place of William E. Gladstone, to the central portion of the church, to secure a seat where we could hear the service to best advantage.

Impressive, indeed, is the Abbey on a Sunday morning. All of the signs which are so conspicuous during the week are removed. Gone for the day is the placard inviting visitors to pay sixpence to the man who will pilot them through the rooms devoted to the royal tombs, and a similar fee to be shown the room in which the royal effigies are exhibited. Before the gates which on other days lead off in these directions are hung heavy curtains of maroon and brown and gold. The bench on which I am sitting is pushed up against one of the main pillars, whose former dainty decorations have been partially worn away by the ruthless hand of the rushing years. Cut deep into the column are the initials, "T. M.". Westminster has its vandals, too, who deem their initials to be wonderfully decorative. Behind me is Poets' Corner. As I turn back for a moment I see the bust of Henry W. Longfellow and the Shakespeare memorial. Just this side a little group of American visitors is standing beside the tombs of those two great nineteenth century prophets of faith and hope, Browning and Tennyson. Over the altar before which all British sovereigns are crowned is the verse:

"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ."

Not far from the altar is the stately monument of General Wolfe, of Quebec fame, a monument hung with the battle flags used by the Canadian troops in the late war. Chimes from a half-dozen or more churches made marvelous melody while we waited, and then at ten o'clock Big Ben slowly sounded the hour from the Parliament Tower.

The audience is, for the most part, very quite, but a mumur comes from the far end of the church. I cannot see, but I know that it is caused by a group who have stopped—a group is ever there—before the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. The Abbey—Royalty at one end and the Unknown Soldier at the other—between the two we worshipped the God who loves and cares for both and all between.

The congregation was such as you might find at any church on any Lord's Day. There were the young with the joy of living shining through eyes of deeepest blue; old men and women weighed down by burdens and weights for long, desolate years; wealthy folks who walked as though they owned the earth, perchance they do own a great portion of it; many whose squalor and poverty were apparent in the worse-than-common-place garments upon them; Britishers, Americans, Japanese, Italians, soldiers, sailors, cadets, civilians; but we all sat together in the house of the Lord and worshipped the common Master of life.

One reason for the crowded church, apart from the special preacher, was the advertised appearance of the Lord High Mayor of London at the service. He came in with his attendants. There was that pomp that we associate only with royalty. Wearing a huge wig, and his crimson robes of office, he was escorted to the prepared seat, and immediated the service began. At the close of the service, the clergy escorted the Lord High Mayor out to his carriage before anybody else was permitted to leave.

Perhaps the great majority of the congregation were unfamiliar with the Church of England Prayer Book. At any rate, there was hardly any response made by the people during the service. The choir was so far away that the congregation did not find it easy to join in the few hymns used, the words of which were printed on the bulletins in the pews. The clergyman who read the two lessons for the day has not the gift of reading the Word of God such as I saw so much in evidence at nonconformist churches a week ago.

Dr. Campbell had for his text, 1 John 4:20, "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen"?

Some of the things which Dr. Campbell said in his message speak in the history of the Abbey itself. For instance, there is this: "The love of God cannot be far separated from the love of man. Hate or indifference to the needs of men, or cruelty to their needs, is incompatible with the love of God. Some of the most devilish things in the history of the world have been done by men who insisted that they loved God."

Within the sound of his voice were memorials to men who had died as martyrs in England at the hands of those who worshipped God through forms a bit different, and just behind the speaker were empty tombs from which the bodies of the Cromwell family had been taken and mutilated after death because others worshipped God in another day. The very atmosphere of Westminster testified to the truth of the message. The first portion of his message dealt with those saints of the Church who had pursued the love of God by drawing apart from the world in seclusion and lofty isolation, giving incident after incident from Church history, the majority of whom were leaders in the Church of Rome.

The concluding thought was devoted to the saints who have found it possible to love God in their love for men. Some of the sentences here were a bit startling to those of us who are accustomed to think in those deep grooves made by the orthodox thinking of the centuries. He said:

"Love and life are ultimately one."

"You cannot help loving God, if you have ever loved any living thing unselfishly. You cannot be far from my God if your heart is filled with love for those who suffer."

After quoting George Bernard Shaw as saying, "Sex love is the most transient of all human passions", Dr. Campbell declared: "But it can be spiritualized, and when it is spiritualized it transforms and glorifies the arena, in which it is exercised. If God be not in it, then He is nowhere to be found."

"Human love," said Dr. Campbell, "is a sacrament introducing us, or a road leading us, to that which is divine. Some of you young men never in your life felt the touch of the divine so deeply as when the love of a good woman came to you. When you looked into her face, almost you looked into the face of God. You mothers, in the swelling tenderness you feel for that precious little life you have nourished within your own, you grasp the nearness of super-mundane things, and find yourself looking almost into the face of God."—Dr. C. H. Nabers, in The Presbyterian of the South.

Christianity has an imperialistic program. A Russian general once said to a missionary: "My Imperial Master will not allow you to plant your church within the bounds of the Russian Empire." Dr. Schauffler's reply was: "My Imperial Master will not ask your imperial master where He will establish His kingdom."

Who lacks a reverent approach
  Naught but a building sees,
And that with outlines dim and faint—
  A forest without trees.

But he who walks with feet unshod,
  And enters by the door,
What wonders there his vision greet—
  What treasures find in store.

To him the light on seraph wing
  Through arches filled with praise;
He sees the face of God, and dares
  Adoring eyes to raise.

Upon his tired spirit falls
  A benediction sweet;
Around him the antiphonies
  Of earth and heaven meet!

Peter Rabbit Finds Signs of Spring.

Old Mother West Wind's children, the Merry Little Breezes, sang this softly as they danced over the Green Meadows and around the Old Briarpatch. Peter Rabbit pricked up his long ears.

"How do you know? Who told you so?" he demanded.

"Nobody told us so; we just feel it, Peter," cried the Merry Little Breezes, and kept on singing as they danced.

"Huh!" exclaimed Peter. "Feeling isn't knowing. Perhaps Winsome is on his way and perhaps he isn't. I hope he is, for that would mean that Mistress Spring is on her way, too, and she can't get here too soon to suit me. But I would feel a lot more sure of it if I could see some signs."

"Use your eyes, Peter! Use your eyes! There are flowers in bloom already, for we've seen them. What better sign that Mistress Spring is coming do you want?" chanted the Merry Little Breezes.

Peter jumped a foot off the ground. "Say, are you crazy?" he cried. "Look at this snow all over the Green Meadows! Do you expect me to believe any such story as that?"

"We do not care whether you believe it or not, it is so!" cried the Merry Little Breezes, dancing around Peter and throwing snow in his face.

"Welcome Robin's on the wing;
  Very soon you'll hear him sing."

With this the Merry Little Breezes danced away across the Green Meadows towards the Green Forest, leaving Peter to stare after them as if quite sure that they really were as crazy as they seemed.

"Of course, it isn't true," muttered Peter. "The very idea of saying that they have seen flowers in bloom when the ground is still frozen and there is snow everywhere! I don't believe a word of it!"

Nevertheless Peter couldn't get it out of his mind that the Merry Little Breezes had seen something that he hadn't. Thoughts of the glad springtime began to chase each other through his funny little head. Presently he began to have a queer feeling—which little by little he recognized as the very feeling the Merry Little Breezes had spoken of—the feeling that Mistress Spring really and truly was on her way. "Huh!" exclaimed Peter just as before, and shook himself. Then he thought again of what the Merry Little Breezes had said about signs and about using his eyes. "Huh!" he said again. "I guess if there is anything to see I would see it! There's nothing the matter with my eyes, and I haven't seen any signs of spring yet. Flowers in bloom! The very idea!"

Now, of course, Peter didn't really believe that the Merry Little Breezes had told an untruth. No, indeed! He thought that they were either just trying to tease him, or that they had been mistaken. But he couldn't get rid of the thought that perhaps they had seen something which he hadn't seen; and nothing upsets Peter more than the thoughts that others may know more than he does about what is going on in the Green Forest and in the Green Meadows.

"If there are any signs of spring which they have seen, I'd like to know where they are," muttered Peter, as he hopped all through the dear Old Briarpatch, looking sharply at all the bushes and little trees and brambles to see if any of the sleeping buds showed any signs of waking. But they didn't, and Peter felt satisfied that there were no signs of spring in the Old Briarpatch. Certainly there were none on the Green Meadows, for these were still covered with snow.

Then Peter made up his mind to visit the Green Forest to make sure that he had missed nothing there. Nowhere could he see the least sign of the coming of Mistress Spring. Snow was everywhere. An idea popped into his head. "If they saw any flowers, it must be that they saw them through a window of Farmer Brown's house. I've seen them there myself," thought he. "But flowers up there are no sign of spring."

A few minutes later Peter came to that part of the Green Forest where in places it was swampy. You know, a swampy space is where the ground is always very wet. This was the warmest place in all the Green Forest. The snow had disappeared in spots and in one of these a tiny stream of water was coming from a place where it bubbled out of the ground. It was a spring, and the tiny stream was the beginning of the Laughing Brook. Peter stopped on the edge of it. Just then along came the Merry Little Breezes and one of them tickled his nose with a queer smell. Peter sniffed."

"It smells to me as if Jimmy Skunk had left a little of that scent around here, but I haven't seen Jimmy's tracks anywhere," thought Peter. Again he sniffed. This time it seemed as if that smell came right out of the water in front of him. He stared at it a minute and for the first time noticed several queer brown-and-green things, like pointed hoods, standing in the water. Peter leaned forward to look at one a little closer, and right then he made a discovery. That smell, like Jimmy Skunk's perfume, came from that queer little hood! Peter hopped a step nearer that he might see better. On one side of that queer hood was an opening, a narrow opening. He was all curiosity now. He held his nose while he peeped in that narrow opening. You see, he didn't like that smell, and so close to that little hood it was very strong.

At first he saw nothing. But a moment later he discovered, down at the bottom of that little hood, a sort of thick stem all covered with something yellow. Then he saw that the thick stem was covered with very, very tiny flowers, all yellow with the dust-like gold which most flowers have, and which is called pollen.

Peter jumped a foot straight up in the air. "Why, the Merry Little Breezes did tell the truth!" he exclaimed.

"Of course we did!" cried the Merry Little Breezes, who had been watching him. "We always tell the truth. These are the first flowers of the year, the flowers of the Skunk Cabbage, and the sure sign that Mistress Spring is on her way."

Peter remembered the big broad leaves he had so often seen growing here and in other swampy places in the summer. He looked all about, but he didn't see even one. He wrinkled his brows in a puzzled way. "I thought the Skunk Cabbage was a big green plant," said he.

"So it is," laughed one of the Merry Little Breezes. "These are its flowers. They bloom before the leaves show at all. Queer, isn't it?"

"I should say so!" replied Peter. "I didn't know it had any flowers. I've seen these things early in the spring many times, but I didn't know what they were. I never thought anything about them."

"That comes of not using your eyes, Peter," cried a Merry Little Breeze. "There are many wonderful things all about you every day which you never see at all."

"What is there wonderful about these?" demanded Peter a little sharply, for he felt a little put out that any one should think he didn't see all there was to be seen.

"Isn't it wonderful that these little flowers can come up and be brave enough and strong enough to bloom when Jack Frost is still making everybody shiver?" asked the Merry Little Breezes.

Peter nodded. "That's so," he said slowly. "I didn't think of that. It is wonderful. I don't see how they do it." He looked at the tiny flowers with new interest. He saw how thick was the little brown-and-green hood inside of which they were blooming, and how warm and cozy it was in there with only a narrow opening for the light and air to enter. Then he began to understand how Old Mother Nature was protecting them.

"It is wonderful," he repeated. "I certainly have learned something today. I've always watched for the coming of Winsome Bluebirds as the first sure sign of sweet Mistress Spring and never once have thought that there might be other signs. Do you know, I rather like this smell now. It is—why, it is a sort of promise that winter will soon be over. Now I must hurry to tell Mrs. Peter the splendid news that the first flowers of the year are in bloom."—Burgess Flower Book for Children (Little Brown Co., Boston).

The Twin Dolls.

Nobody planned to have Lulu's and Nellene's dolls alike. It just happened so. Both the dolls came at Christmas time, and even the little mothers could not have told them apart except for their clothes.

Lulu's Marie wore a blue silk dress and had a gray velvet coat and bonnet. Nellene's Clara was all in white. Nellene's mother made doll Clara a play dress of pink gingham, and Lulu's big sister made doll Marie one of blue check.

Those were all the really made-up dresses these dollies had for months and months. Of course, Lulu and Nellene dressed them in many different ways, but they are only quite little girls and cannot cut or sew doll clothes well. So both the children got to looking rather shabby by summer.

Then there came a big box to Lulu's house. The box was from her aunt. In it were lovely things for them all, but mother and big sister would have to make some of the dresses over a little. In the box was one package all for Lulu.

She took that out in the side yard to open it. "Oh, oh, oh! What lovely things for my dolly!" cried Lulu. "I'll coax sister to make Marie a dress before she fixes mine. Then I'll go over and show Nellene."

Lulu smoothed the pretty pieces of cloth and embroidery and ribbon. She was thinking hard.

"There is plenty of everything to dress two dollies. Nellene said that they haven't anything nice to make Clara any more clothes. I guess I don't want Marie to have such a lot of new things if Clara can't have some."

In just another minute Lulu was running over to Nellene's house. "See what I've come to divide with you," she said.

There was a strange lady reading a book on Nellene's porch. The girls did not think of her till she asked if they would like to have her make clothes for their dollies.

This lady was visiting at Nellene's house. She did not have lots of work to do. She could make the new dresses right away. The girls watched her do it.

First, each doll had a new play dress. Then the lady chose the brightest colored pieces of cloth and some embroidery. With those things she made each doll a quaint peasant costume such as girls wear in a land far, far away. The embroidery was for the two white caps they wore.

Oh, how the girls laughed to see Marie and Clara dressed like that!

"They look more like twins than ever now," said Nellene.

"Let's take them to the doll exhibit!" cried Nellene's cousin from the next block. "Haven't you heard about the doll exhibit?"

"Yes, but we didn't suppose one could take just any dollies."

"I wouldn't call these just any dollies now," said Nellene. "Let's see if we may take them."

They did take the dolls to the exhibit. Clara and Marie stood side by side for hundreds of people to look at. By and by there was a pretty blue rib-them.

"That means our dolls took the first bon laid down like a rug in front of prize," whispered Nellene.

"Oh, oh, oh!" laughed Lulu. She clapped her hands. How glad she was that she had shared with Nellene!—Exchange.

How Bobby Celebrated.

Bobby's mamma had been reading to him about George Washington, when he was a little boy and when he grew up to be a man, and what a great and good man he was. Bobby was very much interested, and when mamma had laid down the book and had answered a great many questions, Bobby said:

"If today is his birthday, I think we ought to—to have a party or something. Don't you, mamma?"

"I don't see how you can have a party today, dear," answered mamma.

"Well," said Bobby, "it seems as if I must do something to—to—you know what, mamma."

"Celebrate?" said mamma.

"Yes, celebrate," said Bobby. "That's it. I want to celebrate George Washington's birthday. How can I, mamma?"

Just then Nora, the maid, came to say that somebody wished to see Bobby's mamma, and Bobby was left to himself.

When mamma came back to the library she heard Bobby talking in a loud voice, and she wondered whom he had for company. The door was ajar, and she peeped through.

The centre-table had been cleared of books and papers, and was now covered with tin and wooden soldiers, ranged in rank and file, Noah and his family, who were leaning against a most dilapidated ark, and several old dolls. Bobby was standing in a chair fronting this strange audience, evidently delivering a speech. This is what his mamma heard.

"George Washington was a nice man. My mamma says so, and the book says so, and they know. Fellow-citizens and soldiers, he did not tell a lie, and—and you must not tell a lie, too. George Washington was a general, fellow-citizens and soldiers and Noah, and—and—and—when he has a birthday, I want you all to celebrate it. Fellow-citizens—"

Just here Bobby's little neighbor, Freddie Welles, came running through the hall, asking if Bobby could go out and slide with him.

Bobby heard him, and came to the door, saying:

"I can't go now, Freddie. I am celebrating. We've got a meeting and I'm talking to the people."

"Can't you finish up your speech and close your meeting?" said mamma. "It is so warm and sunny, I think you had better go with Freddie."

"Well, I will," said Bobby.

Then he rushed to the table, saying: "Fellow-soldiers, you can go home now, and remember to be good, like George Washington. I'm going sliding!"

At dinner Bobby's papa said:

"Washington's Birthday has passed very quietly; no celebration of any kind."

"Why, papa," said Bobby, "I celebrated!"—Presbyterian of the South.

The Boyhood of Washington.

Washington as a boy seems to have had few faults. We know him as truthful, systematic, executive, tender and brave. To his mother he was an ideal son. At one time, says a writer, he was given a commission on board His Majesty's ship, the "Bellona". He obtained it through his half-brother, Lawrence, and his friend, Admiral Vernon. When his mother was apprised of it she and her son had a serious half-hour. George was courteous but determined, and politely but firmly refused to give up his commission. It was the dearest wish of his heart. His mother, ever self-controlled and strong in her reserve, broke down and pleaded with her son to give up the sea. George in a flash saw the mother love and was overpowered. He waited a minute to subdue the ache in his heart before he replied, "Mother, I will give up my commission". God did not intend that he should be an admiral, but a general, and he was even then, though he knew it not, being led to the preparation that fitted him to become the great leader of a nation that was to be.

George always had a passion for things military, and learned much of the French military tactics from Lord Fairfax's guard, Lance, while visiting Lord Fairfax at Green Court, Va. He used to plan and map out ways and means by which the French Indian difficulties might be settled, and Lord Fairfax looked proudly on the resolute boy as the latter sketched out what he would do. Later, as a militia officer fighting with the British forces, he learned the art of warfare as practiced by those forces with whom later he contended.

Lance also taught George to fence, and the future great man afterward admitted that in addition to mastering the gentlemanly art, he mastered something more important, the art of controlling his temper. He soon found that courage, swiftness, dexterity, all were necessary, but that the man with the uncontrolled temper was always defeated. He once said to Lance: "Since I was a little boy I have never lost my temper before my mother or any other woman. It would be ungentlemanly."

To this Lance replied: "Well, son, go a little further. If you can do so out of respect for your mother, then out of respect to yourself always keep your temper."

Control it George did ever after.—The Presbyterian.

Have You?

Have you ever noticed, sonny, when the robin builds his nest,
Collecting straws and feathers, working at his very best,
Every little bit, dear heart, he stops awhile and sings?
That when his bill's not occupied, as on his way he wings,

Have you thought about it, sonny, how when Jackson comes to hoe
The garden, and the lot besides, just one row after row,
If you stop right near the garden gate, hidden from his view,
You'll hear a wordless, weird old tune? That's Jackson singing, too.

Have you thought about your woodpile, dear—a countless lot of sticks,
That seems to be quite mountain high—and the boy who stamps and kicks
When daddy wants a load of wood? Or, if instead of this he'd do
Just a little bit of whistling—and yes—some singing, too!

You must try to learn this, sonny boy—and some "grown-ups" must, too:
When your task is hard, the day so long, and the work is yours to do,
You'll help yourself—and others—and true happiness you'll bring,
If with the job you'll whistle some, and really, truly sing.

—Emilie H. Caldwell.

The Great Ambassador.

Sometimes there were more kings than one at Sparta, who governed by joint authority. A king was occasionally sent to some neighboring State in character of a Spartan ambassador. Did he, when so sent, cease to be a king of Sparta, because he was also an ambassador. No, he did not divest himself of his royal dignity, but only added to it that of public deputation. So Christ, in becoming man, did not cease to be God; but though He ever was, and still continued to be, King of the whole creation, acted as the voluntary servant and messenger of the Father.—F. W. Farrar, D. D.

Deaths

ABERT: Died, on Sunday, Februarv 12, 1928, in Washington, D. C., ROBERT WALKER ABERT, husband of the late Mary B. Warner, oldest child of Charles and Constantia Bache Abert, aged 82. Funeral and interment at Rockville, Maryland.

SYMINGTON: Entered into Paradise at Memorial Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland, on the evening of Tuesday, January 17, 1928, of pneumonia, CLARE RANDOLPH SYMINGTON, daughter of the late Innes and Anna King Randolph and sister of the late Harold Randolph, of Baltimore, Md.

MRS. LUCY TOMLIN BRAXTON HOPKINS.

Died, at her home, in Baltimore, on January 9, 1928, MRS. LUCY TOMLIN BRAXTON HOPKINS, widow of Lewis N. Hopkins, of Baltimore, and daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Corbin Braxton, of Cherikoke, in Virginia.

She was a woman of finest character, true to all high ideals of womanhood, and after a life of ninety years she fell asleep firm in her faith in God and her love for her Saviour. She left only one child, Mrs. Alfred H. Renshaw, who to the end gave her mother her loving care.

MRS. LYDIA KOWNSLAR STRIBLING.

MRS. LYDIA KOWNSLAR STRIBLING widow of the late Edward McCormick Stribling, of Berryville, Clarke county, Virginia, died at her home in Berryville, Sunday morning, December 4, 1927, being seventy years old. She was a daughter of Dr. Randolph Kownslar, of Berryville, Clarke county, Virginia, whose wife was Elizabeth Sinclair Blackburn.

Born in the days of the old South, under the influences of its civilization, her training, cultivation and grace was of that time, and she became a blessing in every station in life she was called upon to fill. No friend, or relative, or neighbor, was ever in sickness or need, but what she comforted and mnistered to them in a friendly and sincere way. Her father, Dr. Randolph Kownslar, of Berryville; her grandfather, Captain Thomas S. Blackburn; and her great-grandfather, Colonel Thomas Blackburn, of Prince William county, Va., were Christian gentlemen of a high type, and all rendered valuable services to the Church and State.

From the time Grace Church, Berryville, Virginia, was first erected, her father, Dr. Randolph Kownslar, was a Vestryman to the day of his death; and, though his contributions were made without ostentation, it is known to those familiar with the history of the Church, it was through his liberality Grace Church in part obtained, and has ever since maintained, an increasing power for the advancement of every Christian endeavor and good work within the sphere of its influence.

A brother was the late Conrad Kownslar, attorney and prominent participant in the public affairs of Clarke county.

A life long member of Grace Episcopal Church, she was one of its most devoted communicants and active members to the time of her death. As a worker in the Church and as one interested in every phase of that work she will be greatly missed.

For her unselfish and indefatigable service for others, she will be equally missed. One of the highest tasks undertaken by her in recent years was the raising a fund for the installation of a memorial window in Grace Church to Bishop Francis M. Whittle, once a rector here. This memorial, gracing the chancel of the remodeled church, perpetuating the story of Christ's reappearance and proof to St. Thomas, while a glorious tribute to her former rector, is also a monument to the devotion and untiring efforts of Mrs. Stribling.

One daughter, Miss Annie M. Stribling, of Berryville, and two sons, Mr. Edward M. Stribling, of Philadelphia, and Mr. John M. Stribling, of Tampa, Fla., survive. One sister, Mrs. Jane Blackburn Lee, wife of the Rev. William Byrd Lee, of Gloucester, Va., also survive.

She was an aunt of Miss Portia Baldwin and Mrs. Frank V. Tilford, both of Berryville, and Mr. W. L. Baldwin, of Norfolk.

The hymn sung at the Committal services at the grave exemplified her life:

"Fight the good fight with all thy might Christ is thy strength and Christ thy might;
Lay hold on life, and it shall be Thy joy and crown eternally."

RESOLUTION.

Nannie Dickerson Poole White.

The Rector, Choir and Congregation of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church, Poolesville, Md., desire to place on record their feeling of deep and sincere sorrow sustaind in the loss by death of their Choir leader and Organist for many years, MRS. NANNIE POOLE WHITE.

All her life she was a faithful and most zealous member and Choir Leader.

This Church has sustained an irretrievable loss—a loss so great that only time may hope to efface. We thank God for her good example and pray that in the near presence of her Lord and Master the Divine Light may perpetually shine upon her and eternal peace be with her.

Copies of this resolution to be sent to her bereaved family, the Southern Churchman and to the county papers.

Signed,
G. C. SHEARS, Rector,
MRS. ESTELLE HODGSON,
MRS. G. ROBERT GRAY.

IN MEMORIAM.

CLARE RANDOLPH SYMINGTON entered into rest on the evening of January 17, 1928, at Memorial Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland, after a brief illness of pneumonia. The last of the four talented children of the late Innes and Anna King Randolph, of Baltimore, she survived her distinguished brother, Harold Randolph, but six months and the shock of his sudden death last July undoubtedly hastened her own.

She was born in Richmond, Virginia, but early in her girlhood the family removed to Baltimore and there the greater part of her life has been spent. Her brilliant father made his home in that city a center of the cultural life of his period and in an atmosphere of the best in music, art and literature his daughter grew to womanhood.

In 1894 sh emarried Thomas H. Symington. Two children were born to her—a son, Thomas Randolph, who survives her, and a daughter, Katherine, who was killed in a riding accident when but sixteen years of age. This tragedy left an ineffacable mark upon the life and character of this noble woman. Thereafter, all who "were acquainted with grief" found in her a tender, understanding friend and she gave herself generously in their service—ever "a cup of strength" to stricken souls and a wise counselor to those in doubt or perplexity. She faced sorrow with high, undaunted courage—without bitterness or complaint—and it softened, ripened and developed her fine qualities of character, making her selfless, tolerant and gentle in all of her contacts.

Although exceedingly reserved, she made many warm friends in all stations of life and was greatly beloved by the few who were admitted to a close intimacy. Intellectual, well informed, charming and with a keen sense of humor, this daughter of old Virginia, throughout life, upheld the best traditions of her race, and of an age when "noblesse oblige" had a very deep and real meaning.

She was a life-long member of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore—having been confirmed in that parish when but a girl. Her Rector, Dr. Hugh Birckhead, officiated at her funeral, which was held from the home of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Harold Randolph, on the afternoon of January 19th. She was laid to rest in Greenmount Cemetery, in the same grave with her adored daughter there to await the morn of a glorious resurrection.

"What asks our Father of His children save
Justice and mercy and humility,
A reasonable service of good deeds,
Pure living, tenderness to human needs,
Reverence, and trust, and prayer for light to see
The Master's footprints in our daily ways?
No knotted scourge, nor sacrificial knife.
But the calm beauty of an ordered life
Whose every breathing is unworded praise."

RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the Vestry of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, of Richmond, Virginia, held on February 7, 1928, the undersigned committee reported the following memorial resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

ARTHUR P. WILMER.

This congregation and the entire community were inexpressibly shocked and grieved last week to hear of the unexpected death of Arthur P. Wilmer.

"Death loves a shining mark," and in this instance has chosen one who stood forth nobly among his fellows.

An English gentleman of the highest type, his cultured courtesy and never failing consideration for others, his loving and lovable personality, and his consecrated Christian character, endeared him to all with whom he came in contact.

Of fine ability and a successful man of business he yet found time to give himself with unselfish devotion to the services of his Church and to work for others.

For many years he served as Vestryman, Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday School, as Teacher of the Bible Class and as a member of the Boy Scout Troop Committee, and in every capacity won the love and esteem of all who were associated with him.

As devoted husband, loving father, patriotic citizen and consecrated Christian he measured up to the highest standard.

The lives he brightened and the souls he helped draw closer to God will ever be the best tribute to his exalted Christian character.

Of him it may be truly said.

"The Son of Man is Come to Seek and to Save That Which was Lost." Luke 19:10

"None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee but to praise."

Therefore, be it resolved by the Rector and Vestry of Grace and Holy Trinity Church:

1. That in the death of Arthur P. Wilmer we have lost one of our most beloved and useful members, influence of whose beautiful Christian character will ever prove an inspiration to all of us:
2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family; and
3. That a copy be printed in the Parish Bulletin and the Southern Churchman.

READY FEBRUARY 20TH
FOURTH EDITION—REVISED AND ENLARGED—OF

THE REAL LINCOLN

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By DR. CHAS. L. C. MINOR
(Edited by M. D. Carter)

Startling but little known facts about the life and administration of the great Civil War President.

A composite analysis of the character and achievements of the man who guided the ship of State during the four most critical years of our history. A book that should be in the hands of every student of American history, and especially of every teacner oi American history.

POSTPAID, $2.50

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

JAY ZORN, New York City Business Man.—Dr. Minor's "The Real Lincoln" should appeal to two different classes and for two opposed reasons. To the Northern admirer, who wishes Lincoln's fame to be established and admitted everywhere, because servile flattery and fulsome praise always in the end defeat their purpose by inspiring disgust rather than agreement. To the Southern admirer, because Southerners are more likely to accept Lincoln as a great and worthy man if one from whose acts they suffered so bitterly is not forced upon them as the acme of all perfection. Setting up Lincoln as an idol will sooner or later excite some iconoclast to tear him down in the same ruthless manner we have of late seen demonstrated in the case of more than one American celebrity, not excepting the Father of His Country himself. The higher the statue is set, the lower it must fall when the feet of clay at last give way.

GEN. MORRIS SCHAFF, Officer in the Union Army during the Civil War.—No lover of historical truth, no teacher of American history, can afford to neglect reading Minor's "The Real Lincoln," for it lays bare the facts of Lincoln's civil and political life—what his contemporaries, who knew him intimately, and men of prominence, who met him officially or casually, thought of him personally and of his administration of affairs. . . . No reader of this book will fail to see the waves of propaganda set in motion for political ascendancy immediately after Appomattox and the death of Lincoln, waves leaving a detritus of revenge and falsehood on the pages of about any history written by a Northerner since the War Between the States; but the foliage of Myth has hidden many a counterfeit god.

DR. PAUL G. AUCHAMPAUGH, Department of History, State Teachers' College, Duluth, Minn.—Charles L. C. Minor's "The Real Lincoln" merits the consideration of readers of American history. Dr. Minor would not hold, with some of Lincoln's present-day biographers, that he reached the heights of statesmanship while President. Whether or not all follow him in his indictment of Lincoln's personality, none can deny that he wrote an invaluable epitome of the opposition in the North to Republican rule. No student of the War Between the States can afford to miss this book, while those who are appreciative of the struggle for Constitutional guarantees in the North during the war will rejoice in its timely appearance.

MAJOR GILES B. COOKE, last surviving officer on General Robert E. Lee's staff.—To all who would like to have a true life of Abraham Lincoln I commend "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, giving an account of that part of Mr. Lincoln's life well known to his life-long friends and boon companions.

FRANKLIN L. RILEY, Professor of History, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va.—In recent months the "de-bunking" of biography has become a literary fad. The efforts to paint the Father of Our Country as a "red-blooded man" have aroused mingled feelings of alarm and disgust as well as of tolerance and approval. Although some of us feel that Washington has not received justice at the hands of his recent critics, we refuse to become excited over the matter, realizing that after the romancers have had their say the historians will separate fact from fiction and will give a verdict that will approximate justice. In the case of Lincoln, the hero worshippers have industriously mixed fiction and fact for so many years that they have made his life a real enigma to the searcher after truth. Here the "de-bunking" process has assumed an interesting and novel phase. Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, the compiler of "The Real Lincoln," has confined his statements to extracts from Northern writers, many of whom were friends and admirers of President Lincoln. To my mind, no harm can come from a review of the opinions and estimates of Mr. Lincoln's contemporaries and of more recent eminent historians of the North. If such a compilation should lead readers to undertake a more detailed study of the career of Mr. Lincoln and of the books from which these extracts are taken, this book will be doubly valuable.

MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, Richmond (Va.) Banker and Publisher of The Southern Churchman.—A new edition of that great book, "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, will soon be available to the public, I am informed, and I strongly recommend that all persons interested in the true history of America secure a copy of it. "Time's glory is to calm contending kings, to unmask falsehood and bring truth to light," and it is high time that American writers cease to whitewash Lincoln and give the reading public the true facts about him and his policies. This is done in Dr. Minor's book, which I highly recommend to the reading public.

H. R. McILWAINE, State Librarian of Virginia.—I am glad to know that you are soon to publish a new (fourth) edition of Charles L. C. Minor's "The Real Lincoln." Made up almost altogether of excerpts from the writings of Lincoln's friends, the book gives facts largely overlooked in present-day biographies and which should be known by all who wish to form a just conception of Lincoln's character. It also gives much information as to widespread opposition in the Northern States to coercion of the South. On this account, too, it ought to be widely read everywhere, for such reading has a tendency to strengthen the good feeling now existing between the two great sections of our common country.

DOMINUS FLUSTRA ISIN 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 25, 1928. No. 8.

Saviour! when in dust to Thee
Low we bow the adoring knee,
When, repentant, to the skies
Scarce we lift our weeping eyes,
Oh! by all Thy pains and woe
Suffered once for man below:
Bending from Thy throne on high,
Hear our solemn litany!

By Thy helpless infant years,
By Thy life of wants and tears,
By Thy days of sore distress
In the savage wilderness,
By the dread permitted hour
Of the mighty tempter's power:
Turn, oh turn a favoring eye,
Hear our solemn litany!

By the sacred grief that wept
O'er the grave where Lazarus slept;
By the boding tears that flowed
Over Salem's loved abode;
By the anguished sigh that told
Treachery lurked within Thy fold;
From Thy seat above the sky,
Hear our solemn litany!

By the burden Thou didst bear,
By Thine agony of prayer,
By the cross, the nail, the thorn,
Piercing spear, and torturing scorn;
By the gloom that veiled the skies
O'er the dreadful sacrifice;
Listen to our humble cry,
Hear our solemn litany;

By Thy deep expiring groan;
By the sealed sepulchral stone;
By the vault, whose dark abode
Held in vain the rising God:
Oh! from earth to heaven restored,
Mighty, re-ascended Lord,
Listen, listen to the cry
Of our solemn litany!

—Written by Sir Robert Grant in 1815.

THE LENTEN MITE BOX

WE WILL HELP YOU FILL IT.

Last year there was a generous response and hearty co-operation by the Young People of the Church to our offer to help fill the Lenten Mite Boxes. The excellent results accomplished by the young hustlers who took part in the plan encourages us to renew our offer for the 1928 Lenten season.

HERE IS THE OFFER

For each new annual subscription to SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN sent us by a Sunday School pupil, or Young Peoples' Organization, we will pay the sender ONE DOLLAR. The subscription price of SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN is $3.00 a year. You keep one dollar and send us two dollars with the name and address of the subscriber. Your good work will add to your Easter Offering, and bring fifty-two weeks of pleasure to the subscriber.

Last year the returns to our offer ranged from one new subscriber at $1.00 profit to the sender, to forty new subscribers with $40.00 for the Mite Box.

Order blanks, literature and sample copies of the paper will be sent on request. Get a list of Church members from your rector and ask them to subscribe, and see the dollars roll in.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

On every mountain height is rest.—Goethe.

The clouds may shut out today's sun, but they cannot hide yesterday's promises.

There is no such thing as living God's way until you love God's way.

"I, too, am blind, my Lord; oh, give me sight!
Illume my mind, thou very Light of Light!
I cannot let Thee go until Thou bless."
—Caroline Hazard.

We must all go through life, but it is the exercise of choice that decrees whether life shall go through us.—Rev. William Porkess.

"Satan is too old to be scared by stage thunder in the pulpit."

"We have no right to upbraid men for loving the world unless we are showing them something more lovable."

I cannot put His presence by; I meet Him everywhere.
I meet Him in the country town, the busy market square;
The mansion and the tenement attest His presence there.
—Harry Kemp.

They that are full of the Holy Ghost are fit for anything, either to do for Christ or to suffer for Him. And those whom God calls out to hard service for His name, He will qualify for those services, and carry comfortably through them, by filling them with the Holy Ghost; that as their affections for Christ do abound, their consolation in Him may yet more abound, and then none of these things move them.—Matthew Henry.

"I doubt if there is a bigger lie in Satan's repertoire than the claim that men do not feel their sin against God. They may not feel it as they ought; but men and women always in quiet hours admit responsibility to God, if they believe at all. But if we measured more God's pitying, saving love in Christ, then we should measure more our injury done Him through ingratitude, and we would see more clearly what an enormous power there is to bring life and growth into our lives, endless, exhaustless power to do whatever He asks."—Selected.

WRINKLES

Some of the wrinkles and furrows that come on our cheeks and brows are the stealthy footprints of passing years, tracks of advancing time. Others may be honorable scars of battle fought bravely against adverse conditions and opposing circumstance. Each furrow may be the living grave of a beautiful dream or hope long ago dead. Too often, however, each wrinkle marks the path of ugly passions, envies, hates, anger permitted to possess and degrade us and to stifle all the high and sweet impulses of the soul. They may be the handwriting of shame, of selfish surrender to sorrow, morbid self-torture, cultivation and exaggeration of pain, of the gathering and wrapping about ourselves of darkness that blinds us to duties inviting us to find peace in performance of them, denying our hearts the luxury of labor for the helping of the many people and causes needing our help. They may be brands of the worst suicide—self-killing by self-indulgence. Men and women who scorn subserviency to appetites and lusts yield weakly to temptations to brooding and vain regrets and uselessness. Thinking of themselves as pure and good and abiding the laws of God and man, abhorring the thought of destroying their bodies, they destroy deliberately their real lives. They drown with tears the glory and light of serving and striving and doing which the feeblest and poorest, lowliest and most sorely stricken of us may win if we will but faithfully pray and valiantly try. They poison themselves, slay gratitude and hope and purpose with repinings, make the most sacred sorrows destructive of all the essentials of our existence here. They gather and heap upon themselves black burdens of remorse, refusing to understand that by humble and faithful repentance, faith in the Atonement and faithful zeal to deserve mercy remorse may be glorified and made living inspiration to high endeavor. Wrinkles so brought cannot disfigure us before our fellows as the miserable causes of them may displease the All-Seeing, Just Judge above us.

Cosmetics and massage and all the sensible and scientifically approved means for preventing, removing, softening our wrinkles are entirely right, especially for women. It is a natural and proper craving and an important part of their business and work in life to be comely and to make the world lovelier. Far more important than the removal or lessening of them is the question of how many of them are made by our own wanton weaknesses and faults, marks of avoidable inward disaster. Most of us are so fortunate as to know old people with beautiful, placid, smooth and kindly faces on which we could no more imagine sneer or scowl or snarl than on the pictured face of the Madonna. Some of them are studious and thoughtful faces, too, but they represent thinking and study made pleasures and not painful processes. These are people who have harbored no malice nor hates nor envies, who have escaped from the night of bereavements and troubles as soon as nature, fairly treated, would permit, have borne themselves gallantly. These are to be emulated, imitated. They have drawn and absorbed comfort and sweetness from the future instead of bitterness and misery from the past, have sought and enjoyed the best of each present day instead of delving for and enlarging the worst, have stored up their happiest and not their unhappiest memories. Crinkles around the corners of their eyes and mouths are visible echoes of good humored laughter, not the traces of resentments and discords, nourished agonies, morbid lamentations.

Ugly and wretched and wicked self-torture and self-killing make the unnecessary and uncomely wrinkles we put wilfully in our own faces. Far worse for us, far more scarring and searing on our souls and hearts, are the wrinkles we cause on the faces of others—of those who love us, whom we should love, do love. Neglect, craven yielding to temper and impulse which courage and sincere effort would curb and subdue, cowardly submission to temptation and weakness, vulgar, vicious, indecent disregard of moral laws and proper social rules—all these put anxious and sorrowful wrinkles in faces of mothers and fathers, wives and husbands, sisters and brothers. Those drest in a little brief authority humiliate, insult, oppress the helpless and defenseless dependents. The employed harass, injure, afflict employers with sloth, treacherous slackness, fraud. In all our contacts we may, so many of us do, make wrinkles to mar and scar faces, to deprive them of the symmetry and beauty of serenity.

God, in His mercy, forgives those who for such fearful transgressions are penitent, seeking diligently to make what amends may be possible. For such as refuse and fail to repent and amend while there is time, if we may imagine them compelled to know the suffering and anguish written against them in every wrinkle they have made, surely no other punishment could be so dreadful.

It is said that for most of the aged and careworn when they die the kindly hand of death smooths the wrinkles and the furrows away, leaving the faces smooth and placid, presaging fulfillment of the promise that for them cares and sorrows shall be known no more forever. Many of the penalties of long life may be avoided by making the life a long blessing, but we may not prevent all the marks of time. We can so live and think and feel that none of the wrinkles we must carry shall be of our own making. We can so bear ourselves toward all with whom we come in contact within and without our homes that if we must look upon their faces, calm and quiet in the last repose, we may know gladly that none of the wrinkles or furrows that have been upon them were placed there by us, were the deep graven evidences of our callous misdeeds, our failures to think and remember, our cruelties.

VERSIONS NOW IN USE.

The Authorized Version.

SHORTLY after this some of the Bishops made a translation which was called the Bishop's Bible, but this never obtained a wide circulation. About fifty years after the publication of the "Geneva Bible", James I., at the beginning of his reign, decided that there should be a complete and competent revision of the English Bible without any sectarian annotations, and entrusted the work to a company of selected Christian scholars. Of these, Dr. F. J. Hamilton says: "They met together under Royal favor and protection without dread of interruption and persecution. Instead of being tried by the depression and disadvantage of exile, they were hospitably received in the chief city of the kingdom, and in its time-honored seats of learning. But better than all this, they were men of prayer; they sought the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and He graciously supplied them with the needful wisdom, patience and power of language. To quote from the preface which describes their labors and their methods 'They trusted in Him that hath the key of David, opening and no man shutting; they prayed to the Lord, O let Thy Scriptures be my pure delight, let me not be deceived in them, neither let me be deceived by them' "

In giving directions for this revision, King James wrote to Bishop Bancroft to "move the Bishops to inform themselves of all such learned men within the several Dioceses as having especial skill in the Hebrew and Greek tongues have taken pains in their private studies of the Scriptures for the clearing of any obscurities either in the Hebrew or the Greek or touching any difficulties or mislikings in the former English translations which we have now commanded to be thoroughly viewed and amended and therefore to earnestly charge them, signifying our pleasure therein, that they send such their observation to Mr. Lively, our Hebrew reader in Cambridge, or to Dr. Harding, our Hebrew reader in Oxford, or to Dr. Andrew, Dean of Westminster, to be imparted to the rest of their several companies that so our said intended translation may have the help and furtherance of all our principal learned men within this our kingdom".

The Methods of King James' Revisers.

The procedure was as follows: Of the forty-seven scholars engaged in the work, fifteen met at Oxford, fifteen at Cambridge, and seventeen at Westminster. They consulted the Greek and Hebrew versions and all manuscripts, translations and commentaries which were available. The utmost care was taken to give the most accurate rendering by careful comparison in each company, then by submitting the decision of each company to the other companies, and finally to a Joint Committee taken from them all. "One member would take a chapter, make it his special study, and write all the changes which he recommended. At the next meeting of his company he read out his recommendations; while the other members, with originals and versions open before them, listened attentively. If any objection was raised to his suggestions, then a discussion ensued, and what appeared best to all the members was taken; if not, then those suggestions were allowed to remain as the unanimous opinion of the whole company. However, the approval of the other companies was necessary, and of a joint committee taken from them all, before the proposed alterations were finally adopted.

Miles Smith was chosen to examine the proofs, and see them through the press, and also to write the beautiful preface, which, sad to say, is not now printed in our Bibles.

"This great work was brought to a successful conclusion in the year 1611. Thus the Authorized Version was published, and it has ever since been known as the English Bible."

The Revised Version.

After the lapse of a period of over 250 years a fresh revision, in the year 1870, was begun by a large company of the most representative scholars in Great Britain. Meetings were held in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster, and all sections of the Protestant Church were represented, Churchman, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, etc.; and in addition to this, on the other side of the Atlantic in America, a similarly constituted body was organized to cooperate, to criticize the work done, and to suggest alterations.

Between the two bodies, about one hundred of the most representative scholars of England and America took part in this latest revision. Whatever may be thought of the Revised Version (which resulted from these labors) in comparison with the Authorized Version, I understand that no fault can be found on the ground that the most scrupulous care was not taken in every step of the procedure adopted. When it is borne in mind that these revisers had available an enormous mass of additional manuscript and documentary evidence which was not accessible to the compilers of the Authorized Version, and that so many schools of thought were represented, and that every bit of ground gone over was scrutinized with such minute care, it is marvellous to realize how slight, comparatively speaking, are the alterations made in the Authorized Version; and I think it may be confidently alleged that no fundamental doctrine taught by the Authorized Version has been affected by any of the changes which have been made. It must be borne in mind that many of the changes are changes that have arisen from the growth and alteration of the English language. More than 200 words used in the Authorized Version have, in the course of the 300 years since it was made, appreciably changed in their meaning; and in order in the Revised Version to maintain the same significance astached to these words when they were used at the time of the Authorized Version, it became necessary to substitute other words where they occurred.

Further, as a concession to elegance of diction, a word occurring frequently in the same part of the original text was often rendered by the former revisers in the Authorized Version by different, though synonymous terms. In the Revised Version to maintain the same significance attached been rendered by the same English equivalent.

Again, in the Authorized Version, the same English word has in some passages been employed where different words occur in the original: in the Revised Version, each different word in the original is rendered by a distinct English term. These purely verbal matters account for a very large number of the alterations which have been made.

The American Version.

After the English Revised Version was published, the New Testament in 1881 and the Old Testament in 1885, the American Revision Committee, which had been collaborating with the English Committee, continued its organization and work. This Committee was not satisfied with some of the conclusions incorporated in the English Revised Version and felt that some of the important questions which were involved had been considered too briefly.

The American Committee had in its membership some of the most authoritative and accomplished Biblical scholars of the principal evangelical denominations in the United States, including some distinguished professors in the leading Universities and Theological Seminaries. This consecrated and able body of men gave a great deal of time and study to their work. The Committee was divided into two sections, one working on the Old Testament and the other on the New Testament. The work of study and translation continued for many years.

The expense of this extended enterprise was met by the voluntary subscriptions of many interested friends.

In addition to original study and discussion, the Committee had access to the notes, records and minutes of those who had collaborated with the English Committee from the very beginning. They also had the advantage of the criticisms and wide discussion among scholars, which naturally followed the publishing of the English Revision.

During the period in which their work was done there was a quickened interest in other countries in the matter of their own translation of the Bible, and Revisions of the French, Dutch, Norwegian, Swedish and Danish Bibles were under way. All of this activity and research in the original languages of Scripture and their translation into modern speech were of great advantage to the American scholars in their work of revision, which was completed in 1901.

VI.

THE BIBLE THE AUTHORITATIVE REVELATION OF GOD.

Such, then, in outline, is the history of the Bible. Without some knowledge of this we can never fully appreciate what a miracle the Bible is, and how unique, and unapproachably pre-eminent, is the place which it occupies in comparison with any other book the world has ever known. From a few hundred years after the first of its books were inspired and written it has had the most relentless of enemies, who then, and from time to time ever since, all down through the ages, have striven to blot it out.

What is there in this marvellous book to command such attention and excite such passion and hatred? It is the authoritative voice of God denouncing sin, and pronouncing the doom of the impenitent sinner: the lamp of God flashing an irresistibly revealing and exposing search-light on the darkness and hideousness of sin and wickedness. What, again, is there in this astonishing Book that so secures its indestructible vitality that neither Jewish king nor Papal power, neither heathen monarch nor Roman emperor, could blot it out or arrest its conquering progress? How is it that all through the centuries there have always been those who were willing to make any sacrifice, to endure any penalties, rather than give it up? Is it not that we hear in it the commanding, constraining voice of God, the living Word of the Lord revealing Himself to the creatures He has made, and speaking in accents of eternal power, ever fresh, to the human heart in every stage of the development of man?

The Object and Purpose of the Bible.

In considering the Bible, we have ever to bear in mind the object with which it was written. "The Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Again, "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Again, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy".

The Bible is not a book for the purpose of teaching men what they should find out for themselves by the diligent use of the faculties with which God has endowed them. It does not profess to teach astronomy, or geography, or geology, or even general history, or mechanics, or architecture, or any science or art; but it is the Revelation by God concerning what man could not otherwise know—the origin of man, the object of his creation, God's requirements, God's plans and purposes concerning him; the fact and the nature of sin, the divine plan of redemption from sin, and first and always the revelation of God in Christ. As, however, the inspired Word of God reveals God as the God of truth, we would expect it to be true to facts in nature and in history; and we find that all the discoveries, thousands of years after the events it relates, confirm the accuracy of the very numerous historical and geographical records of the Bible, and also that the discoveries of science in astronomy, and in geology, so far definitely proved, have brought to light nothing that contradicts the statements in the Bible which bear on these subjects.

The Bible and Modern Science.

Apparent discrepancies between science and the Bible are often due to a misapprehension of what the Bible really says. When readers of the Bible understood the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis to state that God created the world a few days before he made man, their faith was naturally shaken when geology established the fact that the world was immeasurably older than 6,000 years: but they had misread their Bible. The first verse of Genesis states that "in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth"—but gives no information when the beginning was. For anything the Bible says to the contrary, the beginning may have been untold millions of years ago. Nor does the Bible give any information as to any race of beings inhabiting the earth at any time prior to the advent of man.

The development of astronomical science since the adoption of the Copernican theory has been likewise a source of disturbance to the faith of many. In the Bible man is dealt with as if he were the centre of the universe, and as if all things were made in relation to him. When astronomers tell us that even in regard to the solar system the earth is but a negligible speck, and that they believe that there are countless other systems and other suns far larger than our own, the atheist and the sceptic are not slow to point the finger of scorn at the prominence which the Bible gives to man. One of the latest suggestions of science on this subject comes from Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace, whose utterances on scientific matters no man can disregard. That suggestion is, that the earth is certainly the only habitable planet in the solar system, and presumably the only habitable spot in the whole universe. This view is advanced by him from a purely scientific standpoint, and with no reference to any defense of the Scriptures. He concludes his argument in the following words: "This completes my work as a connected argument founded wholly on the facts and principles accumulated by modern science; and it leads, if my facts are substantially correct, and my reasoning sound, to one great definite conclusion—that man, the culmination of conscious organic life, has been developed here only in the whole vast material universe we see around us." However this may be, it should be borne in mind that while the Bible is exclusively concerned with man in his relationship to God, it nowhere asserts that the earth is the centre of God's universe.

Internal Evidence of the Divine Origin of the Bible.

This will be treated very briefly. In doing so, we shall find that we gather up into a focus all that has been said. The passage from Revelation already quoted states, "The testimony of Jesus in the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. 19:10), and that from the Gospel of St. John that Jesus is the word (John 1:1).

Often in the Bible it is difficult to separate the references to the written and the Incarnate Word, but the entire written Word is the revelation of and the testimony to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word. This is the key which unlocks all Scripture, this is that living Bond which binds it into one living whole. This illumines those two remarkable verses in the Epistle to the Hebrews: "The Word of God is living, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in His sight, but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do" (Heb. 4:12, 13).

The Bible claims to be a living power that goes down into the inmost being of man, and reveals him to himself as he is already revealed to the Omniscient Christ.

Does the Bible bear this test? There can be only one answer to this. It does.

Indestructible Vitality.

We have seen that notwithstanding an opposition and a hatred which no other book in the world has encountered, it has ever displayed an indestructible vitality. Though an ancient Oriental book, it has been translated, in whole or in part, into nearly 600 different languages, has moulded the whole life and thought of Western nations, and is today in every quarter of the world a living, vital power.

Reveals the Heart.

In millions of instances of human lives, extending over every country and in every rank, it has proved itself a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, has brought conviction of sin, submission to Christ and His claim, and an entire reversal of the whole previous order of life.

A Living Action Power.

It has proved itself living in a continuous active power in the daily lives of those who accept it.

Never Out of Date.

It has proved itself living in that it never goes out of date.

No advance in literature, in philosophy, in science, has ever yet got ahead of the Bible. As we have seen over and over again, the exponents of both science and philosophy have laid claim to discoveries which supersede the Bible; but it has only required the lapse of a very few years to find later scientists and later philosophers confounding the claims and ridiculing the positions of their predecessors, while the Bible has again emerged as fresh and as pre-eminent as ever.

Communicates Life.

The Bible claims not only to be a living power, but to be the means of communicating life. "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." In Philippians, "As lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life". In Colossians, "The Word of the truth of the Gospel, which is come unto you, as it is in all the world, and bringeth forth fruit". In Thessalonians, "When ye received the Word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe".

Similar passages might be quoted indefinitely. The Bible claims to impart life, and to nourish it and develop it. Has it stood this test?

There can be but one answer. It has. In all experience there are no phenomena more completely established than the quickening power of the Word of God in human hearts and lives.

Its Tone of Authority.

Another internal evidence of its Divine origin is the tone of authority with which it speaks. It exhorts, rebukes, commands, in a way no other book does, and only in the way in which it is recorded that the Incarnate Word when on earth did. "For He taught them as One having authority, and not as the scribes." (Matt. 7:29.) "Never man spake like this Man." (John 7:46.)

Bible Foretells How the World Would Treat It.

Again, it distinctly foretells what reception the world would give it. As they hated the Incarnate Word when on earth, so it was foretold that they would hate His written Word through His servants; and, as we have seen, hatred of the Word is one of the most remarkable facts in human history; indeed, as one has very well pointed out, no other book has been produced of which it can be said that the world hated it.

The Supreme Test.

I will close by reminding you of the one infallible and convincing test of the Inspiration of the Bible which is found in St. John 7:17, "If any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teachings, whether it be of God". "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

It is only when the creature bows with humility before his Creator, and surrenders his will to the Higher Will, that the Spirit of God opens the eyes to see and brings home the conviction which is irresistible.

It is then that the Living Word lays hold of and imparts its own life to the creature.

To this supreme test of all, the Bible must be brought, and here again countless millions of human beings stand witness to its truth.

I leave my subject with the enquiry, What is this living Word of God to us? Unlike all other books, our attitude towards it determines our destiny here and hereafter. What is it to us, and what are we doing with it?

Note. Some excellent and interesting translations of the Bible in whole or in part have been made during recent years by individual scholars, or by voluntary and unofficial groups of scholars. The translations of the New Testament by Moffatt, Weymouth, Goodspeed; the Centenary Translation by Montgomery; the Twentieth Century New Testament, and others; and Moffatt's Translation of the Old Testament are attempts to convey the meaning of the original Greek and Hebrew in the language of the present day.

While these translations are stimulating and useful to the student of the Bible, they are not included in the above account of the more official and generally accepted versions. (The end.)

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 23.—Topic: God's Great Universe.

(Commit to Memory Psalm 8:3, 4; Psalm 19:1.)

The call of God is to "look up" and behold His wondrous works as displayed in the starry canopy above us, "for the heavens declare the glory of God: and the firmament showeth his handiwork". It is here we may view the wonders of His mighty power and the vastness of His universe. Many helpful books by eminent astronomers are available through which we may learn marvellous things not generally known and unfolding a clearer vision of the greatness of our God and a better understanding of the Scriptures which relate to these wondrous visitors of the night.

Astronomers tell us that our sun is 1,200,000 times larger than the earth, and about 93,000,000 miles distant. Incomprehensible as these figures are to the human mind, our Astronomer next points to Arcturus, but one of the billions of stars beyond, and reminds us that here the term "miles" loses its significance and the "light-year" becomes the measuring unit. Light is said to travel 186,000 miles per second, or 5,865,696,000,000 miles in one year; hence the term "light-year", and Arcturus is 160 "light-years'" distant.

Next we are guided to the constellation of Orion, the most notable of the celestial wonders. Within this group there are not only millions of lesser lights, but also a cave or opening so stupendous that our entire solar system could be readily concealed therein. Were we able to travel from earth toward this wonder of the heavens at the rate of 100 miles a minute for 100 years to come, we are assured that the distance thus covered would be as nothing compared with the incomprehensible vastness and grandeur of the starry canopy of God's great universe that would still shine in dazzling beauty beyond.

Well may we pause in awe and exclaim with the Psalmist, "When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained; what is man that Thou art mindful of him". With renewed interest may we now turn to the Word of the Lord concerning this wondrous display of His handiwork.

1. "Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things that bringeth out their host by number: He calleth them all by names."—Isa. 40:26.
2. "He telleth the number of the stars."—Ps. 147:4.
3. "I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens."—Isa. 45:12.
4. "Behold the stars, how high they are."—Job 22:12.
5. "Not one faileth."—Isa. 40:26.
6. "The sun for a light by day. * * * and the moon and stars for a light by night."—Jer. 31:35.
7. "The moon a faithful witness."—Ps. 89:37.
8. "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Irion?"—Job 38:31.
9. "Canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?"
10. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth His handiwork."—Ps. 19:1: "the work of His fingers."—Ps. 8:3, 4.
11. "He maketh the sun to rise upon the evil and on the good."—Matt. 5:45.
12. "Ah, Lord God! behold Thou hast made the heaven and the earth by Thy great power * * * and there is nothing too hard for Thee."—Jer. 32:17.
13. And all these things are Christ's.—John 16:15.
14. And we are joint heirs with Him.—Rom. 8:17.

"And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."—Dan. 12:3.

GENERAL R, E. LEE TO HIS SON, GENERAL G. W. CUSTIS LEE

The following letter, addressed to his eldest son, G. W. Custis Lee, will show the degree to which his frankness and freedom from all subterfuge was carried:

"You must study to be frank with the world; frankness is the child of honesty and courage. Say just what you mean to do on every occasion, and take it for granted you mean to do right. If a friend asks a favor, you should grant it, if it is reasonable; if not, tell him plainly why you cannot; you will wrong him and wrong yourself by equivocation of any kind. Never do a wrong thing to make a friend or keep one; the man who requires you to do so is dearly purchased at a sacrifice. Deal kindly, but firmly, with all your classmates; you will find it the policy which wears best. Above all, do not appear to others what you are not. If you have any fault to find with any one, tell him, not others, of what you complain; there is no more dangerous experiment than that of undertaking to be one thing before a man's face and another behind his back. We should live, act, and say nothing to the injury of any one. It is not only best as a matter of principle, but it is the path to peace and honor.

In regard to duty, let me, in conclusion of this hasty letter, inform you that nearly a hundred years ago there was a day of remarkable gloom and darkness—still known as "the dark day"—a day when the light of the sun was slowly extinguished, as if by an eclipse. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session, and as its members saw the unexpected and unaccountable darkness coming on they shared in the general awe and terror. It was supposed by many that the last day—the day of judgment—had come. Some one, in the consternation of the hour, moved an adjournment. Then there arose an old Puritan legislator, Davenport, of Stamford, and said that if the last day had come he desired to be found at his place doing his duty, and, therefore, moved that candles be brought in, so that the House could proceed with its duty. There was quietness in that man's mind, the quietness of heavenly wisdom and inflexible willingness to obey present duty. Duty, then, is the sublimest word in our language. Do your duty in all things, like the old Puritan. You cannot do more; you should never wish to do less. Never let me and your mother wear one grey hair for any lack of duty on your part."

REVISION OF THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES

Reverend Edward McCrady, D. D.

THE recent proposal to remove the Thirty-Nine Articles from the official formularies of the Church is, in many respects, the most radical proposition that has yet been presented to the General Convention, and involves consequences of such far-reaching importance that no one who truly honors this Protestant Episcopal Church —who truly reveres her historic name and lineage, and desires to preserve her well-known Protestant character unimpaired—can afford to maintain silence while this insidious work of destruction goes on unchecked and unresisted. Why any one who is at all familiar with the history and teaching of his Church can fail to understand the object of such a proposal, or to take in the significance of so many of the alterations of the Book of Common Prayer now being seriously considered (particularly those relating to the Office of Holy Communion), when the real purpose of the movement is common talk outside the Church, and its parallel in the Church of England has only recently met with such notorious and humiliating defeat, is indeed most difficult to understand. To judge by appearances, it would seem that only those most interested and instrumental in forcing these changes are unaware of the inconsistency, illegality and the danger of the whole proceeding —the menace of disruption which is so thoughtlessly and so needlessly imposed upon our communion. To those who cannot see anything incongruous in a Church which officially proclaims itself "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America", and which, while warning the proponents of "Revision" that no attempt to tamper with its Protestant Title will be tolerated (Resolution of Convention, 1913), nevertheless sets out carefully, deliberately and persistently, through years of effort, to eliminate all traces of Protestant teaching from her Prayer Book—especially remodelling the present Office of Holy Communion, as drawn up by Protestant Theologians, so that it shall be brought into well nigh literal agreement with the Roman Mass—carefu ly introducing numberless prayers, phrases and expressions, encouraging the ideas of Transubstantiation, Elevation, Ostension and Adoration of the Host, Purgatory, Prayer and Masses for the Dead, etc., etc., as well as the various Roman practices associated therewith—and now further proposing to remove the whole body of the Thirty-Nine Articles—that bulwark of Protestant Doctrine drawn up by the Reformers for the express purpose of safeguarding the Protestant character of the Church, and specifically condemning these very Roman doctrines and practices afore-mentioned; to those who cannot see anything unusual in such a Church further harboring and tacitly encouraging numberless secret organizations within the ranks of her Clergy which openly profess to be unalterably inimical to her Protestant Name and Teaching, and are organized for the express purpose of righting the "mistakes of the Reformation", re-introducing these officially repudiated doctrines and practices (i. e., Transubstantiation, Reservation, Adoration of the Host, Confession, Invocation of Saints, Mariolatry, etc.)—to those, we repeat, who cannot see anything incongruous, inconsistent, to say nothing of flatly contradictory and absurd in such a situation, it is perhaps almost impossible to present a rational argument. We cannot believe, however, that there are many within the Church who are so unreasonably disposed, and account for the present confusion of mind as due primarily to the general indifference of the vast majority of Church people toward the whole matter of Revision, and the unsuspecting attitude which most of the Clergy, and even delegates to the Convention (both clerical and lay), have generally assumed from the very outset with reference to the whole object of Prayer Book Revision. Assured at the very beginning that nothing affecting the doctrinal position of the Church would even be considered, they have been thrown entirely off guard, and have allowed a few well organized individuals, who have known all along exactly what they wanted to do, and had carefully made their plans beforehand, to lead them step by step and all unwittingly into the present hopelessly illogical position. As the same thing has happened in England, only to eventuate in the recent humiliating discomfiture of the "Anglo-Catholic" Party, and the even more humiliating prospect of actual disruption in our grand old Mother Church, it is high time that the Church people here in America be made to realize the seriousness of the situation on this side of the water, and the urgent necessity for taking immediate and decisive action toward checking this most radical and illogical attempt to revolutionize our doctrinal and historic position, which—if it be allowed to continue—can only end in similar disaster. Nothing, we repeat, could be more humiliating to every true son of this Protestant Episcopal Church here in America than the sad spectacle which now confronts us of the Mother Church in England—that grand old Communion that for upwards of four hundred years has stood not only as the bulwark of Protestantism, but because of this very Protestant character—simultaneously the representative of the broadest, most liberal, most comprehensive and scholarly Theology that the world has ever seen. We particularly emphasize this last statement, for (as we propose to show later on in the course of these articles) there never was a greater fallacy than that which assumes that Protestantism is the antonym of Catholicism, or that the spirit of the Reformation was (and is today) the spirit of reaction, rather than the national and godly spirit of progress and development. But we shall refer to this aspect of the matter later on. What we desire first of all to point out is the flagrant illegality of this latest proposal, as well as of a number of other "alterations" in our Book of Common Prayer, either provisionally adopted or under serious consideration. In the intemperate haste with which the proponents of Revision have sought to sweep away all the old landmarks of the Protestant Reformation, the General Convention seems to have completely forgotten its own original Resolution—the one and only Resolution under which the Revision has any authority, or can be legally imposed upon the Church. This Resolution, passed by the General Convention of 1913, reads as follows:

> "Resolved: That a Joint Commission consisting of seven Bishops, seven Presbyters and seven Laymen be appointed to consider and report to the next General Convention such revision and enrichment of the Prayer Book as will adapt it to present conditions, if, in their judgment, such revision be necessary; Provided, that no proposition involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church shall be considered or reported upon by the Commission; and Provided, that no proposal to change the Title-page of the Prayer Book or the Name of the Church shall be referred to said Commission."

Nothing could be plainer—"no proposition involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church shall be considered or reported upon by the Commission; and . . . no proposal to change the Title-page of the Prayer Book or the Name of the Church shall be referred to said Commission." Yet what are the actual facts? Simply these, that in flat defiance of the above emphatic instructions, the Commission has "considered" and has "reported upon", and the Convention itself has entertained a number of propositions distinctly and undeniably "involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church", even going so far (and all professedly under the provisions of the above cited "Resolution") as to propose the complete elimination of the "ARTICLES OF RELIGION; as established by The Bishops, the Clergy and the Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, In Convention, On the Twelfth Day of September, in the Year of our Lord 1801" (Prayer Book, p. 555)—a body of official declarations containing nothing but matters of "Faith and Doctrine", and further, under the provisions of Article X of the CONSTITUTION of the Church declared to be part of its doctrinal law. Let us state the matter still more specifically. The provisions of the Resolution of the Convention authorizing the Revision have been signally violated in respect to the following proposals which have all been offered and considered, to wit:

(1) The proposal to "delete the word 'Militant' " in the Bidding before the Prayer for the Church, in the Office of Holy Communion, so that (a) this part of our Office shall be made to conform to the corresponding portion of the Roman Mass (q. v.), and that (b) in accordance with Roman usage, we may also pray for the dead as well as for the living—so rejecting the Protestant Doctrine which now for several hundred years this Church has consistently maintained, and for the preservation of which the word "Militant" was expressly introduced.

(2) The proposal that (in the same Prayer for the Church) God be petitioned "to grant them (i. e., the dead) continual growth in thy love and service"—a petition which, in addition to being a repetition of the foregoing offense, involves a further doctrinal theory concerning "the Intermediate State" which this Church has never authorized, and closely associated with the Roman Doctrine of Purgatory expressly condemned by this Church in Article XXII.

(3) The proposal to re-introduce, immediately before the Prayer of Consecration, the "Benedictus qui venit" of the Roman Mass—the recognized symbolic formula of the Doctrine of Transubstantiation—which was (on that very account) intentionally eliminated by our Protestant Reformers to accentuate the repudiation of that Doctrine by the Church of England, and to forestall any attempt to revive the various Roman practices logically connected therewith (e. g., the Reservation, Carrying-about, Lifting up, or Worshipping of the Sacrament—"Elevation and Adoration of the Host") expressly condemned in Article XXVIII.

(4) The proposal to insert at the end of the Communion Office a new rubric, authorizing "the administration of the Holy Communion by intinction"—a proposition which (aside from all question of its import) is unquestionably a doctrinal innovation, and, therefore, out of order under the provisions of the Resolution of 1913, and is, in addition, a dangerous move in the direction of the Roman custom of Withholding the Cup from the Laity—a custom specifically condemned by the Church in Article XXX—and an obvious mutilation of the ordinance of Christ.

(5) The proposal to set aside a special "Collect, Epistle and Gospel . . . for use at the Burial of the Dead", inasmuch as Collects, Epistles and Gospels are habitually associated with the Office of Holy Communion, and could not, in this instance, be well employed in any other connection, implies a tacit permission of "Mortuary Celebrations", or to express it in language more agreeable to "Catholics"—permission to hold "Masses for the Dead"—and is, therefore, a proposition plainly involving the doctrines underlying such practices, and especially condemned in Article XXXI and Article XXII (i. e., the Sacrifice of the Mass and the doctrine of Purgatory).

(6) The proposal to "omit" in the first rubric in the Communion of the Sick, "the words in parentheses, 'which shall be two at the least'", and again in the same office, the words in fourth rubric, "or the lack of company to receive with him"—both of which are intended to subvert an established doctrine of this Church respecting the number necessary to constitute a valid Communion. In a word, the above rubrics were intended to safeguard the Church against the "Solitary Masses" of Rome—the object of this proposal is to contradict that doctrinal position.

But we have neither time nor space to cite all the proposals which have thus been submitted and considered by the Convention in regard to matters of Doctrine. There are quite a number of others, scattered throughout the text of the proposed Revision, which might be cited. The above, however, when taken in connection with the further and latest proposal to abolish that WHOLE BODY OF DOCTRINAL PRONOUNCEMENTS—THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES—is ample evidence of all that we have here alleged as to the flagrant violation of the provisions of the original Resolution of 1913, under which the proposed Revision was authorized, and the illegality of the whole proceeding. We have only to glance through the Articles of Religion, observing its many doctrinal pronouncements in regard to Purgatory, Pardons, Worshipping and Adoration, as well of Images as of Relics, Invocation of Saints, the Sacraments, Elevation of the Host, Transubstantiation, Reservation, Adoration of Host, Denial of the Cup to the Laity, the Sacrifice of the Mass, Masses for the Dead (all of them bearing more or less directly upon the "alterations" cited above), together with numberless other declarations "involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church" to perceive not only the truth of our statement, but the wholesale manner in which the proponents of these measures are seeking to sweep away all the characteristic PROTESTANT DOCTRINES of this Church, and all this, in the face of the most positive and explicit direction of the Convention itself. Nay, more! What can be more absurd, after thus carefully and laboriously eradicating every trace of Protestant Doctrine from our Formularies, to continue to boast that we have not changed either "the Title-Page of the Prayer Book or the Name of the Church"! What moral right has any Church to profess to be one thing, while teaching another and an opposite thing—to insist to the world (on the Title-Page of the Prayer Book, and in all its official declarations) that it is a Protestant Church—viz: "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America"; while actually it despises Protestantism, looks upon this very attempt (of the present writer) to defend its Protestantism as an impertinence, and is now in the very act of doing everything possible to abolish the whole body of its Protestant Articles, and carefully to remove every suggestion of Protestant teaching from the Offices of its Prayer Book. The truth is that if once we abolish the Articles of Religion, and eliminate the Protestantism in our formularies, we will then be morally and logically compelled to change the Title-page of the Prayer Book and the Name of the Church (exactly what the proponents of this Revision foresee and intend to do) and—we may add—we shall, then, also be logically and morally bound formally to repudiate that solemn assurance given the Mother Church of England at the very outset of our organization, and whereby alone the Episcopate was granted us, viz: the assurance that we were then a Protestant Church, as witnessed by our proposed Title—"The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America", and that as such we pledged loyalty to the historic doctrinal position of said Church of England as officially set forth in her Thirty-Nine Articles and other formularies (all specifically Protestant—embodying "the true Protestant Religion established in the Church of England"—Archbishop Laud), and that in testimony thereof we submitted our proposed Book of Common Prayer, comparison of which with the authorized Prayer Book of the Mother Church would demonstrate "that this Church was (is) far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline or worship; or further than local circumstances require." Once repudiate these Articles, remember, and you repudiate this solemn covenant entered into by our forefathers with the Church of England—the very terms of agreement by which we were granted the Episcopate—the very charter of our existence as an organized body. Is it possible that this matter has gone so far that we are now ready to stultify ourselves thus before the world? God forbid! This Church must either be consistent or inconsistent. Either the General Convention means what it says when it passes such a Resolution as that of 1913, or it does not mean what it says; either, therefore, it will, at its next session, consistently and logically rule all these proposals "out of order" and "illegal", or it must stand humiliated before the world—self-accused, self-contradicted, self-condemned.

Subject-Title: Witnesses to Christ.

THE MESSAGE.

After Christ's witness to Himself (19-29), He tells us of (ii) Other witnesses to Him (30-47), of which there are five. (a) The Witness of the Baptist (32-35). Was he competent? That depends upon two things, moral uprightness and accurate knowledge. Had John these? "The witness which he witnesseth of Me is true" (32, 33; cf. ch. 1). There were both light and heat in John's testimony (35), which suggests that testimony may be clear, yet cold. How much warmth is there in your witness? John was but a local lamp; Jesus is the universal Sun. (b) The Witness of Christ's Works (36). This alone should be enough. Read Matt. 11:1-6. What Christ has done in the world makes a lot of the criticism of Him look very foolish, and the rejection of Him very sinful. Christ's record is His claim, and it is irresistble. (c) The Witness of the Father (37, 38). Three times, in crises, did the Father bear witness to His Son: at His baptism; when the Greeks came to Him (ch. 12); and at the Transfiguration. Look up and read these passages. The Jews claimed to believe God, yet they refused His Son (38): but rejection of the Son is denial of the Father (1 John 2:23). (d) The witness of the Scriptures (39-44). The opening words of vs. 39 are a statement, not a command (R. V.). These people and their successors have the record, yet miss the revelation; they have the garden without the flowers; the organ without the music; the body without the soul; the altar without the sacrifice. What is the good of that? What is the use of "going through the Bible", if the Bible does not go through you? (c) The Witness of Moses (45-47). "He wrote of Me." What shall we say of those who welcome the herald and yet reject the King; who believe the prophecy, and yet deny the fulfilment? How illogical is unbelief!

Today's Thought: "Ye Shall Be Witnesses Unto Me" (Acts 1:8).

Monday, February 27—St. John 6:1-14.

Subject-Title: A Picnic on the Hillside.

THE MESSAGE.

This event is critical in the ministry of Christ. All the Evangelists record it; few miracles were wrought after it; it closed the Lord's public Galilean ministry, and hereafter He devotes Himself mainly to His disciples. In the previous chapter Christ claimed to be the Source of life; here He shows and teaches that He is also the Sustainer of it. This crowd was certainly curious, and perhaps careless, but Jesus was compassionate, and that saved, and always saves, the situation. Difficult circumstances are always revealing; this one was: it revealed three persons, Philip, Andrew and Jesus. Shall we say four—the lad? Surely. Well, Philip calculates, and comes down on the wrong side (7). He looked at the crowd, and then at £7, and concluded that the thing could not be done (5). He had forgotten that his Master had turned water into wine, and, if necessary, could turn stones into bread. Forgetfulness may make an infidel of you. Enter Andrew (8). He suggests, but doubts; that, however, is one better than Philip. Andrew is like a person who goes to bathe, but who, feeling the chilly water, fears to take the plunge If only some one would push these people in! The world is full of trembling enterprisers, with more of trouble than enterprise. However, Andrew's suggestion proved fruitful through the generosity of a lad who readily put all that he had into the commissariat (9). Christ can do much with little, and He would do it through you and me. Remember David and his sling, Shamgar and his ox-goad, Dorcas and her needle. Only Christ could provide for 5,000 unexpected guests. Sit down when and where He tells you, and open your mouth wide. And there was more at the end than at the beginning. God is the great Economist; He wastes nothing (12, 13).

Subject-Title: A Choppy Sea.

THE MESSAGE.

Surveying the whole of this chapter, we mark three divisions. The subject of the whole is, Christ the Bread of Life, and it divides up as follows: The Illustration (1-15); The Interruption (15-25); The Interpretation (26-71). Throughout this Gospel incident is made the occasion of instruction, discourse is based on event. The healing of the impotent man led to the discourse on Christ's Person and Authority (ch. 5); here, the feeding of the 5,000 leads to the discourse on Christ the Bread of Life (ch. 6); and the healing of the blind man led to the revelation of Christ the Light of the World (ch. 9). Trace others. In our chapter the Text (1-14) is separated from the Sermon (26-71) by an event on the Sea of Galilee (15-25). It is noteworthy that Jesus resorted to prayer both before and after critical events in His ministry (15). Let us admit at once that we do not pray enough; we are not enough alone. Well, the disciples are sent forward, and run into a storm. Christ has not promised His people a smooth passage, but only a safe landing. In embarking upon the Christian life we are not guaranteed a sunlit sea, but rather, are advised of a storm-tossed ocean, but we are promised the presence of Christ; and it is far better to be in a storm with Him than in a calm without Him. The trouble is that too often we do not recognize Him when He comes (19). It is good for us to have the discipline of the storm, but this means of grace becomes an occasion of disaster if we doubt the faithfulness and power of Christ. Let us learn also that we are not to be inactive in our storms: Christ comes to the aid of the honest rower (19). Vs. 22-27. How pathetic is this wandering crowd, and how patient is the Master! Their very dulness is responsible for these mighty deliverances (27).

Today's Thought: Seek Christ for Himself Alone (26).

Wednesday, February 29—St. John 6:28-40.

Subject-Title: The Bread of Life.

THE MESSAGE.

Our Lord's discourse is in two parts. In part 1 (26-40), He addresses the Crowd: and in part two (41-59) the Jews. We have the first of these today. Vs. 26, 27, expound the text, "Man shall not live by bread alone". He must have bread, but he should have more: we need victuals, but we need vision also. If man were only body, bread would be enough; but as he is also soul, he needs God as well. All through the ages men have been asking what they must do to inherit eternal life (28), and the answer every time has been—believe on Jesus Christ (29). When that point is reached, people generally attempt to evade it (30). These people suggested that there was not enough evidence to call forth faith. What about the meal they had had on the hillside? How much evidence are you demanding in order to find Christ trustworthy? The fact is, evidence is heaped heaven-high; what we need is eyes to see it and a heart to desire it. Pray for that. The people were hungry (34); everybody is. The undertones of the world tell of universal spiritual hunger; yet there is "bread enough and to spare". But it is not to be found in the "far off country", but in the Father's house. The great truth of this part of the discourse is that Christ is the Bread of Life and the Water of Life (35). Then say to Him just now: "Thou bruised and broken Bread, my lifelong wants supply; as living souls are fed, oh, feed me, or I die." The sight of bread will feed no one; it must be eaten (36). At this hour there are people perishing because they are more intent upon analyzing the loaf than they are eager to eat it. "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." Turn that sweet morsel over in your mouth. And further, Jesus says, not only that He can satisfy, but also that He will glorify (39, 40). If you will have Him every day, you shall have Him at the last day.

Today's Thought: "They Did All Eat and Were Filled."

Thursday, March 1—St. John 6:41-59.

Subject-Title: Simple Fare.

THE MESSAGE.

Let us keep in mind the main outline of this longest chapter in a book of long chapters: vs. 1-15, Illustration; 16-25, Interruption; 26-71, Interpretation (of vs. 1-15). The first part of our Lord's discourse is to the crowd (26-40), and the second part (today's) to the Jews (41-59). There is nothing so profound as simplicity. Every one understands the meaning of "bread and water", yet, who can fathom the meaning of our Lord's words! The Jews took them literally (52), and so do sacerdotalists; but their value is wholly spiritual. "Leaving the simplicity of Christ, we have elaborated theological sciences and intricate creeds. We have worked out cunning symbolisms; we have filled the church with incense, with garments of many colors and with many significances. We have called councils and synods and congresses. We have contributed a splendid hierarchy with mitres and crooks, and clothing with precious gold and glaring with ardent coloring. We have formed long processions of . . . doctors and deans and eminences and holiness—yet Jesus called Himself Bread and Water." He came from the Father, went to the Father, and alone interprets the Father. We do not know Jesus by knowing God, but we know God by knowing Jesus. The manna in the wilderness was typical. Christ is the reality of which that was the symbol. The trouble is that people stumble at the manner of the Divine manifestation (42). God revealed and reveals Himself in ways familiar to us and understandable. The Incarnation, together with its purpose, is the key alike to history and philosophy. Have you eaten that Bread and drunk of that Water? Discussing them will not save, but appropriation and assimilation will.

Today's Thought: "Eat, O Friends; Drink, Yea, Drink Abundantly, O Beloved "(Cant. 5:1).

Friday, March 2—St. John 6:60-71.

Subject-Title: Diverse Results.

THE MESSAGE.

The remainder of this chapter is occupied with the effects of Jesus' Discourse, first, upon professed disciples (60-66), and then, upon the chosen twelve (67-71). Look at the first of these. The Master never trimmed His message to keep the crowd: would that His followers had never done so. When He saw that some who professed to be His disciples (60-66) stumbled at His teaching (61), He knew that the real difficulty was not intellectual, but spiritual (64). The final rejection of Christ is never due to want of mind, but to want of faith. Make a note of that. Christ wants true friends, not a loosely attached crowd. There are always people who are true only as long as the trough is full; who are ready to cancel all the obligations of the past on account of a difficulty in the present. The strength of a church is not in the length of its members' roll. I know of a church which had a revival after some people had left it. Now look at the effect of this Discourse upon the Twelve (67-71). Jesus was prepared to be left alone. When He saw the people melting away, He asked the Twelve if they were going, too. He does not want to do without you and me, but He can. It is to our advantage to have Him, not to His to have us. You are not doing God a favor by accepting the Gospel; He is doing you a favor by offering it. Well, if we who profess to be Christ's disciples leave Him, to whom shall we go? We must always take into account the alternatives. Compare this great confession of Peter's (68, 69) with that other in Matt. 16. What a mystery Judas was and is (70, 71)!

THE MESSAGE.

Let us stop a moment to regain the perspective of this record. The Life Announced 1:19 to 2:22), and Acknowledged (2:23 to 4:54), and Antagonized (5 to 12); and in this last division the Controversy is first Aroused (5:1-18), then Developed (5:19 to 10), and then Concluded (11 and 12). Under the section, The Controversy Developed, we see The Life Despised (5, 6); The Light Refused (7-9); and The Love Outraged (10). Now, you can easily see where today's portion falls. In ch. 6 the teaching follows the miracle, but here it precedes it, the teaching on Light being given in chs. 7, 8, and the illustration following in ch. 9. Between chs. 6 and 7, a period of seven months has elapsed, and from now on Jesus is devoting Himself mainly to His disciples. It may be said that in chs. 1-6 we see mainly the development of belief, but in chs. 7-12, of unbelief. Our chapter is in three parts, circling round the Feast of Tabernacles: 1-13, Before the Feast; 14-36, During the Feast; 37-52, End of the Feast. 1. Before the Feast (1-13). Observe here why Jesus could not continue to teach in Judaea (1); the attitude of His brothers towards Him (2-10); and the diverse opinions concerning Him among the people at Jerusalem (11-13). It is a sad and tragic fact that some who were nearest the light were most blind (5). Have you unsaved brothers and sisters who make it difficult for you at home? Then, for your comfort, remember that Jesus also had such. The Master's life was directed by the will of the Father, and He here tells of a divinity of chronology (6-8). God is never before His time, and is never behind. Sometimes we err in being too quick, and sometimes in being too slow. There is an hour for everything. Christ has always been a problem (12); opinion has always been divided about Him. One of the dominating questions in every generation is, What think ye of Christ? The "good" will not "deceive", and deceivers are not good.

FROM BISHOP TUCKER.

Mr. Editor:

In the Southern Churchman of January 21st there is an editorial criticizing the seminaries of our Church in general and "a certain seminary" in particular. The references made to "a certain seminary" indicate that by it is meant "The Protestant Episcopal Seminary in Virginia". The Southern Churchman is of course a privately owner journal without any official connection with the General Church or with the Virginia Diocese. It has, however, been published for so many years in Richmond that the people of Virginia Dioceses have come to regard it with the same kind of affection which they feel for their institutions. They take for granted that whatever it says about the work of the Church in the Virginias will be based upon full and accurate information. I feel sure that the writer of the editorial in the issue of January 21 has been misinformed as to some of the facts upon which his criticism is based. He speaks of the time when many of the students of the Seminary went out to found mission stations, but says that now with modernist teaching supplanting the old Gospel, we must stdly write Ichabod, for its glory has departed. May I call your attention to the fact that during the past two sessions ten men went out from the Seminary to the Foreign Mission field, a record that is unequalled in any other two-year period since the Seminary was founded. Moreover, I can testify from personal experience that the men who go out to the foreign field from the Seminary have a message and can win souls. I preached for many years in Japan the Gospel as I learned it at the Seminary and as it is being taught there at the present time. I have seen during those years many other Seminary men come to China and Japan and preach the same Gospel. The effect produced in the lives of Chinese and Japanese proved it to be the power of God unto salvation. May I say in conclusion that I have direct personal knowledge of the teaching that is being given the students at the Seminary. It is not Unitarian in tendency. The professors understand, believe and teach the full Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ as this Church hath received the same. They are men who have themselves "led souls to Christ". So far as my knowledge goes, the tone of the spiritual life at the Seminary was never higher. It doubtless has its faults and problems, but in my opinion it does not deserve the kind of criticism expressed in the editorial of your issue of January 21st.

LAWLESSNESS.

Mr. Editor:

Just a few words to commend your article on page 5 of the Southern Churchman of the issue February 11. It is strong, true and timely. I cannot understand how the Bishop of New York or the Presiding Bishop can let that kind of lawlessness pass without taking some action.

Thank you for saying forcibly what I am sure 999 out of every thousand members of the Church endorse.

Book Reviews

CHRIST AT THE ROUND TABLE: Abingdon Press, New York. Price $1.50.

One comes to write about this latest book of Stanley Jones as if standing on holy ground, realizing that the author has indeed been with Jesus and learned of Him.

The title of the book is at first blush a little displeasing, but we soon discover in it an old acquaintance under a new name, but safeguarded from being talked to death, as was said in apparent truth of the aforetime "experience meetings". As he reverently and interestingly unfolds the different phases of the subject, in his deductions and conclusions from these experiences of the Round Table, this feeling wholly disappears and one is lost in wonder and admiration at the splendid and informative manner in which the whole subject is treated.

As the reviewer reads each chapter he thinks this is the one which will be most helpful to the general reader, but as they pass in review he finds it difficult to determine which is best, and winds up by heartily recommending the whole book and urging its use for Lent reading.

"Conversion" at once claims and holds the attention. "Almost" is belief compelling and "Interpreters of Christ" is heart searching, and causes one to ask what are we doing at home as sincere interpreters.

The people about whom he writes are treated with tender regard for their feelings, which is not the case, it is said, in the book, "Mother India". His strictures on missions are true of more places than India, and his words might be heeded to the advantage and advancement of all missionary undertakings. He treats the subject sympathetically, and if he rebukes, he rebukes in love. We predict again as wide reading for this book as was given to the Christ of the Indian Road.

DIOCESAN CONVENTIONS

DULUTH.

"If we are to advance," said Bishop Bennett in his address before the thirty-third annual convention of his Diocese, held at Trinity Cathedral, Duluth, January 24, "it is requisite that we pause a moment to see that we build wisely and well as we go. We have gathered to take such account of our hopes and actions—to see that our plans are rested on God's purpose rather than our own desires. It is difficult to really judge success or failure on the basis of statistics—we can but gather from them some idea of the effort expended. Too much pride of quantity is apt to be at the expense of the quality of our work. I hope and pray that we may go forth from this convention with a deeper sense of stewardship, a finer appreciation of fellowship, and a greater joy that we have a part in the lovely and profitable work of trying to bring His Kingdom of love and hope into a bewildered world. Let us face this year with joy and gladness for our opportunities, with a deeper faith in God and therefore a deeper faith in our fellowmen. Let us take our ministry, whether lay or clerical—not as a task, but as a challenge and a privilege."

The largest delegation in the history of the Diocese was in attendance. The Bishop was the celebrant at the opening service, assisted by the Very Rev. Gilbert Good, Dean of the Cathedral, and the Rev. W. K. Boyle, missionary-at-large in the Indian field. Mr. Boyle is the only native superintendent of Indian work in the Church.

The Rev. F. G. Deis, representing the National Council, addressed a joint meeting of convention and the Woman's Auxiliary on Tuesday afternoon.

The Bishop of the Diocese preached the convention sermon at the evening mass service, using as his topic "A Church Awake". The service was read by the Rev. G. G. Curtis, Virginia, and the Rev. H. J. Wolner, Cloquet.

The officers of the Diocese were generally re-elected. The Very Rev. Gilbert K. Good was elected secretary, succeeding the Rev. James Mills, now Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, who had served in that capacity, with distinction, for seven years. The Rev. E. C. Biller, the Rev. Oscar Lindstrom, Mr. Harry Dixon and Dr. A. L. McDonald were added to the Standing Committee. Mr. J. A. Davison and Mr. B. Murray Peyton were added to the Board of Trustees. The Rev. E. C. Biller, the Rev. Austin Pardue and Mr. J. H. Gemmell were added to the Executive Council. Mr. C. Powell Grady, Jr., was unanimously re-elected treasurer.

The following were elected as deputies to the General Convention in Washington:

Clerical—Rev. W. K. Boyle, Cass Lake; Rev. Austin Pardue, Hibbing; Rev. Robert J. Long, Brainerd; Rev. E. C. Biller, St. Cloud.

Lay—Messrs. F. W. Paine, Duluth; J. H. Gemmell, Brainerd; J. F. Gordon, Duluth; C. K. Dickerman, Duluth.

Alternates.

Clerical—Very Rev. Gilbert Good, Duluth; Rev. Manfred Lilliefors, Ph. D., Hibbing; Rev. S. J. Hedelund, Moorhead; Rev. Donald G. Smith, Little Falls.

Lay—Messrs. B. F. Mackall, Moorhead; J. A. MacKillican, Hibbing; G. H. Alexander, Hibbing; James A. Brown, Fergus Falls.

Examining chaplains elected were: Rev. Oscar Lindstrom, Rev. Manfred Lilliefors, Ph. D., Rev. Donald G. Smith.

The goal set by Bishop Bennett a few years ago was again mentioned: The division of the Diocese, an Endowment Fund of not less than $100,000 for mission work in the Diocese, the completion of the Indian School at Cass Lake, and last, but by no means least, the payment in full of the apportionment for the Church's Program to the General Church.

Although no vote was taken on the matter, the eligibility of women to serve on vestries was discussed. "Under the canons of the Diocese of Duluth," Bishop Bennett said, "women are eligible to serve on vestries."

INDIANAPOLIS.

The ninety-first annual convention of the Diocese, which was held on January 25 and 26, was well attended and enthusiastic. The sessions were held in Christ Church, Indianapolis. There were 255 Churchmen and Churchwomen from all parts of the Diocese at the annual Diocesan dinner. The Bishop delivered his annual address. The Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, executive secretary of the Department of Publicity of the National Council and editor of "The Spirit of Missions", roused the audience to a high feeling of responsibility for the Church's Program by an eloquent speech.

The name of the annual meeting was changed from "Annual Council" to "Annual Convention"; and the name of the "Bishop's Cabinet" was changed to "The Diocesan Council". The date of the annual parish meetings was changed to the second Wednesday in January. The convention provided for the appointment of a committee to report at the next convention in regard to the increasing of the Diocesan Endowment.

The following were elected officers of the Diocese for 1928: Treasurer, Mr. H. W. Buttolph; Secretary, Ven. William Burrows; Standing Committee, Ven. William Burrows, Rev. E. Ainger Powell, Rev. George G. Burbanck, Mr. William W. Hammond, Mr. Charles E. Judson, Mr. Louis Howland; Trustees, Mr. U. H. Smith, Mr. George B. Schley, Mr. R. H. Sherwood, Mr. Albert L. Rabb, Mr. H. M. Johnson; Members of the Diocesan Council, Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, Mr. U. H. Smith; Deputies to the General Convention, Ven. William Burrows, Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, Rev. John E. Sulger, Rev. E. Ainger Powell, Mr. William W. Hammond, Mr. F. D. Rose, Mr. Charles E. Judson, Mr. Frank P. McNutt; Alternate Delegates, Rev. George G. Burbanck, Rev. A. E. Cole, Mr. John P. Mallett, Mr. Paul Comstock, Mr. William Tobias.

LEXINGTON.

One of the largest councils of the Diocese was held in St. John's Church, Versailles, Ky., February 6 to 9.

A preliminary meeting in the interest of "Evangelism" was held on the night of the 6th, when Bishop Darst, of East Carolina, in an inspiring address on "Evangelism" presented the work of the "Bishop's Crusade" and what it has done; as also the need for a continuance of the crusade and how it could be done.

On the night of the 7th the Rev. John Gass, of Charleston, W. Va., representing the National Council, represented the "Church's Program".

The Bishop of the Diocese delivered a charge, his subject being: The Place and Function of the Laity in the Church.

Elections: Deputies to the General Convention:

Principal Deputies.

Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., Lexington, Ky.; Rev. Charles S. Hale, Ashland, Ky.; Rev. Frank E. Cooley, 28 East Fifth Street, Newport, Ky.; Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, Frankfort, Ky.; Mr. A. C. Hunter, Versailles, Ky.; Mr. C. M. Harbison, Lexington, Ky.; Mr. W. W. Pettis, Fort Thomas, Ky.; Mr. George R. Hunt, Lexington, Ky.

Alternate Deputies.

Rev. C. M. Lever, Pikeville, Ky.; Rev. A. Patterson, Beattyville, Ky.; Ven. F. B. Wentworth, Winchester, Ky.; Rev. E. J. Saywell, Middlesboro, Ky.; Mr. A. D. Cole, Maysville, Ky.; Mr. B. G. Crosby, Versailles, Ky., R. F. D.; Mr. J. A. Edge, Lexington, Ky.; Mr. C. C. Frishe, Covington, Ky., Latonia Station.

Standing Committee—Very. Rev. R. K. Massie, Rev. C. S. Hale, Rev. William Der, Dr. W. B. McClure, Mr. W. W. Pettis and Mr. George K. Graves.

The secretary and treasurer were re-elected, as also a number of other officers and committees, with a few changes.

A resolution to abolish the Cathedral Chapter, and in its place to set up a "Bishop and Council", was referred to the Committee on Canons to report to the next Council.

Pikeville, an unorganized mission, was admitted into union with the Council as an organized mission.

A new Endowment Fund Commission was elected and will proceed to the raising of funds to increase the present amount of the Episcopate Endowment Fund.

A letter from the treasurer of the National Council, Mr. L. B. Franklin, to the Bishop of the Diocese, expressing the appreciation of the National Council for the full payment of the budget quota assigned the Diocese for 1927, was read.

A resolution was adopted recommending that the canons of the Diocese be so amended that one deputy from the W. A. and the G. F. S. of the Diocese be given full membership in the Council.

Mrs. Anna Ernberg, of Berea College, addressed the Council Wednesday afternoon on her work, as also the work of the college.

The services of the Council were held in St. John's Church; the business sessions in the gymnasium of Margaret Hall, the Diocesan School for Girls.

PITTSBURGH.

The sixty-third annual convention of the Diocese of Pittsburgh assembled in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, on January 24, 1928. There was a short service, at which the Bishop delivered his annual address, after which the president called the convention to order.

The convention assembled Wednesday morning for the service of Holy Communion. The business session was called to order by the president at 10 A. M. At this time the several committees presented their reports without debate.

The elections to the various offices and committees resulted as follows: Executive Secretary, the Rev. Homer A. Flint; Registrar, Rev. C. A. Thomas. The Rev. W. H. Anthony, Rev. T. Teisen, Messrs. V. L. P. Shriver, R. J. Rodgers, G. B. Demms and E. W. Mudge were named to the Diocesan Council.

The Committee on Canons is: The Rev. W. N. Clapp, Rev. R. N. Meade. The new officers elected are the Rev. W. F. Shero, of the clergy, and Messrs. J. W. Chalfant, E. Z. Smith and W. J. Blakeley, laymen. Judge Joseph W. Bruffington was made head of the Church court. The Board of Trustees include Judge J. J. Miller, D. R. Oliver, Herbert DuPuy, J. W. Bowman, Dr. T. W. Grayson, A. K. Oliver, J. C. Sheriff, W. R. Carr, Uniontown; G. R. Orr, Beaver Falls, and George Titzel, Kittanning. The Standing Committee comprises the following clergy: The Rev. J. D. Hills, D. D., the Rev. A. C. Howell, D. D., the Rev. W. F. Shero, D. D.; and the Rev. E. J. Van Etten, D. D., and Messrs. C. S. Shoemaker, H. H. McClintic, T. J. Danner and H. L. Mason, Jr., laymen.

The most important subject to be taken up at this convention was the consideration of the offer of the minister, church wardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, to become the Cathedral Church of the Diocese. After the resolution was read by Dr. Hills and seconded by Dr. E. J. Van Etten the opportunity for discussion was given. The president reminded the convention of the importance of this resolution to be passed on by them. The question was put and a vote taken. The entire body (except four) gave a rising vote for the acceptance of this offer of Trinity Church. The Bishop asked the convention to rise while he offered prayer to Almighty God for His blessing upon this undertaking.

An agreement of merger will be made by Trinity Church and the Chapter of Trinity Cathedral, wherein and whereby it will be agreed that Trinity Church will merge with the new corporation and that all of its property, real and personal, whether owned absolutely or in trust, shall pass to the new or merged corporation which shall thereafter be known as the Chapter of Trinity Cathedral Church of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, and which property shall thereafter be held under and subject to the terms of the charter and proposed by-laws as are outlined. A petition for such a merger will have to be presented to the proper court and a decree of court will be obtained.

Those named to effect the Cathedral plan included the following: The Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D.; the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer, Ph. D., rector of Trinity Church; Rev. J. D. Hills, D. D.; Rev. E. J. Van Etten, D. D.; the Rev. H. Boyd Edwards, Rev. R. N. Meade, D. D., Rev. H. F. Shero, D. D., Greensburg; Rev. Homer A. Flint, Ph. D., and the following laymen: H. N. McClintic, W. L. Monro, C. S. Shoemaker, J. E. Brown, E. W. Mudge, G. P. Rhodes, Hill Burgwin, H. L. Mason, Jr., L. D. Blair and A. K. Grubbs.

Coincident with the convening of the convention is the date of the Bishop's fifth year as overseer of the work of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pittsburgh. Many things mark the progress of this Diocese, especially during this period, under the guidance and leadership of Bishop Mann. Not least of these achievements is the report that the Diocese is completely out of debt.

Mr. Ernest G. Chreiman discussed the present situation of the Near East Relief, and the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Overs, S. T. D., made an address concerning the policy of the National Council for the next triennium. Bishop Overs for many years was in charge of the Church in Liberia.

This report would not be complete if mention were not made of an unofficial gathering which has become, one might say, an established custom. After adjournment of the convention the clergy in charge of the missionary work of the Diocese, together with the Diocesan Committee on Missions and the Bishop and several other guests, assembled at the Duquesne Club as dinner guests of Mr. George P. Rhodes, a member of the committee. This is a delightful and informal affair, an occasion when the men who do the work and the men who are behind the work get together and talk. A short account of the work in each mission is usually presented by the missioners, and several of the committee address the men with notes of encouragement and confidence.

The World Is Getting Better.

We quote the following from the Roanoke, Va., World-News:

Preferring to speak on the subject, "Some Recent Advances in American Civilization", rather than "The One Supreme Task of American Democracy and Its Disastrous Failures", Dr. Henry Louis Smith, president of Washington and Lee University, delivered a stirring address before members of the Roanoke Lions' Club at their semi-monthly meeting recently at Hotel Patrick Henry.

With two sides of the picture of American life today fully outlined, the Lexington educator, with forty years' experience in the educational field, selected the rosy phase for presentation.

In the list of ten "Bad Things That Are Diminishing", and in which the university head sees the greatest consolation for this modern age in America, he placed the benefits of prohibition to the front. It was the fifth one reading: "The legalizing and official protection of liquor saloons of bawdy-houses, and of permitted red-light districts, with their debauchery of city politics through graft and lust and liquor."

Drink Bill Decreasing.

He elaborated upon this point as upon no other: "America's drink bill now is about $40,000,000 annually, as estimated by the Department of Commerce. Great Britain's drink bill, with one-third of our population, is $1,225,000,000 per annum." Pointing out that eight or ten rescue homes of the now diminishing red-light district of New York City had been given up a few days ago, he stated that "the crop of down and outers was growing so much smaller that the Salvation Army hardly knows upon what it shall specialize next". He characterized those who pointed out Europe as a continent on which saloons were open and yet on which few persons were ever really drunk as "these foolish, utterly inconceivable ignoramuses" and pointed out that he was speaking as an eye-witness of the conditions in the Old World with its wide-open bars.

Bad Things Diminishing.

The other bad things which he stated are diminishing were:

"1. The poverty, misery and pitiless slavery of the wage-earning classes. These are rapidly growing less with every passing year.

"2. The open hatred and bitter warfare between organized capital and organized labor. These are growing much less hostile, less opposed in economic methods and theories, and strikes are much less frequent.

"3. The neglect or social and legal robbery and oppression of homeless and helpless children and of legally helpless womanhood.

"4. The brutal treatment of prisoners, of convicts, and of the occupants of public almshouses.

"5. The helpless isolation and loneliness of farming families during the winter season. The good roads, rural free delivery, the telephone, the radio, and the automobile have revolutionized country life.

"6. The unchecked ravages of malaria, hookworm, pellagra and typhoid fever, now almost all eradicated.

"7. The customary and openly allowed bribery of State legislators and officers by the railroads through free passes for themselves and their families, now as much past history as dueling and chattel slavery.

"8. The daily dishonesty of having no fixed prices for goods sold in stores, now almost forgotten in this era of fixed selling prices for all customers, however, ignorant or helpless.

"9. The recent eradication of the old-time business panics which regularly shattered business prosperity every six or eight years."

Through with the bad things, most of which he had seen rapidly decreasing in his own lifetime, Dr. Smith turned to the enumeration of fifteen "Good Things Are Rapidly Increasing". The placing of forces at the hands of each American equal to the labor of thirty-five able-bodied slaves and the growing care of the sick, and especially of the sick poor, thus lengthening of the span of life by fifteen years in the past quarter of a century, the educator stressed as especially gratifying. Following is the list:

"1. Our world power as a nation.

"2. Our financial prosperity. Our wealth, income, insurance, savings deposits and loans are all breaking past records every year.

"3. Our distribution of wealth among the wage earning classes. There is an unprecedented increase of wages for everybody.

"4. Our sustained business prosperity in commerce, manufacture, railroads, etc., with no backsets or serious variations.

"5. Our conquest and harnessing of nature's giant forces, thus abolishing grinding manual labor, and adding the energy of a slave population of thirty-five workmen to every citizen of America.

"6. The multiplication of remunerative occupations and professions, open to the energetic and well-prepared men and women in every section of the United States.

"7. The increasing freedom, legal rights and protection, independence and political power of womanhood.

"8. Our new era in transportation and inter-communication—the auto, the radio, the airplane, the highway, the telephone and the phonograph.

"9. The enrichment of the country home life by the introduction of the auto, good winter roads, daily mail, parcel post, rural free delivery, the telephone, victrola, radio, moving pictures, etc.

"10. The increased leisure and recreation and enriched home-life of all classes in both city and country. This is an era of camps, swimming pools, pleasure tours, public libraries, athletic contests, etc., all over the land.

"11. The fraternal movement among all classes—women's clubs, lodges, luncheon clubs, fraternities, church social life, etc.

"12. Growing cooperation between capital and labor and between government and big business, cooperation everywhere beginning to take the place of open hostility and open warfare.

"13. Growing care of the sick, especially the sick-poor, and the lengthening of the active life-period.

"14. Our increasing American philanthropy, now rising to heights of liberality for public service and public institutions and the welfare of others never dreamed of in all human history before the present era.

"15. Our unprecedented educational movement. High schools, colleges, summer schools, correspondence schools, public libraries, county experts, printed information, extension courses, etc., are multiplying at present beyond the wildest dreams of former years.

Children Attending School.

"In 1910 Virginia and North Carolina had about 4,000 or 5,000 boys and girls in all their high schools. Today they have 125,000 in high schools in these two States alone, and these are but illustrations of a nation-wide movement."

National Council Meeting, Feb. 8 and 9.

Of the usual large number of necessary questions which occupied the Council for a day and a half and a long evening, probably the most important dealt with the reductions in appropriations for 1928. The sum which the Dioceses have notified the Council to expect is less than the budget by $700,639. By applying funds available from other sources, this amount was reduced to $232,647, but the only way to meet this latter deficiency was to cut down the work, and this was accordingly done, first in headquarters activities, and then in continental Dioceses and districts and, by a smaller percentage, in the foreign districts. Supplementary contributions, if made, will of course permit these reduced appropriations to be restored.

Legacies received in 1927, available for appropriation at this time, amounted to $66,667.11 designated and $122,028.64 undesignated. From this, appropriations were made for work in nine Dioceses and domestic districts, and a sum was reserved for distribution in the foreign and Latin American fields when further information is received as to needs.

Keen regret is felt at the resignation of the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, executive secretary of the Field Department, after his thirteen years of service at the Church Missions House. He served with the Board of Missions, he was in charge of the headquarters office of the Nation-Wide Campaign in 1919, and he has been in the Field Department since its creation in 1920 and the head of it since 1923. As that department has a definite policy of asking men to give limited terms of service on its staff, Mr. Mitchell felt warranted in asking to be relieved, and the Presiding Bishop and Council regretfully acquiesced. Mr. Mitchell's future plans are not announced, but after a short rest he will probably return to parish work. He is succeeded by the Rev. C. E. Snowden, of Dallas, Tex.

Among a number of new appointments or elections made by the Council was that of the Rev. W. B. Crittenden, of Charlotte, N. C., as a general secretary in the Field Department, for negro work. Mr. Crittenden is a negro whose appointment is approved and desired by those who know him and know the needs of the work among negroes.

Concerning the bill now pending for a greatly enlarged navy, the Social Service Department, having received a communication from the Rev. Dr. Cadman, Mr. George Wickershaw and the Rev. W. P. Merrill, urging an expression of opinion about it, brought to the Council the following resolution which the Council passed, after hearing a brief statement from Mr. Wickersham, who was present at the meeting and was invited by the Presiding Bishop to give information on this subject:

"Resolved, that the National Council desires to bring to the attention of our people the menace to the friendly relations existing between nations at the present time, inherent in the naval bill now pending. We do not believe that so vast an increase is necessary for national defense, and we regard the expense involved as an unwarranted burden upon the tax-payers. In the interests of both peace and economy, while assuring adequate national defense, we hope for a modification of this bill."

Virginia Theological Seminary.

A mid-winter retreat and reunion was held at the Virginia Seminary on the 7th, 8th and 9th of February, to which a considerable number of the alumni returned. Classes were suspended so that students and faculty might take part.

The lectures were delivered by Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Seminary, New York, on the subject, "The Preaching of the Cross".

In his second lecture Dr. Coffin dealt with the motives of Jesus in forcing the issue and bringing about His own death. Why did He feel that His death would further His cause more than His continued life? And why did He also so shrink from the last issue? The cross shows, among other things, that Jesus has known human doubts, human skepticism, human fear, and yet triumphed, "being tempted" in all points like as we are yet without sin". His last lecture dealt with the cross as a revelation of the life and character and methods of God. It teaches us what forgiveness costs God; that God is Love rather than Almighty Judge; that God will go to any length to bring into the way of life those who oppose Him, misunderstand Him, seem to human ideas hopeless. It shows us a suffering God who is partner of man's suffering.

The meditations on the Quiet Day were conducted by Dr. W. H. Jefferys, physician and mystic. He spoke of the need of a direct, first hand knowledge of God.

On the night of the ninth six alumni spoke for fifteen minutes each on the theme, "What My Experience in the Ministry Has Taught Me of the Power of God in Human Lives". These testimonies were the more striking because the men who gave them had all been working in different kinds of places—schools, rural districts, cities, college communities, bishoprics: and because of the great difference in the ages of the speakers. The youngest was a graduate of the class of 1927, working in a Long Island suburb; the oldest, a graduate of the class of 1884, for many years Bishop of West Virginia. It was a remarkable, revealing and inspiring symposium on the ministry.

Not least important was the fellowship among the returning alumni and the present dwellers upon The Hill. The Seminary and all the various members of the faculty kept open house for all who returned.

Educational Conference.

The Educational Conference under the Church Service League and Woman's Auxiliary was held at Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, on February 7, 8 and 9. The conference opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop Helfenstein celebrating, assisted by Dr. Abbott and Rev. Edmund Gibson. Luncheon was served in the parish house. The after luncheon speaker was Dean Theodore Ludlow, secretary for Adult Education, National Council. He also had a round table for men that evening. Wednesday and Thursday mornings Miss Boyer led the class for leaders for the Mission Study classes. She repeated her talk in the evenings for those unable to attend the morning lectures. Miss Sturges, president of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, spoke both afternoons on Prayer. Three hundred and thirty-nine registered for the conference, against 201 last year, thirty-eight parishes being represented. Mrs. Hartmen K. Harrison, Educational Secretary for the Church Service League and the Woman's Auxiliary, deserves the thanks of the women of Maryland for planning this conference and procuring such splendid speakers.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Sons of the Revolution.

The Society of the Sons of the Revolution held its annual church service in commemoration of George Washington on Sunday afternoon, February 19, in Epiphany Church. The services were conducted by Rev. Thomas E. Green, chaplain of the society, assisted by the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., D. C. L., and the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., Dean of Washington Cathedral and Governor of the Society of Colonial Wars in the District of Columbia. The sermon was preached by the Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding

Bishop and Bishop of Maryland. The standards of the Sons of the Revolution, with replicas of prominent flags of the War of the Revolution, were features of the occasion. Members of the society who died during the past year were commemorated by the honorary president of the Sons of the Revolution.

The order of service was prepared by the late Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., former chaplain of the Sons of the Revolution, and was set forth for this purpose, with the approval of the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, second Bishop of Washington. This service is very beautiful and an inspiration to all who take part in it.

All members of organizations affiliated with the District of Columbia Federation for Patriotic Observance and any other people who were interested were invited and urged to attend.

Rt. Rev. Rhinelander to Address Sunday-School Institute.

Bishop Rhinelander, superintendent of the College of Preachers of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, will be the speaker at the Sunday-School Institute of the Diocese of Washington, February 28, at 8 P. M., in St. John's Parish Hall, Sixteenth and H Streets. Vice President Rev. Enoch M. Thompson, vicar of the Chapel of the Incarnation, will preside.

Twenty-first Annual Council.

The first trial of the winter meeting of the Council of the Diocese of Atlanta, which took place in St. Peter's Church, Rome, on January 25-26, proved a success, as there were only four less lay delegates than at the spring meeting of last year. The great advantage of having the session at the beginning of the year was evidenced by the interest shown not only in the matters of the previous year, which were fresh in mind, but also in the making provision for the work of the coming year. The Rev. F. H. Harding was reelected secretary of the diocese, and appointed the Rev. J. D. C. Wilson as assistant secretary.

The usual reports made by the committees and officers were of a satisfactory nature.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Mr. Robert C. Alston, D. C. L., Chancellor of the Diocese; the Rev. Thomas Duck, Registrar of the Diocese; Mr. MacD. Dexter, Treasurer of the Diocese, and Mr. Thomas H. Austin, Sr., Treasurer of the National-Wide Campaign Fund.

Miss Thomas, Executive Secretary of the Church Periodical Club, addressed the council on the work of that organization.

Dr. Benj. F. Finney, Vice-Chancellor of the University of the South, was present at the meeting of the council and addressed the members on the work of the University.

Noonday Lenten Services.

Announcement was made February 12 of the special preachers of Philadelphia and other cities who will make the addresses at the noonday Lenten services in the Garrick Theatre, Old Christ Church and Old St. Stephen's hurch, which services have been outstanding features in the central city district in connection with the observances or the Lenten season.

The Garrick Theatre services, as usual, will be under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and those at Christ Church and St. Stephen's under parish direction. It has been estimated that upwards of 100,000 persons employed in the city's business center attend the noonday Lenten services during the religious season of Lent.

Bishop Garland will open the series at St. Stephen's on Ash Wednesday. The Rt. Rev. Julius W. Atwood, former Bishop of Arizona, will begin the Garrick Theatre services, and the Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Old Christ Church, will officiate at the opening services in that historic place of worship.

Visiting bishops and clergy who will preach during Lent at one or more of the services in the Garrick Theatre or the churches include also the Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, Bishop-Coadjutor of Bethlehem; Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, Bishop of Easton; Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church; Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, Bishop of Duluth; Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware; Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop of Central New York; Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, Bishop of Kentucky; Rev. Allan P. Shatford, Church of St. James the Apostle, Montreal; Rev. J. Howard Melish, Holy Trinity, Brooklyn; Rev. Walter B. Capers, St. Andrew's, Jackson, Miss.; Rev. Luke M. White, St. Luke's, Montclair, N. J.; Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, Order Holy Cross, West Park, N. Y.

Diocesan Preaching Mission.

Six among the foremost Bishops of the Episcopal Church in the United States are to be special preachers on Thursday nights in Lent, beginning February 23, at a "Diocesan Preaching Mission" to be held in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, Thirteenth Street below Spruce, Philadelphia.

The Preaching Mission has been arranged under direction of Bishop Garland, and a special committee of his clergy of the Diocese as part of the continuation work of the Bishops' Crusade in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Several recent conferences of the clergy resulted in the clergy of congregations in more than sixty parishes in Philadelphia and other parts of the Diocese cooperating to give Diocesan emphasis to the continuation work and to extend its influence through the Preaching Mission to be conducted by the Bishops.

In addition, various Diocesan organizations also are lending their cooperation to the aims and purposes of the Preaching Mission. These include the Church Club of Philadelphia, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Churchwoman's Club, the Pennsylvania Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Girls' Friendly Society and Daughters of the King. The student body of the Philadelphia Divinity School and of the Church Training and Deaconesses House will also participate in the mission.

The six Bishops who are to do the special preaching are as follows:

February 23—Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, Bishop of Easton.

March 1—Rt. Rev. Frank William Sterrett, Bishop-Coadjutor of Bethlehem.

March 8—Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware.

March 15—Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, Bishop of Duluth.

March 22—Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop of Central New York.

March 29.—Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, Bishop of Kentucky.

St. Luke and the Epiphany Church was selected because of its convenient central location and its size. In cooperation with the plans of Bishop Garland and the committee of the clergy, the Rev. Dr. Steele, rector of the church, has tendered the full use of all his parish facilities. The mission services will begin each night at 8 o'clock.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. D. Wing, D. D., Coadjutor.

Quiet Day.

Through the arrangement of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism, a "Quiet Day" for the clergy of South Florida was held in Holy Cross Church, Sanford, on February 9, by the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D.

The Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Wing and the first meditation by Bishop Maxon was on "Some Principles and Problems of the Priesthood".

A conference on the "Preaching Mission" was led by Bishop Maxon in the afternoon, discussing in detail the preparation for such mission, the mission period and the follow-up work.

Members of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism held a conference following the "Quiet Day" sessions, to consider methods for the effective development in South Florida of the plans of the National Commission.

Bishop Maxon went from Sanford to Miami, where he is holding a Preaching Mission in Trinity Church, beginning February 12 (Rev. Robert T. Phillips, rector).

Bishop Woodcock is holding a similar mission in St. Andrew's Church, Tampa, February 12-19 (Rev. Willis G. Clark, rector).

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Magruder at Christ Church Cathedral.

The Rev. James M. Magruder, D. D., of Annapolis, Maryland, was wired to by Bishop Burton to come to the Cathedral in Lexington to take charge of the services and work in its parish, on account of the serious illness of Dean Massie. It was hoped that Dr. Magruder would remain for six months, until the Dean, who has begun a very hopeful recovery, was sufficiently restored in strength to take up the services.

It was with personal and family sacrifices that Dr. Magruder obeyed the summons at all. He came for the first Sunday in November and remained until the first of the New Year. Going home for a brief stay, he returned for another month, that of January. He however, felt obliged to return to his own diocese and home on the first of February.

Dr. Magruder, with exquisite tact and with the exercise of real ability and industry, not only met the regular duties of the Cathedral, but won for himself, universally, praise, affection and gratitude.

The Dean is recovering so rapidly and materially, that it is expected that he will shortly be able to resume his work with the help of an assistant, which has been arranged for by the vestry.

Collect for First Sunday in Lent.

O Lord, Who for our sake didst fast forty days and forty nights; Give us grace to use such abstinence, that our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey Thy godly motions in righteousnss, and true holiness, to Thy honor and glory, Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Love Bade Me Welcome.

"Love bade me welcome; yet my soul drew back,
Guilty of dust and sin.
But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack
From my first entrance in;
Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning,
If I lacked anything.

"'A guest,' I answered, 'worthy to be here';
Love said, 'You shall be he'.
'I the unkind, ungrateful? Ah, my dear,
I cannot look on Thee.'
Love took my hand, and smiling did reply,
'Who made the eyes but I'?

"'Truth, Lord, but I have marr'd them; let my shame
Go where it doth deserve.'
'And know you not,' says Love; 'who bore the blame?'
'My dear, then I will serve.'
'You must sit down, says Love, 'and taste my meat,'
So I did sit and eat."

—George Herbert.

Inadequate Explanations of Christ.

It is always important that we consider the opposition. Truth is not the monopoly of any school or party, and those that oppose us may catch a glimpse of it from a different angle or emphasize an aspect of it that we are neglecting. Jesus Christ is a fact that cannot be overlooked in any view of history. He fills the horizon of the centuries, and no eye can be blind to His presence and significance. What view have unbelievers taken of Him, how have they fitted Him into the frame of history and accounted for His extraordinary personality and power? In general it can be said they have been profoundly impressed with the problem of His character and influence, and their inadequate explanations are a wonderful tribute to Him.

These perverted or inadequate explanations of Christ began during His own life and ministry. Many were the judgments passed upon Him by unbelieving or hostile contemporaries, more than sixty of these being recorded in the Gospels. They form an illuminating study and throw a flood of light upon Jesus from many points of view. The wonder of His person and power began at once. "Is not this the carpenter?" "How knoweth this man letters, never having learned?" "Whence hath this man these things?" "He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of devils He casteth out devils." 'This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." "Away with Him, crucify Him." "I find no fault in this man." "Never man spake like this man." "Truly this was the Son of God." This babel of conflicting voices is impressive testimony to the fact that Jesus was a wonder and mystery these hostile Jews could not comprehend; and amidst it all Christ stands, a calm and sublime Figure, immeasurably transcending their little theories, only heightened by the contrast of their petty views and spirit.

In due time came an eminent English historian who, in writing the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, encountered Christianity as a fact to be explained. He was deeply impressed with the rapid spread of the Christian religion in the ancient world and with its triumph after the bloody trial to which it had been subjected. In explanation of this strange fact he adduced five causes and elaborates them with all the resources of his profound learning and his polished literary art. His five causes are: The zeal of the Jews, the Christian doctrine of immortality, the miraculous powers of the primitive Church, the virtues of the first Christians, and the activity of the Christians in the government of the Church. These causes, like some of the unconscious tributes of the hostile Jews, are highly complimentary to Christianity and put bright crowns on the brow of Christ. It was early pointed out, however, that these things are the consequences and not the causes of Christianity, and are the very things to be explained. They are fruits that demand some worthy root, and this can be found only in Jesus Christ. The sceptical historian simply begged the question and left the problem unsolved.

About ninety years ago appeared David Strauss' mythical theory of the origin of the Christian tradition, which at first made a great noise in the world, and some thought the heavens of Christian faith were passing away. Strauss looked into the origin of Christianity and found a myth. A myth is a story that gradually grows up in explanation of an event until its real origin is forgotten. On this theory Jesus lived and taught and gathered some disciples, but his death disappointed them. However, they were men of Oriental imagination and dreams, and their desires were the seeds of stories that grew with the years into all the teachings, miracles and events of the Gospels. According to this theory, Christianity created Christ, the shadows made the Alps. The theory died long before its author, because a myth takes generations for its growth, and Christianity sprang up quickly.

Ferdinand Baur, another great German scholar, looked into the origin of Christianity, and what did he think he found? He found the disciples of Jesus divided into two camps, the Petrine and the Pauline. The former maintained that Christianity was only an improved Judaism for the Jews alone, and the latter that it was a universal religion for the Gentile as well as the Jew. These two "tendencies" generated all the literature of the New Testament, and wrote every Gospel and Epistle in support of one or the other theory. So these conflicting parties created Christ This was like explaining Napoleon by the quarrels of his generals or Abraham Lincoln by the jealousies of the members of his cabinet. This theory had its little day and melted away like morning mist. Yet these German scholars rendered a great service to Biblical scholarship, for they initiated the historical study of the life of Christ that has signally enriched Christian faith.

Renan, the French soldier and literary artist, wrote his Life of Christ after the fashion of a French novelist. He painted the life of Jesus as the "sweet Galilean vision" of one in whom "tenderness of heart was transformed into an infinite sweetness, a vague poetry, a universal charm". Renan indulges in glowing descriptions and eulogies and at times his poetry becomes rhapsody; yet he dissolves the Gospel history into a legend in which fact and fiction are so interblended that the line between them cannot be distinctly drawn. His legendary theory differs from Strauss' mythical theory only in degree and not in kind; it allows rather more historical substance, but that substance is still misty, though it may be a glorious cloud.

The modern Unitarian view of Christ is that he is a supreme religious leader of men, the finest outflowering and topmost blossom of the race. In him God had revealed Himself most fully and splendidly and he is therefore the Light of the world. But Unitarianism views Jesus as only one more of his human kind, surpassingly good and beautiful, it is true, but still only a man. The adherents of this form of faith have embraced many eminent literary men and people of culture, and many of their leaders have been foremost in their tributes to Christ. Unitarians also exhibit the Christian virtues in a praiseworthy degree, and many of their leaders have been men of the most beautiful character. Yet they take only a partial view of His person and quietly or openly erase all miracles out of His life and supernatural elements out of His person and reduce the Gospel to a pale ethical culture. While Unitarianism has had a modifying effect upon trinitarian theology, yet it has made no considerable impression and progress. It is good and beautiful as far as it goes, but it will ever remain an inadequate explanation of Christ.

The fallacy of all these theories is that they put the consequences in place of the cause. Christ is created by Christianity, or by its biographers, or by legend; the stream gives birth to the fountain, the building holds up the foundation. This is the reversal of the order of cause and effect and of all historical explanation. His biographers did not create Washington, but Washington created his biographers; the shadows did not make the Alps, but the Alps cast the shadows. The stupendous fabric of Christianity must have some worthy origin and sufficient cause. The stream of Christianity has broadened with the ages, and it is against all analogy and reason to suppose that it originated in a swamp or a fog. Myth and legend and divisions among its disciples are wholly inadequate to create the sharp historical personality and concrete literature we find at the origin of Christianity. Back of all this history and achievement must be a cause large enough and divine enough to match them, and this we find only in the historical life and divine person of Christ. Christianity did not create Christ, but Christ created Christianity.—Presbyterian Banner.

The Joy of Christ.

"It was inward joy that our Lord meant when He spoke in the upper room of 'My joy', for where was joy in the outward? Deserted by the crowds that once had followed Him, with a handful of friends ignorant and selfish, and half-hearted at best, and one of them plotting His deliverance to relentless enemies—what outlook had one flash of joy for Him? Ah! but He could see through things to God's purpose and the coming victory. He could read music from the score without an instrument and have songs without words in His heart. By the vision of faith He saw the invisible, and for the joy that was in Him and the joy set before Him, endured the cross and despised the shame, and this is the joy He wills His disciples to have—"My joy shall remain in you." What prospect of joy had those friends who sat with Him that night? To be hated for His name's sake, to be persecuted, to be killed, and yet to have Christ's joy filling their hearts! This is the triumph of the eternal, the possession of heaven, though spoiled of earthly good; the health of the soul, though the outward man perish.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

An Eternal Fact.

Christ is an historic fact, an artistic fact, an ethical fact, but best of all, He is a fact of consciousness. Even more than memory, hope, peace, love or joy, was Christ a fact of consciousness to Paul. What a difference it made. It made him the soldier, the statesman, the saint. It colored all his life, in shipwreck, in prison, in death. Paul understood words, and he knew that Jesus promised His presence with His people in a tense which covers all present and all future time. Jehovah said to Moses, "I am that I am". Jesus Christ says to us, "I am". So He is an eternal fact.—C. C. Albertson.

"Having Ears, They Hear Not: Having Eyes, They See Not."

Gene Scott Wright.

This man stone-blind from birth has seen.
I talk to him of sunset skies,
And of the rose's satin sheen
Of mountains in the distance seen—
The night-sky with its thousand eyes.
He hears with unresponsive sigh.
Alas, he lacks the seeing eye!

And to he deaf how still more vain
My rapture over music's charms.
He sees me captive to the strain
Of master hand by master brain—
Beethoven, Mendelssohn or Brahms.
He sees the instrument, the player,
But ah, he lacks the hearing ear!

Or else perchance he is asleep—
The difference is degree, not kind.
How idle then for us to weep
That he should still indifference keep—
Deep sleep makes men both deaf and blind.
If we can rouse him, he may know
The sights and sounds that bless us so.

And so God's Spirit wooes in vain
The soul whose spirit ears are sealed,
Whose spirit eyes fast closed remain,
And yet who, boastful, will maintain
"I see, I hear"! nor reverence yield.
How can he see—how can he hear—
When he has closed both eye and ear?

Who gives but what he'll never miss
Will never know what giving is.
—Edgar Guest.

Playmates.

"O little Lord Jesus,
If only you'd play
With me just one hour,
I'm sure I would stay
Gentle and good all the rest of the day."

But little Lord Jesus shook His head.
"You must play with some lonely child instead—
Some lonely child who is friendless and shy—
And then you'll be playing with Me, you see,
For the loneliest child in the world was I!"

"O little Lord Jesus,
If you'd only walk
Just a little with me,
My thoughts and talk
Would fly straight up, like the lark and hawk."

But little Lord Jesus shook His head.
"You must walk with some crippled child instead—
Some crippled child who, alone, might fall—
And then you'll be walking the way with Me,
For mine was the stoniest road of all!"

"O little Lord Jesus,
If only you'd sup
Just once with me,
My platter would always be filled up,
And I never would find an empty cup."

But little Lord Jesus shook His head.
"You must sup with some hungry child instead—
A child with no place at the table spread—
And then you'll be feasting with Me, you see,
For I was the Babe that had no bed!"

"O little Lord Jesus,
If you'd just stay near,
When the dark night comes—
So when I called you'd surely hear—
I could go to sleep with never a fear."

Then little Lord Jesus nodded and smiled.
"I'll tell you a secret, foolish child—
The greatest secret of all," said he:
"The minute you call to Me in the dark,
I am there, as close as close can be!"
—Pauline Carrington Borwe in Zion's Herald.

Polly's "Choose" Story.

"Well, what do you choose to have your story about tonight?" asked Mother.

Polly wrinkled her nose and squinted her eyes, because that was the way she could think better. "Let's see," she began, "I choose a knight—and a little boy and a peck of potatoes and—um, some cows."

"Oh," said Mother, "you want a story about a knight of the olden days, do you?"

"Yes, all about the olden days when you were a girl, Mother," exclaimed Polly, who was eight years old and thought it must have been a long time ago when her mother was that age.

Polly's mother told her "choose" stories as they called them—whatever Polly chose, her mother had to put into the story.

Mother smiled and said, "My, those are hard choices tonight. Let me think—" Then she began her story.

Well, you see, there was once a handsome knight who rode on a snow white charger and protected the land against robbers and enemies. He was loved by the good people and feared by the bad because of his justness and bravery.

Now in his village dwelt a little boy whose name was Thomas. Thomas was a poor boy and lived with his mother in a cottage beside the meadow. In the meadow were pastured many cows that belonged to a rich squire of the land. Thomas watched the cows munching the green clover and thought of what fine milk they were making. But his mother was poor and could not keep a cow to make milk for her little boy. She did have a small garden in the yard, though, and here she had planted some potatoes. It was Thomas' pride and joy to weed and hoe the green vines and to water them every day and watch them grow.

In those olden days you must know there was much sickness in the land. The poor people did not have enough to eat and the rich had too much, which is often just as bad for one's health.

Mother looked at Polly and Polly grinned, for she remembered Thanksgiving Day, when she had had a dreadful pain and had had to take castor oil.

Mother went on with the story:

Now Thomas and his mother did not have enough to eat, while the fat squire had far too much. Thomas would watch the squire's man milking the cows and long for some of the white creamy milk. He knew that much of it would go to the pigs to make them fat and rich for the fat and rich squire to eat. The squire's man looked out from under his broad farmer's hat and saw the little boy's longing eyes peering over the fence at him. But he dared not talk to him or give him a drop of milk. He feared the squire, who was a hard master with never a kind word for anybody. He would not allow his workmen to talk or chatter in the manner of friendly people.

Poor little Thomas; his body became quite thin, while his mother grew tired and pale, because they did not have enough to eat.

But the potatoes were growing and growing down in the ground, and one day his mother said, "I think it is time to dig the potatoes, Thomas. We will get up at sunrise tomorrow."

But, alas, when sunrise came, Thomas' mother was so weak and sick she could not get up. Thomas went out to the garden and dug and dug the potatoes until he had filled a sack. Then he ran to the fence and called across to the squire's man: "Oh, sir, would you be so kind as to exchange this peck of potatoes for some of your white creamy milk? My mother is ill for want of food."

Now it chanced that the cruel squire was riding by and he heard what Thomas said. He saw the sack of potatoes, which Thomas could scarcely hold up—he was so weak and tired from digging, and from having so little food. The squire did not want Thomas' peck of potatoes—he had bushels and bushels of them, but he did want to hear what his man would say.

"All right, my lad," said the squire's man. "I will give you a pail of this milk for the sack of potatoes."

"Oh, thank you, sir," cried Thomas, and he actually smiled to think of his mother's joy at seeing the creamy milk her little boy would bring her. He hurried into the meadow with his peck of potatoes.

"Just a moment," cried a voice, and the squire rode up to Thomas. He smote the potatoes from his hand and they fell all over the ground.

"So you thought you would bargain with the little beggar," stormed the squire to his man. "Take that!" And he was about to crack his whip on the poor man's back when what do you suppose happened. "The knight rode in," cried Polly delightedly.

"No, sir!" said Mother, "it was the cows who came to the rescue. They turned out to be heroine cows, indeed." As the squire's whip was waving in the air the startled cows dashed upon his horse and frightened him so that the whip fell from his hand and he was thrown from his saddle. There he lay sprawling, sputtering and clutching amongst Thomas' potatoes.

Polly and her mother laughed at the picture of the fat squire, then she asked a little disappointed, "But where was the brave knight"?

"Ha-ha," laughed Mother, "you shall see."

The squire's man ran toward his master. He looked down at him and shouted in a big booming voice, "You're a bad, ignorant man; your people are starving while you grow fat, with rich living and laziness. Take that, you brute," and he gave him a kick with his boot.

Now comes the surprise—he pulled off his broad-brimmed farmer's hat, took off his farmer's smock and there stood—

"The knight," shouted Polly; "I thought you'd get him in somewhere, Mother."

"Yes, sir, there stood the knight," smiled Mother.

Poor Thomas was so surprised he almost forgot he had lost all his potatoes. His eyes nearly popped out of his head. The squire by now had scrambled up and his eyes also nearly popped out of his head.

"Well, my lad," smiled the knight, "what's a knight for, if not to help the weak? I've watched you looking at those cows and longing for their creamy milk for many a day, so I changed places with the squire's man today. Now, squire, how about giving this young man one of these cows to milk every day? Then, son, you can get some flesh on that thin body of yours."

The squire glowered at Thomas and the knight turned upon him again. "You big wretch," he cried, "if you'd look about amongst the neighbors you'd find many others who need some of the rich milk of your cows—if you don't watch out you'll have no people to be squire over—with your fat, selfish ways."

"Good enough for him!" cried Polly, as her mother showed that the end of her story was near. "He was so mean."

"He certainly was," went on Mother, "and I suppose you think that was the moral of the story?" For Polly and her Mother liked to find morals when the stories were all over.

"Yes," nodded Polly.

"Well, there's more than that," said Mother. "You see, the knight really knew that milk was good for growing boys." Mother stopped and looked at Polly.

INFORMATION ABOUT BETHANY HOME

WHAT IS BETHANY HOME? A Home for Children.
HAS IT BEEN INCORPORATED? Yes; in 1898, as "A Home for Friendless Children," which is its legal title.
WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR ITS AFFAIRS? A Board of Trustees, which is self-perpetuating.
HOW WAS IT STARTED? By Mrs. J. R. F. Burroughs, in 1894, out of gratitude to God for healing her, after medical skill had failed. It was started as "Unto God," and thus continued.
HOW IS IT MAINTAINED? It was started in answer to prayer, and its continuance is also thus. Gifts come mainly from the general public voluntarily. Occasionally, the needs of the Home are made known to the public through the daily papers and the mail. An Auxiliary also helps, and a few parents give a little.
DOES THE HOME EMPLOY SOLICITORS FOR FUNDS? It does not.
IS THERE ANY INVESTED MONEY FROM WHICH AN INCOME IS DERIVED? No; the only invested money is what is invested in the lands and buildings. This property is worth about $30,000.
IS THERE ANY HELP FROM FARM AND GARDEN PRODUCTS? Yes; but not enough to meet all the needs. Much has to be bought. How much depends, of course, on the season.
IS IT DENOMINATIONAL? No; special emphasis is laid on the spiritual welfare of the children, but the denominational question is left to the children to decide after they have left the Home. Nor is any denominational preference shown in taking in children. This is not made an issue.
HOW LONG ARE CHILDREN KEPT AT THE HOME? They are committed to the Home till they are eighteen, but are not always kept that long. If it seems better to return them to friends, or parents, before the age limit is reached, they are returned. Some have been placed in private homes, but it has not always proved satisfactory.
WHAT IS THE CAPACITY OF THE HOME? For sixty children.
HOW MANY DORMITORIES? Three—two for boys; one for girls.
HAS THE HOME MODERN FACILITIES? The buildings are equipped with the Delco system of lighting and the Arcola system of heating. Standard plumbing is also in the buildings. Water comes from a spring.
IS THERE A REGULAR SCHOOL? Yes. It goes as high as the seventh grade. High school facilities are obtained elsewhere, when desirable and possible.
ARE THE CHILDREN'S PARENTS REQUIRED TO CONTRIBUTE? Yes; when they are able. It is evidently not right for them to do nothing, when they can do something, no matter how little. The Home does not want to encourage shirking.
ARE "OVERHEAD EXPENSES" HIGH? They are low. This is made possible by the willingness of the local officers of the Home to work without salary—"as unto God."
WHAT IS THE PER CAPITA EXPENSE? In 1926 it was about $200 for the year. A financial report can be found on this page.
IS THE HOME IN THE COMMUNITY FUND? No. There is no spirit of antagonism towards the Fund, but the Trustees have not yet seen that it would be for the best interests of the Home for it to become a member.
IS THE HEALTH OF THE CHILDREN GENERALLY GOOD? "It is wonderful," is about what the attending physician said, when this question was asked him. In the thirty-three years of the Home's existence there have been only seven deaths among the children at the Home.
ARE THERE MORE APPLICATIONS THAN CAN BE RECEIVED? Yes. Since the beginning of this year (1927), up to this writing (March), there have been about twenty-five applications refused.
DO THE CHILDREN TURN OUT WELL? It is the same as with private families—some do and some do not. We think the large majority repay the labor put on them.
HOW ABOUT NEEDS? Some needs are, of course, continuous, such as food, clothing, fuel, etc. As regards any special need, information will be furnished on application.

"Oh, yes," Polly exclaimed, a sudden smile beaming over her face.

"I've a fine moral for this story," went on Mother. "Now the knight realized that milk can protect you against the enemy, Sickness," went on Mother. "The rich squire was Ignorance. You see, he didn't know how to rule his people and keep them healthy. So the knight who wanted to help them came to the rescue and told him how bad he was."

"I see," said Polly, "and I bet I know why you told me that story," she exclaimed, her eyes shining.

"Why?" asked Mother, with the same kind of smile she always had when they had a secret.

"Oh, because I didn't want to drink my milk this morning and made a fuss about it," replied Polly.

"Right you are, my lamb," said Mother. "I don't want a lean little weak Thomas child in my house."

And so saying, Mother whisked out of the room and before Polly could say "Jack Robinson" she came whisking back with a tall glass of white creamy milk in her hand.—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

The Fable of the Bluebird.

Always the bluebird has been symbolic of happiness, and it seems from the first this trait has dominated his character, at least so legend tells us. Away back, once upon a time, when a great flood covered the earth, all the land birds huddled together in a little boat twittering to each other of a bright day to come. Even when the storm failed to abate and the birds were cold, the bluebird led the twitter of a bright tomorrow. They were not disappointed, either, for the next day a single ray of sunshine appeared through a crack in the cabin house of the boat. Bluebird had always been on the lookout for stray bits of sunshine, so he quickly sprang to the spot, which was just big enough for his two feet. Then, when the clouds covered the sun once more, it was found the stray bit of sunshine on which Bluebird had hopped remained on the soles of his feet. Thus, even his feet are shod with sunshine and happiness.

He needed a coat, too, so when the storms had spent itself, Bluebird was the first to go out, flying straight toward heaven, singing as he went. The blue sky did not even prove a barrier to him, for he pushed his way through, rubbing the tint of the sky right into his uncolored feathers, which had grown in a flash when he left the boat, so he wears his coat of happiness. His mate followed through the hole he had made, but, of course, did not get as much blue as her lord, most of the color being rubbed off on his coat. Ever since the first flight of the Bluebird, somewhere the sun has shone through the rift he made in the sky and carries hope of spring and happiness in his wake.—Selected.

A St. Bernard Story.

This St. Bernard lived in Switzerland. His name was Santo and he belonged to an inn-keeper up in the mountains. One wild, stormy night, when he was lying by the hearth fire apparently asleep, and his master and mistress were taking their ease because they knew no guests would come on such a night, Santo suddenly jumped up and insisted on going out. His master tried to dissuade him, saying: "No, Santo, you do not want to go out such a terrible night as this; see how the snow drifts and how the wind blows!" But Santo grew much excited, and in spite of all persuasion, got out and started down the mountain road as fast as he could go and as if he knew exactly where he was going.

About two hours later he returned, almost exhausted, with a baby lashed to his back with a piece of harness. You can imagine how amazed the inn-keeper and his wife were and how quickly she took the baby and warmed and fed him. The man roused the neighbors, who followed Santo, now restlessly waiting for them. With such things as they could carry to help those they knew they should find in dire need, they waded through the snow two miles to a gully road, where they came upon an overturned bus from which the horses had run away. There they found, huddled together for warmth, seven people, including the baby's father and mother. You can imagine how happy they were to know that the baby was safe. The inn-keeper and the neighbors succeeded in getting all the travelers back to the inn, and so Santo really saved all those lives.

Now how did Santo know, in the first place, that there was trouble somewhere. Shut your eyes and think, before you read the next line and learn that what made him prick up his ears and insist on getting out was the sound of the pounding of the runaway horses' hoofs, which his keen hearing caught above the roar of the storm. He had before associated that sound with trouble, and his instinct made him go to the rescue.—Our Dumb Animals.

have combined to make the insurance offered by this corporation unusually attractive to the policyholders. The rates themselves are extremely low, containing no loading. In addition to this basic fact, the Directors have been declaring substantial refunds each year, in line with the object for which this corporation was established. That object was to offer insurance as cheaply as is consistent with safety to clergymen and their families and to lay workers and their families.

HELEN ELY BURLESON.

HELEN ELY BURLESON, wife of the Bishop of South Dakota, was called into the larger life on the afternoon of February 6. Burial services were held in Calvary Cathedral on February 11. On Saturday morning at eleven o'clock, assited by Bishop McElwain, of Minnesota, and Suffragan Bishop Roberts, of South Dakota, the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion. Their son, John Ely Burleson, acted as server. The burial office was read at two P. M. by Bishop Roberts and Dean Woodruff. A large and sorrowing congregation filled the Cathedral. Bishop Burleson said the final prayers and pronounced the benediction. The vested choir sang hymns of faith and hope. At the grave Bishop McElwain read the committal and Canon Gesner cast the earth.

Though prevented for the last three years by her health, the memory of Mrs. Burleson's loving service in South Dakota is still vivid. She made the Bishop's House a center of gracious hospitality, and clergy and people found there a hostess who made cheer with her cordial greeting, delicious humor, ready wit and an unfailing interest in the work each one was doing. In every fiber she was a missionary and her ingenious plans for work, especially her original and attractive missionary programs in the Woman's Auxiliary made the matter of missions a thing of interest and pleasure. Her life was singularly pure and real, and her personal loyalty to her Lord was manifested by unfailing devotion. To her the altar was the center of reality and power.

So she has gone, leaving a memory as gentle as the summer air when reapers sing among the gathered sheaves. She lived as a Christian; she died as a Christian; she lives as a Christian. The Church Expectant is enriched by a lovely soul, and we are surer of the Life and Light Eternal.

RESOLUTIONS.

Col. John W. Gordon.

At the semi-annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Boys' Home, Inc., Covington, Va., held in St. Paul's Parish House, Richmond, Virginia, January 23d, the following minute was adopted

It is keenly realized by the members of the Board that Colonel JOHN W. GORDON, who as a faithful Christian soldier, fought a good fight, finished his course, kept the faith, has passed to the higher field of service. His life had steadily grown in strength, depth and expanding interest and service, until, ever ascending, he, like his Lord, passed out of sight into the heavens.

He will be greatly missed by the Boy's Home, its trustees, its officers, its boys. His abiding friendship and his ever generous support have been a valued and blessed asset. The house which he has given as a home for the little boys in sacred memory of his son will be, through the passing years, a token of his unfailing interest. His works do follow him.

Therefore be it resolved:

That the Board of Trustees of the Boys' Home, Inc., place on record its profound appreciation of the highly valued service that Colonel John W. Gordon has rendered this institution and her boys.

That we, its members, rejoice with his family in his noble life and splendid Christian service, and render gratitude to God for the blessing of it.

That we express to the members of his family our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement and commend them to our Heavenly Father's divine consolation.

GEORGE KEITH TAYLOR.

In Memoriam.

In the death of GEORGE KEITH TAYLOR, January 26, 1928, Amelia county suffered a distinct loss. Mr. Taylor was connected with many of the most prominent families in Eastern Virginia, and, for many years, was active in the public life of his section of the State. No man in Amelia was more widely known or more deeply respected. He had for many years been honored with the public confidence of his people. He was recognized as a man of great executive ability, of great firmness of character and of absolute fidelity to trust.

Mr. Taylor was a son of Dr. Richard Feild Taylor, of "Farm Hill", in Amelia, and of his wife, Rosalie Green. He was one of eight children, four boys and four girls. Mr. Taylor was born at "Farm Hill" on April 18, 1846. He died in his eighty-second year. He attended school at Mr. Harrison's, in Amelia, which he left to enter the Confederate army at the age of 17. He served first as a rodman in a corps of engineers, after which he was transferred into an Amelia troop of horse, which formed part of the First Virginia Regiment of Cavalry. Towards the end of the war he was detailed by Captain Frank Southall as a courier for General Munford, who had succeeded to the command of General Fitz Lee's old brigade. He served in this capacity until the end.

An interesting anecdote is told of Mr. Taylor in connection with General Robert E. Lee. Mr. Taylor possessed a very fine mare, which, towards the end of the war, he loaned General Fitz Lee to prevent its capture at the fall of Richmond. General Lee had the mare with him at the surrender at Appomattox. Meeting General Robert E. Lee later in Richmond, Mr. Taylor made inquiry as to the probable whereabouts of the mare, which he was most anxious to recover. He was told by General Lee that the animal had most likely been left in King William county by the cavalry commander. Mr. Taylor made inquiries, visited King William, and, finally located and secured the mare, which was highly blooded and of great value.

Naturally a man of much determination and of an inflexible will, Mr. Taylor was at all times recognized as the supreme head of his house. His character, however, was softened and beautified by a kindly and generous disposition, and his home was among the most hospitable in all Amelia.

Mr. Taylor was possessed of the gift of enjoying the friendship and respect of all classes. For twenty-four consecutive years he served as treasurer of his county. He was deeply attached to the sports of the field, was an excellent shot, and, until the period of the World War, kept his pack of fox hounds. He, also at all times kept open house, and, during the hunting season, his home was filled with friends, some of which visited him from great distances.

Mr. Taylor was a member of the Presbyterian church. In young manhood he studied medicine, but never practiced this as a profession. He was a brother of the late Dr. Armistead G. Taylor, of Amelia, also a Confederate veteran, who was regarded as one of the brightest minds in Virginia, and as among the most gifted medical men in the whole South.

In 1870, Mr. Taylor married Courtney Blair Harvie, a daughter of Lewis E. Harvie, president of the old Richmond and Danville Railroad. Mrs. Taylor preceded her husband to the grave, dying April 30, 1917. She left the following children: Dr. Richard Feild Taylor, Jr., who died in June, 1919; Edwin Harvie Taylor and George Keith Taylor, Jr., now Commonwealth's attorney of Amelia; also four daughters—Misses Rosalie G., Mary Byrd, Martha C. (now Mrs. W. Roane Ruffin), and Courtney I. Taylor, and an adopted daughter, Courtney Keith Meade. There is also one brother, James Aubyn Taylor, now residing at "Farm Hill".

Mr. Taylor was buried in the family section at Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, Va.

(Signed) CARTER W. WORMELEY.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. William Henry Chapman.

The death of MRS. WILLIAM HENRY CHAPMAN, in Greensboro, North Carolina, on December 31, 1927, marks the passing of one who had contributed abundantly to the enrichment of human life by the strength of her faith, the beauty of her character, the breadth of her sympathies, the depth and sweetness of her love.

Born at "Edge Hill", near Warrenton, Virginia, on October 28, 1846, the only child of James Jeffries and Esther Foote, his wife, her long life embraced the tranquility of the old South, the period of armed conflict between the States, the poverty and privation of Reconstruction days, the prosperity and progress of the "new South". She lived through four wars, and was an active participant in the experiences of three of them. Her life was suffused with romance and rich in patriotic achievement.

United in marriage to a famous Confederate chieftain at the very height of his glory, she lived to devote much of her time and her rare gifts to leading a wide circle of friends and admirers into a deeper loyalty to a reunited country, and sent her sons into two wars under the Stars and Stripes.

On February 25, 1864, Josephine Jeffries, then a beautiful girl of seventeen, was married to Lieutenant-Colonel William H. Chapman, a member of the galaxy of brilliant and distinguished officers who commanded the famous 43rd Virginia Cavalry, better known as "Mosby's Battalion".

The early days of her married life were replete with adventure and peril. When peace was restored she faced, with her husband, the difficulties and hardships involved in rebuilding the whole social structure of their native State.

Mrs. Chapman's life was intimately associated with the history of irginia. She sociated with the history of Virginia. She ter of Mary Ball, George Washington's mother, while her family and General Robert E. Lee traced back to a common ancestry in Colonel Richard Lee. She was an active member of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Colonial Dames.

Mrs. Chapman was a woman of great personal charm, of noble beauty and dignity of character and of singular sweetness of disposition. Her poise was perfect, her sympathies deep and tender. Whether in the midst of war's alarms or in the swift exchanges of social life her beautiful spirit, while sensitively responsive to each new situation, was serene and unruffled.

A character so perfect, so symmetrical, could find its explanation only in spiritual ideals. Her life was permeated and directed by a deep religious faith that brightened and beautified each word and action, and all unconsciously brought men face to face with Christ, whom they recognized as the inspiration of a life of such surpassing loveliness.

Dedicated to Christ in infancy through the offices of the Episcopal Church, she was ever active in its service, and found in it joyous worship, its noble liturgy, its sacred associations and its heroic history her highest spiritual satisfaction.

Her family will have the sympathy of many friends in their bereavement. In less than two months Colonel Chapman and his beloved wife would have celebrated the 64th anniversary of their marriage. Sixty-four years on the pathway of life together—and lovers always! A wonderful record, a blesed and beautiful story.

In unfaded loveliness she has passed into the nearer presence, into the higher service of the King. Heaven is brighter for her coming and earth is richer for the legacy of such a life.

P.

---

Of all things, beware of taking an attitude of cold condemnation toward one "overtaken in fault". In that afterreaction, when men feel the sting of their failure, they need not our condemnation, but our Christ.

FOURTH EDITION—REVISED AND ENLARGED—OF
THE REAL LINCOLN
From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By DR. CHAS. L. C. MINOR
(Edited by M. D. Carter)

Startling but little known facts about the life and administration of the great Civil War President. A composite analysis ofIthe character and achievements of the man who guided the ship of State during the four mostlcritical years of our history. A book that should be in the hands of every student of American history, and especially of every teacher of American history.
POSTPAID, $2.50

For Sale by SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

GEN. MORRIS SCHAFF- Officer in the Union Army during the Civil War.—No lover of historical truth, no teacher of American history, can afford to neglect reading Minor's "The Real Lincoln," for it lays bare the facts of Lincoln's civil and political life—what his contemporaries, who knew him intimately, and men of prominence, who met him officially or casually, thought of him personally and of his administration of affairs. . . . No reader of this book will fail to see the waves of propaganda set in motion for political ascendancy immediately after Appomattox and the death of Lincon waves leaving a detritus of revenge and falsehood on the pages of about any history written by a Northerner since the War Between the States; but the foliage of Myth has hidden many a counterfeit god.

MAJOR GILES B. COOKE, last surviving officer of General Robert E. Lee's staff.—To all who would like to have a true life of Abraham Lincoln I commend "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, giving an account of that part of Mr. Lincoln's life well known to his life-long friends and boon companions.

MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, Richmond (Va.) Banker and Publisher of The Southern Churchman.—A new edition of that great book, "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, will soon be available to the public, I am informed, and I strongly recommend that all persons interested in the true history of America secure a copy of it. "Time's glory is to calm contending kings, to unmask falsehood and bring truth to light," and it is high time that American writers cease to whitewash Lincoln and give the reading public the true facts about him and his policies. This is done in Dr. Minor's book, which I highly recommend to the reading public.

H. R. McILWAINE, State Librarian of Virginia.—I am glad to know that you are soon to publish a new (fourth) edition of Charles L. C. Minor's "The Real Lincoln." Made up almost altogether of excerpts from the writings of Lincoln's friends, the book gives facts largely overlooked in present-day biographies and which should be known by all who wish to form a just conception of Lincoln's character. It also gives much information as to widespread opposition in the Northern States to coercion of the South. On this account, too, it ought to be widely read everywhere, for such reading has a tendency to strengthen the good feeling now existing between the two great sections of our common county.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

The petition so clearly expresses the best thought of Protestant Episcopalians that we quote it in full:

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church; and

"WHEREAS, there is an organized movement within the Protestant Episcopal Church to adopt some of the doctrines and forms of worship now observed by the Roman Catholic Church; and

"WHEREAS, many of the doctrines and ceremonies observed by the Roman Catholic Church are expressly repudiated by the Articles of Religion; and—

"WHEREAS, all the Bishops and Clergy ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church have promised conformity to the Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of this Church; and

"WHEREAS, we and all the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church have sought Jesus Christ as this Church has received His life and doctrine, and have entrusted our souls to the nurture of the Church as defined in the Articles of Religion and have depended upon the Sacramental life as taught therein; and

"WHEREAS, we believe that the omission of the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer would be tantamount to their repudiation in toto by General Convention, would open the way to the teaching and practice of many doctrines and ceremonies now expressly unlawful in our Church, and would leave the laity of the Church in doubt and confusion as to the position of their Church in many matters of great moral and spiritual importance, and would cause grief and doubt and sorrow:

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament, Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE

I was walking along the street of Vanity Fair the other day and had my attention drawn to a huge edifice which was in the course of construction. Apparently there was a strike on, as something had happened to greatly hinder the work. On inquiring what was the trouble I was told that there was a dispute among the workmen. As the men were holding a meeting, and any one was admitted, out of curiosity I went inside.

Some had returned to their work, others were divided in opinion as to what was best to be done. It seemed that some were in fear that the building might fall, saying that some of the workmen were tampering with the foundations. Others were laughing them to scorn, vehemently asserting that their friends were but repairing the foundations, which, they said, had never been truly laid.

On further inquiry I found out that the building was called the CHURCH, and that the workmen were divided into two camps—Fundamentalists and Modernists. The great fear of the former was that the latter would remove the foundations; and on examining the damage already done, I was persuaded that there was much reason for alarm.

I found several of the huge foundation stones partly out of place. Indeed, one on which I deciphered the words:

The Virgin Birth

was more or less broken, and almost entirely removed from its place; if moved a little more a great part of the building would be in jeopardy. Another had an inscription which was partly obliterated by the workmen's tools. It read:

. . spiration of Ho . . Scr . . . . re

A third, which appeared to me to be the chief corner stone, was being vigorously attacked with pick and crowbar; it bore the words:

The Deity of Christ

I drew the attention of some of those destructive workmen, many of whom appeared to be scholars, to a notice the builder had left near by. It read:

If the FOUNDATIONS be destroyed,
what can the righteous do–

But they scoffed at me, and muttered something about "progress," and "modern building methods," and fell to with greater zeal than ever. I turned away sad in heart, feeling that this beautiful building was doomed.

But as I was about to step out into the street, a young man in shining garments touched me on the shoulder and gave me a letter from the owner of the building, bidding me read it. I broke the seal and read:

"Nevertheless the FOUNDATION of God standeth sure," and, "I will build my CHURCH; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Much comforted by these words, I passed on.

WILLIAM C. IRVINE.

When Death Approaches.

On that old faith I will take hold once more—
Now that the long waves bear me to the shore
And life's brief voyage is o'er;
Near is the looked-for land—
One wild leap on the strand
And the dear souls I loved of old
I shall again behold,
And arms that held me once shall hold again.
In blinding ways of men
Long did I mourning doubt.
. . . . . .
But now the time is come, the test draws near,
And sudden my soul is innocent of fear.
O ye beloved! I come! I cry
With the old passion ye shall not deny
I know you, as I knew
When life was in its dew;
Ah, naught of me has suffered inward change,
Nor can be change essential even in you,
However far the freer spirit's range.
Soul shall find soul; there is no distance
That bars love's brave insistence,
And nothing truly dies
In all the infinite realm of woe and weal;
Throughout creation's bound thrill answers thrill
And love to love replies.

—Richard Watson Gilder.

THE LENTEN MITE BOX

WE WILL HELP YOU FILL IT.

Last year there was a generous response and hearty co-operation by the Young People of the Church to our offer to help fill the Lenten Mite Boxes. The excellent results accomplished by the young hustlers who took part in the plan encourages us to renew our offer for the 1928 Lenten season.

HERE IS THE OFFER

For each new annual subscription to SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN sent us by a Sunday School pupil, or Young Peoples' Organization, we will pay the sender ONE DOLLAR. The subscription price of SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN is $3.00 a year. You keep one dollar and send us two dollars with the name and address of the subscriber. Your good work will add to your Easter Offering, and bring fifty-two weeks of pleasure to the subscriber.

Last year the returns to our offer ranged from one new subscriber at $1.00 profit to the sender, to forty new subscribers with $40.00 for the Mite Box.

Order blanks, literature and sample copies of the paper will be sent on request. Get a list of Church members from your rector and ask them to subscribe, and see the dollars roll in.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

This world only begins friendships.—Phillips Brooks.

Sin is not imperfection; it is corruption.

No solid work is done by one who seeks a soft place.

He who desires to be Spirit-filled must be self-emptied.

The man who honestly and regularly pays his vows to God will never dodge paying his bills.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

"Those who live with us have the greatest power to uplift us."

"Because you have occasional spells of despondency do not despair. The sun has a sinking spell every night, but it rises again all right the next morning."

"The man who has been through a hundred high schools and a hundred universities, and does not know his Bible, is not an educated man and never can be."—Henry Van Dyke.

A man stopped a preacher in a London street, and said: "I once heard you preach in Paris, and something you said was the means of my conversion." "What was it?" "The latch." You said "The latch is on our side of the door. I had always thought God hard, and that we must do something to propitiate Him. It was a new thought that Christ had done it all, and was waiting at the door for me."

God never achieves greatly through a coward. His message to Joshua when He had a great work for him to do was: "Be thou strong and very courageous!"

Let us beware of losing our enthusiasm; let us ever glory in something and strive to retain our admiration for all that would ennoble, and our interest in all that would enrich and beautify our life.—Phillips Brooks.

When Dr. James McCosh was president of Princeton he said that no student ever left the college at graduation without his meeting the student alone, talking with him over his view of life and praying with him. Such a president, with a faculty like-minded, would naturally bring the students in their questioning age into an age of assurances and certainties.—O. P. Eaches.

INTRUDERS

Many of us who try to follow and feel the prayers, thanksgiving and praise of the church services and to be earnest in our private devotions can understand the ancient belief in familiar and invisible demons always with us and demoniacally busy to persuade us to evil. At moments of the most solemn and sacred supplication or invocation the buzzing or crawling of a fly may lead us away from the very presence of the Almighty and the reverence and adoration we owe Him. The slightest sound or movement or circumstance, even the faint spectres floating in the darkness before our closed eyes, carry us afar to grotesquely or impiously unfitting wanderings, recollections, speculations, calculations. It is one of the mysteries of the complex machinery of our inward lives, old and universal as the impulse to worship, the instinct to seek and accept and hope in some power higher and better than any known to this world. It is the ceaseless struggle between what we call the soul and what we call the mind, impalpable, indefinable, frequently conflicting, forces within us. The spiritual element yearns and reaches and strives eagerly to soar to illimitable, ethereal regions of purity and beauty which we may but dimly and vaguely comprehend. The mere reasoning faculty, linked with the physical senses, swayed by passions and prejudices, greed and the influences of the moment, lures us to the material and sordid, labors to hold and confine us to what we can see and hear, touch and weigh and count.

Perhaps the first making of idols intended to represent deities was the effort of man to aid his spiritual sense against the mental revolts and strayings by providing something visible to fasten and retain his attention as he tried to pray. That effort failed. The worship degenerated to the manufactured thing. The senses and mentality triumphed over the spirit. Ages later the monks, immured in silent cells of desolate and lonely monasteries, striving to pray secluded from distractions, flagellated themselves cruelly, drawing blood from their own bared backs with whips knotted and thongs set with sharp spikes, hoping by laceration of their bodies to drive away the intruding alien and iniquitous thoughts. They and those others, so long before them knew, as we know now, as St. Paul wrote if himself to the Romans, that the law is spiritual and we are carnal, that the good we would we do not and the evil which we would not, that we do.

It seems certain that the Almighty intends us to achieve spiritual victory, to prevail over our finite minds and the earthly, by hard and valorous fighting and fervent, faithful beseeching of His help in the combat, perhaps so training us to be worthy of enrollment in His eternal host. He forbids us to worship the likeness of anything. The spiritual in us must overcome spiritually the carnal mind, with the merciful aid of the unseen, but ever present Power. There is deep meaning in the desperate all night struggle of Jacob, by which he won the blessing and the new name and was enabled to feel that he had seen God face to face. There is deeper, sweeter, holier, mystical meaning in the prayer of the Saviour, putting before us, for our strengthening and humble emulation, the final grapple of the deathless, divine, inspiring spirit and the shrinking, fearing, mind—"If it be possible, take away this cup from me". David, king of Israel, all man, with the strength and frailties of manhood, skilled and dauntless warrior, understood his own helplessness in the battle between soul and mind and with humility confessed it—"Cleanse thou me from secret faults". "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be always acceptable in thy sight."

Our Church guides us into the road to victory over the invading, insistent, besetting intruders between us and the God to whom we would pray and offer thanks. The collect before the Holy Communion leads us to ask Him before whom all hearts are open to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of His Holy Spirit that we may perfectly love Him and worthily magnify His Holy Name. That is the petition for us to grave on heart and memory and to breathe from the recesses of our souls incessantly. It is decreed that we shall win our inward battles as in the outward battle of life, by our own faithful courageous, tireless striving and fighting and ceaseless and earnest pleas for Divine assistance.

At the church services the clergyman can help those in front of him by fervor and earnestness and emphasis, by making his voice and intonations tell that he feels and means the words uttered by his lips. Monotonous, perfunctory recitations from the chancel give opportunity and invitation for legions of unworthy and untimely thoughts and suggestions to intrude within the heads bowed in the pews. Yet no mortal means nor methods, no measured cadences of enunciation, or strains or music, no picture, nor statuary, can assure the supremacy of the spiritual. Any or all of these may help, often do help; but they cannot do for us the work of driving away the intruders. That work is ours to do—one of the tasks that confront us at each step of our inner and outward lives. If we do it faithfully, the reward is promised and sure. If we fail to do it, the dread penalty for failure cannot be escaped. One lesson of the Lenten season, self-control, government of our physical and mental desires and inclinations, illustrates through the forty days how conquest by the spiritual part of us of the material and sensual part may continue through the years. It tells how by constant vigilance and diligence we may ascend with our prayers, our contrition and gratitude, feel that we have spoken directly with the All Mighty and All Merciful Power and have been heard. And, when the time comes, the soul will arise from amid foes and fogs and mists to transcendental light and purity, with the glorious defiance of the great apostle to the last enemy of all—"Oh, death, where is thy sting? Oh, grave, where is thy victory"?

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND INTERCESSION

By Kenneth Mackenzie

GRANTED that the Christian life is a motive force; that the inspiration and unction proceed from the Holy Spirit; what is the rational ideal of this conferment? Certainly not for selfish appropriation. The possession of this divinely imparted provision, if not for ministry, would contradict every acknowledged manifestation of God earthward. It is He who sends His rain upon the just and the unjust (Matt. 5:45) and giveth liberally to all men (James 1:5). The very nature of God is to bless others. Our intuitive perceptions spontaneously witness to this. For to be God, He must be good; and goodness is essentially unselfish.

Our Lord Jesus made this plain in His life and teachings. He came not to gratify fleshly desires, as the rich of His day, attended by slaves and surrounded by luxury. His parable of the rich man and Lazarus is His unveiling of the mind of Deity as to the possession of any present-world gift which is turned into channels of selfish enjoyment. He defines Himself as coming not to be ministered to, but to minister (Matt. 20:28). Of Him it is said, "He went about doing good" (Acts 10:38). And St. Paul crowns the spirit and expression of benevolence which enriched His life by the otherwise unknown saying, "It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35).

And thus Christianity has been the world-agent for the uplift of the down-trodden, the feeding of the hungry, the protection of the weak and the amelioration of distress. Many have been and are the methods by which the believers in the Lord Jesus have interpreted Him to a suffering humanity. And this capacity for blessing is enlarging as needs for it arise and the challenge to service is recognized. But within the veil, lies another sphere of self-sacrifice, less conspicuous, never within the range of the praise of men, upon which God alone looks. Many are they who serve in visible ministry, under the open sky, worthy of the appreciation of their fellows, meriting a fit reward. Candidates for the unseen service are not less needed by the King, who seeks such as will unite with Him in this pursuit of blessing for others. Standing as we do today while the cry for the "Social Gospel" is vibrating, there is danger that the external ministry will obscure the deeper things of His life, once lived, and again lived through us. Either we shrink from trying to understand it, or we willingly evade it, lest the price be more than we care to pay.

The appeal we make in this message will not be acceptable to many who are devoted to the machinery of service; but who are indifferent to the hidden springs of ministry, which only the Holy Spirit can disclose. For not the volume of deeds, the sum total of gifts, meet the exactitude of God's arithmetic; but rather the consuming desire which lies behind the things we do, and most of all, the consciousness of union with Him which enamors us of Himself and knits us to Him in His burning zeal for others.

When we speak, therefore, of intercession, we touch a tender spot in the heart of every true child of God. Numerous are the conflicting thoughts which struggle for mastery in our minds, as the sanctity of this relationship with Him allures us to a closer walk with Him. And by far too strongly are we moved towards that prevailing fatalism, which is paralyzing the entire life of prayer and faith. Since He is able to do all things, why should He require us to seek them from Him? We recall that when Carey pleaded before the Church Council that he be sent to India, a doughty Scotch minister, impatient of this inflamed idealistic dream, exclaimed, "Sit down, young man; sit down; if the Lord wants to convert the heathen, He will do it without you". But we all know that is just what God will not do. Else were our Lord's commission to His disciples without motive or meaning. The divine law of evangelism has never varied from the beginning.

We meet another obstacle to our quest for the comprehension of the life of intercession in the oft-repeated saying that God wants to save and bless men more than we can comprehend. But here again we face the stubborn fact that He has ever ordained that He can forgive expression to His heart-hunger for souls, only when His own are en rapport with Himself. Otherwise, He stands mute and helpless. This would be absurd, philosophically considered, if we were not so well acquainted with the history of the ministry of prayer. To be sure God is able; and certainly He loves to save men more than we can ever apprehend. But His order is that we adhere to Him for the revelation of His love and the imparting of His vision. Our spiritual instinct reverently regards the importunity of Thomas Brainerd, on his knees for hours at a time in behalf of the benighted Indians to whom he went, with the love of Christ consuming him. How many faithful servants of God have waited in faith and prayer for the outpouring of the power of God in behalf of the heathen to whom they gave themselves, until, in some cases after years of delay, they saw what was the very opening of the windows of heaven!

In pleading, therefore, for the reality and the potency of intercession, we may but reasonably ask, not Why, but How? We are all aware that our inestimable liturgy embraces this ministry; for we do pray that God will "have mercy upon all men". Yet that does not go to the root of the problem. There was a sincere step forward when at the General Convention which adopted the petition, "That it may please Thee to send forth laborers into Thy harvest", the Church felt a new impulse which moved the hands of the clock of missions forward with notable advance. Thank God for it. The challenge, however, is not to the Church in its corporate life; it is personal, calling each of us to a separate ministry.

If we do not sincerely believe that men need to be saved and blest by God in answer to our petitions; if we virtually by our apathy, deny that "prayer changes things", then we may be kindly excused. Our gracious Father will make some other appointment for us, that we may serve as we are able and according to what is most pleasurable to us. He is too good to condemn us; He is so much in need of "the little I can do" from the weakest of His own, that He accepts us for what we elect to do. Every soul makes its own decision.

The motive lies in the recognition that there are men and women on the earth today, whom we may or may not know, who are to be blessed by our prayer life. We need not to understand the processes by which He links His omnipotence to our feeble strength; we take that for granted by the very fact that He has exalted this ministry of prayer to such heights of dignity and effectiveness in His Word and by the teachings and life of His dear Son. If we unite ourselves to Him in the dedicated purpose to see, as far as we are able, with His vision; to feel, as He may inflame our souls with His own fire of love; to receive His intense longing to draw all men unto Himself (John 12: 32), we enter this realm of spiritual influence for the loftiest calling of the children of God.

To this end, definiteness of aim, directness of approach and unbounded confidence in the reality of the transaction, befit us. It becomes us who would enroll in this ministry to seek Him in the longing, "Lord, lay some soul upon my heart". He will do it; and give us, as we advance in the life, the ability to discern those for whom we would have a spiritual concern. We shall enrich our participation in Common Prayer by the growing education we attain in the school of personal intercession.

Practically, we should have a list of those whom we have seen or heard of, whose needs or other conditions regarding them are worthy of our care and love. In faith that in remembering them we are covenanting with our Lord for their good, we present them to Him, fragrant before Him with the overflowing love which He bestows. This list will embrace and exceed the narrow circle of our closest and most cherished. "The great, wide world" will become our possession. We shall have, like our Lord, "a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathize", and every appeal to our sympathy will be utilized to join us to others and to Him in this sanctified mission. It is as though He would say, "I love them; I can help them if you will unite with me in the desire; I need you to bring them to their hill of blessing. Will you do it"?

If this dedication possesses us, men will know us by our innate spiritual potency, our spiritually balanced lives, our kindly and sympathetic look. And we may not be surprised if some glad day, there shall come to us from some hungry soul the simple request, "I wish you would pray for me". No higher honor can be awarded us. May we meet it with a thrill of gladness that we are counted worthy of such a behest, the exalted privilege of uniting with our Lord in bringing down from Him, the benedictions He would bestow, which, with us, are in His province to grant.

THE SCRIPTURE UNION.

THE MESSAGE.

2. During the Feast (14-36). The presence of Christ is always revealing; He brings to light the secret things, and lays open the hidden thoughts of men. This is true not of one class only, but of all. Here, there are three distinct cycles of discussion. (i) With the Jews (14-24). Is it not true that certain ideas are well-nigh immortal—wrong ideas, I mean? Here is one of them, that in order to be accredited you must graduate at one or other of the schools (15). Well, that would have disqualified both Spurgeon and Moody, and long before them, both Peter and John, and their Master. I am for all the culture we can get, but for culture-snobbery I have a deep-seated contempt. Another lesson here is, you can test the truth by trying it (17). Christianity is not a controversy, but a character which expresses itself in conduct. These Jews claimed kinship with Moses, but Moses would not have owned one of them. "Natural relations are forfeited by moral apostasy." They only have a right to claim Abraham, and Moses, and Christ, who are of their spirit. In verses 21-23, we have an echo of chapter 5. (ii) With the People (25-31). Here again the person of Jesus is the focus of controversy. Who is He? It is pathetic when people announcing their knowledge only advertise their ignorance (27). They remembered Nazareth, but forgot Bethlehem. What you are forgetting may rob you of Christ. Jesus' answer brought light and life to some (31), while it stirred up hatred in others (30). The former caught the vision, but the latter caught the voltage. (iii) With the Envoys (32-36). When they came to Him, it was only to learn that He was going from them (33, 34). These messengers were deeply impressed by what Jesus said to them (46). What effect have preaching and teaching upon you?

THE MESSAGE.

3. End of the Feast (37-52). The last day was the greatest. Alike, the courage and grace of Christ are sublime: courage, in the loud cry of verse 28; and grace in His loud cry here (37). When He speaks of "thirst" He tells of need; when of "drink" He tells of supply, and when He says, "Come" He shows how alone the need and the supply can be got together. The Fountain is ever flowing: are you ever thirsting? Remember, if you do not drink, you rob not only yourself but other people also (38). Of him who is ever drinking it is said that out of his vitals there shall ever be flowing "rivers of living water". Are you a river, or a dry rut? Before there can be the outflow there must be the inflow. The Evangelist, sixty years after this utterance, explains it, and does so in the light of history and experience (39). Not until Jesus was glorified historically, was the Spirit given, and not until He is glorified spiritually in your heart and life, do you know His Spirit. Then Come, Drink, Flow. This sublime utterance of our Lord's set all the people guessing (40-44). Is He the Prophet? Or the Christ? Or neither? No one can really know Who Christ is until he trusts Him: some things can be known only from the inside. It is not a matter of geography and chronology (42), but of repentance and faith. Christ was like an electric current, which scatters to right and left all the diverse elements through which it passes. Now enter the officers again (45, 32), but without Jesus. His words had conquered their weapons (46); His majesty had paralyzed their might. Nicodemus comes again into view, the night-school pupil (50-52). He got only abuse for his loyalty to principle, but it is only the weak and the mean who fall back upon abuse. Are you strong enough to stand alone for Jesus?

THE MESSAGE.

In verses 12-20 Jesus bears a witness; and in 21-30, He issues a warning. The Master had already likened Himself to the riven rock (7:37); now He claims to be the true Fiery Pillar directing and regulating the march of His people through the wilderness. The Jews did not believe His testimony, because, they said, it was unsupported. But Jesus affirmed that it was not unsupported, for His Father also bore witness of Him (18). Utterly ignorant of Who He was Who was speaking to them, they thought only of an earthly father (19), but in an utterance of penetrating lucidity and power Jesus declared that He was the revelation of His Father, and that, for lack of sympathy, the Jews knew neither of Them. Let us remember that sympathy is always needed in order to understand. From this witness, Jesus passes on to a solemn warning (21-30), in which He presents the one true object of faith, and declares what are the consequences of unbelief. Mark here the thrice repeated "ye shall die in your sins". How unspeakably terrible a possibility. "To die without Christ, hast thou counted the cost?" Mark also the thrice repeated "I am" (24, 28, 58), which is one of the keys of this Gospel. Trace through its pages what Christ claimed to be: "I am the Light"; "I am the Bread of life"; "I am the Door"; and others. The truth insisted on in this discourse is that unbelief and death go together, as do faith and life. The Son's perfect oneness with the Father is made evident by the habit of His life and the quality of His service (29). His was not a negative obedience merely, a cold abstinence from evil, but a service at once positive, active, and energetic. We can have no greater ambition in life than to be well-pleasing in His sight. Underline Christ's references to His Father in this chapter.

THE MESSAGE.

Had verse 30 ended the interview between Jesus and these Jews, how different would have been the impression left upon us, and how different the remainder of the story. But alas, the faith of these people was a mirage and not a pool, as what follows plainly shows. Christ promises freedom to those who honestly follow out an imperfect faith (31, 32). (Mark in these verses a cause, continuance; a means, knowledge, and an end, freedom.) But the Jews claimed never to have been in bondage; whereupon Jesus makes a great declaration which is true always, everywhere, that, "whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin". We sing. "Britons never, never shall be slaves," but are not numberless Britons slaves? bound by the chains of greed, indulgence, selfishness, pride, lust, and much beside? Sin is always enslaving, so that if you are a sinner you are a slave. Do you believe that? No one is the master of sin. Only Christ can make us free men (36). Has He snapped your chains? The next word is on Pedigree (37-47); and here Jesus declares that natural descent does not carry with it spiritual likeness. Physical and moral kinship and likeness do not always go together. We Gentiles cannot claim natural descent from Abraham, but Paul teaches that "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:29). This truth is definitely applied to the Jews in verses 43-47, where He, Who knew, plainly tells them that their Father is not God, but the devil. Some people make a great boast of their pedigree, ignorant or forgetful of the fact that character settles the question of kinship. According to soul-image, whose child are you?

Subject-Title—Slander and Stones.

THE MESSAGE.

There are three small paragraphs in today's lesson, each beginning with something that the Jews said about Jesus. In the first (48-51) they deliberately and wickedly insult Him by calling Him a Samaritan, though they knew He was a Galilean, and by affirming that He was demon-possessed. Have we any sense of horror when we read these words? Remember Who He was to Whom they were speaking, and what He had the power to do, yet He quietly replies, "Ye do dishonour Me". How do you re-act when you are insulted? In the second paragraph (52-56) the Jews take up Jesus' last statement (51), and with a note of absolute certainty re-affirm that He was demon-possessed. All through this controversy Christ and these men are on entirely different levels of thought, although employing the same words. When Jesus spoke about freedom (32) they misunderstood Him, as they do now when He speaks of death. Christ was a great enigma to them all (25, 53), as in all ages He has been to all who have failed to trust Him. He here plainly answers that He is greater than Abraham, known and honored of God, and knowing Him as they never did or could. The claims of Christ throughout this debate are astounding, and credible only on the ground that He was more than man, that He was truly God. Underline these claims in your Bible. In the last paragraph (57-59) the Jews not only entirely misunderstand what Christ has said, but misquote Him. But their sinful hate and unreasoned rage draws from the Master another mighty claim, and one which led these men to murderous action, "Before Abraham was, I am". Worship at His feet just now.

THE MESSAGE.

Make a note in the margin of your Bible now of the main divisions of this graphic story. There are seven: Benefaction (1-7), Consternation (8, 9), Examination (10-23), Confession (24-33), Persecution (34), Revelation (35-38), Condemnation (39-10, 21). Today we consider the first two and the beginning of the third of these. 1. The Benefaction (1-7). Jesus opens the eyes of a man who had been born blind. He is still passing by (1), and He sees you, sees you as you are, and as you should be. He is not out as a sight-seer, but as a sight-giver. Born blind? What a calamity! Yet spiritually this is the state of us all by nature (Eph. 5:8): but the Light of the world stands in the midst. The disciples made two mistakes (2): first, they attributed specific suffering to specific sin. That was the mistake of Job's "friends", and of many since their time. Of course it may be so, but is not necessarily so; it was not so in this case. The second mistake was that instead of being moved to pity by the sight of this man, they proposed a theological discussion, a philosophical puzzle. How often we talk when we should help. Jesus said, "I must work" (4). He did not come into the world to explain evil, but to triumph over it. The day of our opportunity is very limited; therefore, let us work. We can help the world only as long as we are in it (5). Jesus adopting means, gives this man sight (6, 7), and great is —2. The Consternation (8, 9) which follows. "Is not this he?" "This is he." "He is like him." "I am he." The thing is full of humour. The converted ought always to arouse curiosity. If your profession of Christ has not changed you, you have good ground for misgiving. Study the questions and answers in—3. The Examination. The neighbours (10-12). How? Where? And how direct and simple are the replies. It is experience that gives power to testimony.

Subject-Title—A Controversy Over Christ.

THE MESSAGE.

3. The Examination (continued). The healed man is cross-examined, first by his neighbors and then by the Pharisees: his parents also are questioned. What a comedy this is! The contemptibleness of the Pharisees, the cowardice of the parents and the courage of the man himself, all give vivid color to the picture. The first objection of the Pharisees is that the man was healed on the Sabbath day. Well, is there a better day in the week on which to do good? Surely all that Jesus had ever done on a Sabbath day has been worthy of the day; but many who call themselves Christians are more zealous for convention than for conversion. These men ask, "how"? but it is the fact and not the means that matters. I shall never know how I was converted, but I know that I am, and that is enough. The Pharisees and the people were divided in their opinion of Jesus, the former starting from their idea about the Sabbath, and the latter, from the fact of the healing: so appeal is made to the man for his opinion, and boldly did he give it—"He is a Prophet". Do you stand your ground when pressed by the ungodly? Now the parents are called, and a miserable couple they are; the son had not lost much all these years in not seeing them. They, who should have been wild with joy, were filled with fear; they were more concerned about the synagogue than salvation. And so the man is called again, but we shall hold over his great testimony until tomorrow. Through all the ages Christ has been a subject of dispute, and concerning Him opinion has always been sharply divided. Ask yourself these two questions today—What do I think of Christ? and, What does Christ think of me?

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

WE need desperately in the Church today a re-emphasis in teaching, and in the life experience of our people of the truths centering around conversion. The fact that many of our people know nothing about real conversion goes far to explain much of the apathy of the present day. A recent survey of the Churches of our land pointed out an amazing number that had not succeeded in convincing even one individual of the claims of Christianity so far as to add them to the fold, evidently the members of the Churches mentioned were in dire need of a spiritual revolution in their own lives.

There is as there has always been the temptation to substitute something else for real conversion. The clerk in the store who does not possess the real article is supposed, traditionally, to press upon you something else, "just as good", and we have with us a number of the near-religious who are satisfied to enjoy something "just as good" as conversion. The substitute does not fill the place of the real article.

Some people substitute Baptism and Confirmation and Church attendance for conversion. They think that because they have been signed with these marks and have been regular in outward marks of devotion that they are thereby made fully Christian. Mere attendance at service does not make a Christian any more than attendance at lectures makes a good scholar. Hickman and Judd Gray both attended Church, but were far from conversion. We have even heard of vestrymen who lived with two wives, nominally they were leaders in the Church, but in God's sight they did not belong to the Church at all.

Others feel that a life which is in accord with the ordinary moral standards of the community will meet God's approval, whether they make very much of worship or not. There are many cases, however, of men and women, morally upright, who were far removed from God. They had moral strength enough to resist the temptations to impurity, but in their hearts there was no love to God. St. Paul sums up the best that a moral man could be and do in his own strength "though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned"—all this, without love, profits nothing.

Others again feel that a mild interest in an attenuated sort of Christianity coupled with the ability to criticise discriminatingly will free them from the necessity of being born again. They pride themselves upon their intellectual acumen, and feel themselves somewhat removed from the common herd. Naturally it is all right for the less learned to think that conversion is necessary and if they get any good out of it, why let them persist in the delusion, but these others have gotten beyond such childishness. These men can write with critical detachment of the struggles and the victories of the past. They can analyze critically the experiences of the past, and sit in judgment on men who were far better than they are. They substitute a vicarious experience in theory, and the ability to philosophize over the experience of others for real life. They are even willing to come to Christ by night and to recognize Him as a Teacher, but when He begins at the A, B, C of the New Birth, they stumble and ask how these things could be.

On the other hand there are faithful souls still who are not ready to be satisfied with second-hand experiences, or with the formal routine of the Christian life, who are ready to meet the conditions that the Lord lays down and who enjoy the experience of the New Birth. They provide the real apologetic for Christianity throughout this as every age. Butler's Analogy did less to stem the tides of infidelity in England than did the preaching of Wesley and Whitfield with the real conversions that followed. Men who will never open a book on religion cannot help but see the lives of those whom God has touched. No one has yet been able to answer the argument of the man who was able to say, "Whereas I was blind now I see". We must have more members who can point to definite experiences in their lives that have convinced them of Christ's present power to save.

Our real problem as always is centered around the individual. It is easy to discourse on great social movements and to toss pro and con the arguments as to what would happen if this movement or that movement were to take place. It is easy also in such talks to shelve all individual responsibility, or to place it so far away that it brings no conviction. These things get nowhere. Work with and through the individual does. Many of those who can talk learnedly about the social gospel remind me of those who in the expressive words of St. Paul, "Beat the air". The man who wins another to Christ has unloosed possibilities that eternity alone can count.

The social life is no stronger than the lives of the individuals who make up that society, change the individuals, and you change the society. Bring enough of them under the sway of Christ, and miracles will happen.

The matter of conversion is even more serious than a question of a better society. It has to do with eternity as well. The New Birth is an absolute necessity in the Christian life. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God." Kick against them who will, explain them away as you please, they are the words of Christ Himself. If you have complaint to make, complain against the One Who said them, do not quarrel with the ones who stand true to His Commission to declare them.

It is said that Bishop Whittle of Virginia was once asked by a minister who was having trouble in holding his congregations what he should do. He told the Bishop in a letter that he had tried every method he knew and had failed. The Bishop suggested in reply, "Why not try the Gospel"? Today we are troubled by the failure in many parts of the Church. Many remedies are being suggested. Why not go back to the original deposit, why not try the New Testament way, why not follow Christ's words, and preach and urge the New Birth?

"WHAT PRICE LIFE?"

Reverend Cornelius N. Bakker

"What shall a man give in exchange for his life?"—Matthew 16:26b.

IT is a spring day in Jerusalem. There comes one running from Bethany to the High Priest's Palace. The High Priest with the Scribes and Elders are listening with itching ears and looking through blood-thirsty eyes at a man who, with bated breath, whispers to them, "What are you willing to give me, and I will deliver Him unto you"? "Thirty pieces of silver." That same day, under the cover of darkness, this man followed by a band of men armed with swords and staves, delivers by means of betrayal kisses, into the hands of those seeking to kill Him, his friend. The betrayed one is hustled by the angry mob to the place of trial. The betrayer has earned his money; for the price of a slave he has sold his Master. With the words ringing in his conscience, "Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss"? he is driven to go along to witness the outcome. His second thoughts, which like our second thoughts are often best, must be goading and pricking him, for when he hears the sentence of death, he realizes clearly for the first time what he has done. "The storm of despair sweeps over his disenchanted soul. No one in heaven or on earth to appeal to; no one, Angel or man to stand by him." Even the Priests, with whom he bartered to do this deed, refuse to ease his conscience by taking back the thirty pieces of silver. "See thou to it," they say. Thus Judas who might have enjoyed life with Jesus, sought the end of it all in suicide.

Judas' valuation of Jesus was thirty pieces of silver. For thirty pieces of silver he sold not only his Master, but his own life as well, . . . . what an exchange! Thirty pieces of silver equivalent to two hundred dollars. For that paltry sum Judas sold his Master and threw himself into the bargain. But Judas is not the only one who has made a bad bargain at the world's bargain counter. There was Esau who bought a mess of pottage with his birthright. In the poem, entitled, "The Lost Leader", Robert Browning mourns the poet who took wealth and honor in exchange for the fellowship of the common people.

> "Just for a handful of silver he left us,
> Just for a riband to stick in his coat—
> Found the one gift of which fortune bereft us, > Lost all the others she lets us devote."

Judas, Esau, the "Lost Leader", how many are following in their train? How many are there in a sort of apostolic succession with such as these who are paying too dearly for what they are getting, who are spending their money for that which is not bread, and their labor for that which satisfieth not, who like Martha are so engrossed in the duties of their every-day life that they forget about the need of sitting at the Master's feet to think about Duty and Destiny?

This is a very trying age for those who would live, really live. I do not mean by "living" simply "existing" as do those whose philosophy of life is to "eat, drink and be merry", that is the ideal of the mere animal. Rather, by living, I mean satisfying the higher desires of the inner man. We must never lose sight of this most important of truths that we are not simply bodies. Man is a living soul, and the body is the house which he inhabits while here. The run and file of people today show by their "inordinate desire" for pleasure and their covetousness of possession that they believe they are bodies and forget that they are souls. The soul and its needs are given second place and consideration, and not a very close second at that. Man, roughly speaking, has a threefold nature; the physical, the mental, and the spiritual. Every one of these demand our attention. The body craves food, heat, light, and rest; the mind feeds on Truth—the Truth of Beauty and the Beauty of Truth; and the soul cries out, "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us".

I repeat then, that this is a trying age in which to live. The Fortnightly Forum of New York City, at one of its recent meetings, discussed this question, "What shall be the title of the age we live in"? "An Age of Efficiency," said one; "An Age of Self-Suppression," suggested another. Such definitions as "An Age of Machines", "An Age of Materialism" and "An Age of Pleasure Madness" were also given. No doubt, every one of these descriptions is true to a very large extent. I name them not because I think these conditions excuse, but because these conditions, no doubt, explain the cause of the moral and spiritual impotence of those who allow conditions and circumstances to control their thinking and living. Such people shed any personal responsibility, and excuse themselves by saying, "business and society drive us". It would be truer to say they are drawn, not driven.

It seems that there is nothing more pathetic than to see a man or woman who is so busy at work or play, who cannot use the Sabbath day as God intended it to be used for physical rest and spiritual recreation; who cannot when the church bell rings over hill and dale, "Come now, Come now", come with God's people and breathe the ozone of worship in God's house. How short-sighted people must be growing whose eyes are so fixed upon earth and earth things that they never try the "far-vision" and look up unto the Hills from whence cometh their help. Hurry, hurry, hurry in work, hurry in pleasure, is the tendency of the day. In the good old days, and the past had good things too, there were no machines to do the work, and save time, but who dares to say that people did not have a margin of time left for themselves in which to enjoy the results of their work? They lived life with a margin. There were moments of leisure left or set apart. There was time to cultivate that Christian culture in the home that so hallows family life, there was also a margin left in which to satisfy the desire for play. Life and its duties were so arranged that man's real nature, his spiritual nature, needed not to be overlooked.

Certainly, one would think with the introduction of machines and electricity to assist man, that his margin in life would be greatly increased. On the contrary, we find that we are more engrossed with the cares and pleasures of this world than were our forefathers. Explain it or even try to excuse it, if you will, by saying that modern conditions have drawn us into the whirlpool of mundane affairs. The question remains, are we happier, are we any more contented? We have reason to believe that there are more people over-working themselves, notice I did not say they were over-worked, and that there are more people surfeited with pleasure than ever before. The medical statistics which show an unusual growth in the number of suicides and cases with nervous disorders confirm this belief.

We who are made in the image of God, we who belong to eternity and not to this world and its little day, will never be happy if we continue to live as we do. If we as individuals and as a nation continue to strive to develop only the material resources of the outside world and forget to develop the spiritual resources of the world within, what will we have gained? "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Perhaps this problem does not interest us just now. There was a man who decided to take a trip abroad. He got his passport, booked his passage and sailed for Europe. His wallet was fat and bulgy with good American money. So, with all the confidence of an American abroad, he presented some greenbacks in payment for a purchase he had made. Good as his money was in the States, he found he could buy nothing with it unless it was changed into the coin that was current there. And so it is with us who are journeying to a far country. By our striving and our sacrifice we may be able to lay up for ourselves goods upon the earth and the things that goods will buy, but unless we exchange these things for heaven's coin, unless we lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven, unless with all our riches here we are rich toward God, we will not be as fortunate as the traveler was who could buy the foreign exchange after he got there. God's place of exchange is right here and now/"Now is the Day of Salvation".

Earth's hay, wood and stubble is not soul food here, nor has it any value hereafter, when on that last day and our life's sun has gone down we try to trim our lamps and fill them with the oil of salvation.

What price life, then? What are you worth? It is said that every man has his price. What is your price? Thirty pieces of silver, as Judas? A mess of pleasure, as Esau? Honor, as the Lost Leader? Then

". . . . Thou whose heaven self-ordained
Was to enjoy earth unrestrained,
Do it! Take all the ancient show!
The woods shall wave, the rivers flow,
And men apparently pursue
Their works as they were wont to do,
While living in probation yet.
I promise not thou shalt forget
The Past, now gone to its account;
But leave thee with the old amount
Of faculties, nor less nor more,
Unvisited, as heretofore,
By God's free spirit,
That makes an end.
So, once more, take thy world! expend
Eternity upon its shores, . . . .
Flung thee as freely as one rose
Out of a summer's opulence,
Over the Eden-barrier whence
Thou art excluded. Knock in vain"!

But those who are wise, not wise in their own conceit, not wise in the things of the world, but those who can discern between the real and the unreal, between the things that are temporal and the things that are eternal, those who are "wise unto salvation", who feel they have "a never dying soul to save and fit it for the skies", they will not be found at earth's bargain counter bargaining away the highest and best that is in them. They will not necessarily betake themselves to the top of St. Stylites' pillar, but they will use whatever they need for the welfare of mind and body with Christian moderation. They will use earth as a stepping stone, as a tenting on the King's highway to heaven.

I have seen Esau selling his birthright, for I have seen men selling their honor, their families, their souls. And what will some men not take in exchange for their life?

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 24.
Topic—Spiritism.
(Read 1 Tim. 4:1-3; Eph. 6:10-18.)

We hear and read much about communicating with the dead, through so-called "mediums", at "seances", "circles", and even at so-called "Spiritualist Churches".

Every one should be warned of the solemnly serious business of attempting such communication with the unseen, or spiritual world. Christians especially need to post themselves and each other on what the Word of God has to say on the subject, for while there is much deception, there is real impersonation, and real communication with the powers of darkness ever seeking human control, and embodiment, and of which Satan, as prince of the power of the air is the controlling head.

Under the lure of representing departed loved ones, wicked spirits and hordes of demons thus operate, and usually through female mediums in darkened rooms, "for what communion hath light with darkness". In fact, communication with spirits as a doctrine is real, but it is the manifestation of demon spirits and the kiss of the serpent. This mysterious yet awful communication can readily be distinguished as evil, though being vague, unsatisfactory, or incomplete, and largely limited to the trivial affairs of this present life. At times a jocular coarseness prevails, extending to vulgarity, and ferociousness, and a strange absence of those glorious verities, that by the sure Word of God, surround those who have been called to be forever with the Lord.

A further and unfailing guarantee of the awful character of this Satanic delusion is that Spiritualism has no place for Christ and shrinks from the very mention of the glorious atonement.—1 John 2:22; 1 John 4:3.

Finally, What Saith the Word of God, Which Ends All Argument.

1. Some shall give heed to seducing spirits and demons.—1 Tim. 4:1.
2. The working of Satan, with power, signs and lying wonders.—2 Thess. 2:7-9.
3. Demons have a personality.—Luke 8:26-33.
4. They know of the Lord Jesus, and their final doom.—Matt. 8:29.
5. They enter and depart at will after human control.—Luke 11:24-26.
6. We are not to have fellowship with demons.—1 Cor. 10:20.
7. Regard not them that have "familiar spirits".—Lev. 19:31.
8. Neither seek after or be defiled by them.—Lev. 19:31
9. God is against the soul that doeth this.—Lev. 20:6.
10. A consulter with "familiar spirits" is an abomination unto the Lord.—Deut. 18:10-12.
11. If tempted to consult a "medium", consider Isa. 8:19, 20.
12. To meddle with Spiritism in any form, is to draw near to the "powers of darkness", and open the way for the invasion of demons, and "wicked spirit" control. Where a soul is already so affected, the immediate and effectual remedy is the Blood of Christ"—1 John 1:7; and the absolute safe armour is described in Eph. 6:10 to 18; and available to every believer.

Jesus, and shall it ever be,
A mortal man ashamed of Thee?
Ashamed of Thee, Whom angels praise,
Whose glories shine through endless days?

Ashamed of Jesus! sooner far
Let night disown each radiant star;
'Tis midnight with my soul, till He,
Bright Morning Star, bid darkness flee.

Ashamed of Jesus! oh, as soon
Let morning blush to own the sun!
He sheds the beams of light divine
O'er this benighted soul of mine.

Ashamed of Jesus! that dear friend
On Whom my hopes of heaven depend!
No; when I blush, be this my shame,
That I no more revere His Name.

Ashamed of Jesus! empty pride!
I'll boast a Saviour crucified;
And, oh, may this my portion be,
My Saviour not ashamed of me.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF MATTHEW FONTAINE MAURY: By Jaquelin Ambler Caskie. Richmond Press, Inc., Richmond, Va. Illustrated. Price $3.

This is a very creditable and illuminating biography of the great Virginian whose achievements in the realm of science gained for him the sobriquet, "The Pathfinder of the Seas". Matthew Fontaine Maury was the founder of the National Observatory and Weather Bureau and of the Naval Academy; he was the originator of land and agricultural meteorology; inventor of the electric torpedo; his Wind and Current Charts revolutionized the commerce of the world, and it was his genius which made possible the laying of the Atlantic Cable.

The volume contains many copies of interesting letters by Maury and of such world-renowned figures as General R. E. Lee, Emperor Maximilian, Grand Duke Constantine, and Baron Von Humboldt.

A perusal will cause the reader to echo these words of Attorney General Anderson of Virginia: "Maury's footsteps from childhood to the doorway of death mark a path of transcendent talents, blazed with labor and energy; glorified through pain and disappointment and leading into the Hall of Eternal Fame."

This is the first work of non-fiction which has come from the author's facile pen; his Biblical romance, "The Figure in the Sand", was declared by a score or more of America's leading critics to rival in power and beauty such masterpieces as "Quo Vadis" and "Ben Hur".

OUTLINE HARMONY OF THE FOUR GOSPELS: By Professor Matthew B. Riddle, D. D., LL. D. Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago. Price 15 cents.

We are glad to commend this Outline Harmony of the Gospels. It is evident from the notes that the author made much use of that classic and standard authority, "Andrew's Life of Our Lord". The work evinces the scholarship of the author and is a valuable help to the study of the Life of Christ. It will be found particularly helpful at this time to trace the order of events in Holy Week. With this aid you can follow the Life of Christ with probable time and place of events.

THE SEMINARIES.

Mr. Editor:

In response to your request I am sending you my honest convictions as to the greatest trouble today in the Church. It is common to hear it said that it is a poorly equipped ministry. If by that term you mean poor in Spirit, I would be obliged to agree, but if it means a lack of education, I must most emphatically disagree. There never was a time in the history of the Church when there were better trained men in our pulpits. Wesley did not cry out against the ignorance of the clergy, but against their lack of spiritual power. The trouble must be at fountain-head where the men are trained for their work—the Seminaries. I am not referring to any one Seminary, but to them all, more or less. This Church in her doctrines and Canons is clearly committed to the facts of the Creed as expressed in the Apostles' and Nicene Creed and also to the fully inspired Bible as a foundation to stand upon.

Every clergyman before he can be ordained must sign a paper saying he does believe the Bible of the Old and New Testament to be THE WORD OF GOD. When I was in the Seminary the entire faculty believed that and taught the students to believe it. They laid great stress on the very things now that are flaunted by so many teachers, viz.: the miracles of the Old Testament. I never heard one single doubt given in any class during the entire three years of study. The professors constantly held up before us the danger of departing from that stand of belief. I sometimes felt they were unnecessarily alarmed about these dangers, but I have seen for a long time that they saw clearly what was coming—from Germany and other quarters. When a Bishop widely known in the Church can write a paper showing how young men can sign the statement at ordination and not lose their consciences, it is time to look where we are going. I do not recall a single protest to that article. I am bound to believe that it was this firm belief in the Bible as THE WORD of God that caused so many men in the early days to volunteer to carry the gospel to foreign fields. Those men realized that they were going to a perilous situation and many of them sleep in the soil whither they went. Those were the days when there were no critics to pull the Word of God to pieces and show us what to believe and what not to believe. The Bible was the final standard. Not so now. The new theology has not upset the Bible, but it has upset many of the teachers of the Bible and hence the students who are preparing to go out in the Church are somewhat uncertain as to where they stand.

If there is any faculty in any of our Seminaries who believe the Bible as the FULLY inspired Word of God and so teach it, I would be most happy to know which one it is. Now if the New theology is right, of course it follows that all the teachers are right and are to be commended. I CANNOT believe that the Bible which has stood the fire through all the centuries and the Church who has held aloft its teaching was WRONG in so doing. I stand with the Bible and the Church against ALL the opposition. Young men go to college with implicit faith in the Bible and come out all shot to pieces in their convictions. Then comes the Seminary and any one must be credulous indeed if he can believe there will be much done there to settle and fix his faith and belief. These unbelievers first assaulted the Garden of Eden with their critical vacuum cleaner and then, like other supposed victors, they began a steady tramp through the Old Testament till they marched into the New Testament and have not hesitated to mutilate the Sacred person of Our Lord, denying most of the facts concerning Him in the Creed. We MUST accept revelation or speculation. I unhesitatingly take the former.

While Superintendent of the Galilee Mission I dealt with sixty-one clergymen of the various Communions—ten of ours, and theological students—too many to keep the count, and all tell me practically the same story: "I went to college, got my faith punctured and then to the Seminary and now I don't believe any of those old stories in the Bible, and you know you don't either." There they were down and out, no place to go, penniless and friendless, yet they could tell me all the arguments of Renan, Wellhausen, Harnack, &c., &c., against the credibility of the Word of God. I often, while listening to them, wished that some of the teachers who instructed them so fully in these things in their Seminaries, could be there and listen to their students expound them. Some of these men were most distinguished in their early ministry.

I want to give also a few examples from outside the Rescue Mission.

I do not say that all men lose their faith or have it dulled in the Seminary, but that many do. A very superior young man went to one of our Seminaries full of enthusiasm and determined to work for the salvation of the lost. He had already been preaching with great acceptability wherever he went. Less than two years in the Seminary cooled him off and he told me he could not believe the way he did when he entered the Seminary. He never finished his course and is now wandering over the country a miserable man, and when I saw him a few years ago his eyes filled with tears, but he told me he simply could not make things come out as they should. Another man went in with a high sense of his responsibility and with zeal for Christ. Before he graduated he told me he had long ceased to pray or attend prayers, because he was so unsettled in his religious convictions. A young man told me that three of them got together in his room the day before ordination and asked: "What are we going to preach when we go out?" Neither of them knew what to say. Two of them were ordained. I wish I were at liberty to put down here what the third one told me about his condition after listening for three years to such theological discussions.

Another case of a student from a distinguished Southern family, father in the ministry and widely known. He told me two days before his ordination that he did not want to be ordained, because he was so unsettled in his convictions. He said: "I have heard so much about all this thing till I do not know what to think or believe." I was horrified and told him he was an infidel, practically, and should not be ordained, but he replied: "Oh, my father and mother are coming to see me ordained and that would never do to disappoint them." I shuddered when I saw him ordained.

Another case of the same kind occurred a year before this one. I talked to him till the small hours of the morning. He broke down and cried, saying he wished he could believe these things, but he simply could not, after all he had heard on the subject. Both these men were honor men in college and that Seminary. I have a letter in my possession from a student, written two months before his ordination in which he said: "Sitting in my room tonight with only a short time till my ordination, I do not believe I can put my fingers on a single thing that I am supposed to teach when I am out, and say that I believe it." I knew him before he went to the Seminary and know that he was settled and sure as to his convictions. Another said to me after two years of college and one of Seminary that I was a very narrow Christian and had no right to say that this and that was wrong; that preachers who knew more than I did not agree with me. I knew what his convictions were before he went to the Seminary. I was not surprised to hear later on that he did not care to be ordained, as he could do social service work, which he considered more important. A student in one of the Seminaries wrote me recently that conditions there are alarming; teachers denying so much of Revelation and sometimes making light of it, and many of the young men following their example.

These things are very hard to say, but they are true. Charles G. Finney refused to attend the Seminary and when pressed for a reason replied: "If it does for me what I see it does for so many who go there, I do NOT want it." Wesley would not allow his young men to attend the Seminary of his day for the same reason. Spurgeon the same. We all know how Moody felt about it. All of these men established Training Schools for the ministry where faith would be pumped IN instead of out of them. It can easily be said that they were entirely wrong in their viewpoint. These marvelous men thought they were justified in their course. I believe they were. I am perfectly sure that many individual teachers in our Seminaries are entirely orthodox and hold the Faith as this Church has received it, but I fear they are in the minority. I feel that most faculties, as a whole, would freely admit that they do not teach the Bible as the FULLY inspired Word of God. If that is true, and few will deny it, it is not to be wondered at that these places of learning are sending out men who are extremely doubtful on a good many Facts of the Creed and as to the miracles of Old and New Testament. No wonder a resolution was introduced in the General Convention of 1922 to omit the reading of the Old Testament from the services of the Church. No wonder a recent Liberal Conference could discuss the Facts of the Creed with almost as much ease and freedom as if they were found in some book on political science.

I must call attention to the fact that most of the Funds of our Seminaries were given by men and women who believed the Bible to be the Word of God with the hope and prayer that it might be perpetuated.

In my judgment there is no NEUTRALITY in this fight. Neutrality is criminality. The Church is large and roomy as some put it, but it is not large enough to hold believers and unbelievers in the Word of God. Let the Unitarians get out, like the early ones did. Then we can respect them, if not agree with them. The Unitarian Register of Boston is telling some pungent truths along this line, urging all those who hold their views to come on over!

NEED OF HELP.

Mr. Editor:

May I at this time submit one phase of the present unemployment crisis which is often overlooked in meeting such an emergency?

Reference is made to the after-effects of such a period upon the physical status of the worker and those dependent upon him.

Too many of us are likely to believe that, when work has been found for the unemployed, the difficulty has all been righted. Too many of us forget that, when the breadwinner is unemployed over a long period of time, the effect upon the wife and children, who bear the brunt of the misfortune, is not all manifest right away.

No work means, of course, no pay. No pay means scanty food or none, poorer living quarters, inadequate clothing. Inevitably, long periods of mal-nourishment and privation result in weakened health for months afterwards.

Already in our temporary shelter, St. Barnabas' House, and our Relief Department at 38 Bleecker Street, we are feeling the effects of the recent weeks of unemployment upon the families and upon the workers themselves.

Young fathers and mothers with their little ones, dispossessed because they cannot pay the rent, left homeless and ill after weeks of scanty living; young mothers whose husbands have grown discouraged in their failure to find work and have deserted them to seek work elsewhere; children who must be cared for while mothers go to work; little ones whose under-nourished bodies cannot resist disease; young boys and girls, failing to find their usual part-time work and thus falling in the way of temptation and the courts; other young men on probation of parole who face the problem of trying to make a new start against the enervating experience of no work and nothing to live on.

In St. Barnabas' House during January 2,487 days' care were given to women and children. One thousand seven hundred and seventy-five men, women and children were helped through our Relief Department in December and January.

To as many of the men as possible help has been given in trying to find work. Part-time work has been found for many, which has helped them to keep from starving. We have been impressed by the men's willingness to work. But for most of them, work is not available. Relief has to be given.

But there has not been nearly enough money in our Relief Fund to take care of all who have turned to us. We feel keenly the need of help, not only in caring for present sufferers, but in providing for the inevitable increase of human troubles which the next few months will bring.

Whatever old or new friends of the society can do will be helping to stretch a friendly hand to many who have never had to ask for help before.

A PLEA FOR AN EVANGELICAL CLERGY UNION.

Mr. Editor:

There is a great need for a banding together of the Evangelical Clergy in a Union such as I have suggested. There is a need for a re-statement of our position as Evangelicals. There is no unity at present amongst the clergy as Evangelicals. They are afraid in some cases to shew their colours.

We must declare ourselves for all the Word of God—redemption through the Blood of Jesus—full of salvation—consecration, knowing that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord".

We must cut out colored stoles and preach in the good old-fashioned tippet.

We must hold fast to "Evening Communion". This should be a badge amongst the Evangelicals. Here, I instituted Evening Communion, when I came here, some eighteen months ago, and that service is looked forward to with great delight, as a member of the congregation said to me a few days ago:

"I like it even better than the morning Communion. There is a solemnity about it that lifts one up."

Why should there not be a Union where we can meet in conference once or twice a year and discuss the great truths of Evangelical Christendom?

Let us get away from this half-hearted Evangelicalism and fight.

What is this fetish of placing the lectern over to the side of the church instead of in the middle of the aisle or chancel? The idea of superstition! not to turn one's back on the Holy Table, is that it! Since when must we go back to the house of Rimmon? Our lectern is where it should be; in the centre of the aisle.

I was told, when I placed it there, by a vestryman, that it would not do at all. I said there it is and there it will remain. Since then this vestryman came to me and said: "The lectern is much better in the centre." Of course it is.

Well what is to be done? The Southern Churchman can call together such a conference and form such a union as we need. Go ahead. I will give you all the help I can. The time is ripe for a courageous going forward in the strength and power of our Master and in the interests of Apostolical Christianity.

A REPLY TO BISHOP TUCKER.

Mr. Editor:

I saw Bishop Tucker's reply to your article in the Southern Churchman. Will he stand behind Professor Tom Nelson, who, at the Liberal Conference last fall, inveighed against the Bible and the Creed to the amusement of some of the younger clergy? I wish Professor Nelson would publish those contradictions which he said were in the Scriptures. The Seminary of Bishop Tucker's day and the Seminary to-day are two widely different places, if all I hear is true.

BISHOP ETHELBERT TALBOT PASSES AWAY.

Bishop Ethelbert Talbot, of Bethlehem, Pa., at one time presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, died the night of February 27 at the age of 80.

He had been active in church work up to October 1, when he was obliged by illness to retire.

For more than fifty years he had been priest and bishop. In February, 1924, he succeeded by seniority to the office of presiding bishop, which he held until the General Convention of 1925 made the office elective.

His first and only pastorate was at Macon, Mo. In 1886 he was made missionary bishop of Wyoming and Idaho. After eleven years' pioneer work there he was elected head of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania. Within seven years this charge grew so large that it was divided into the dioceses of Harrisburg and Bethlehem, Bishop Talbot remaining in charge of the latter.

Funeral services will be held Thursday afternoon from the Cathedral of the Nativity at Bethlehem.

"Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."

The Enclosed Formal Statement is Being Sent to My Patients and a Few Friends:

The National Commission on Evangelism of the Protestant Episcopal Church, having invited me to give my full time as a field representative of the Commission, I have after due consideration decided to accept this wider opportunity for service.

In view of the fact that the Chairman of the Commission desires me to enter upon my new duties on March 1, 1928, I am necessarily relinquishing my practice on that date.

Faithfully your friend,

Tercentenary of Bunyan's Birth.

The American Tract Society is seeking to aid all churches, libraries, educational institutions and musical organizations that wish to celebrate the Tercentenary of Bunyan's birth.

The New York Public Library has set aside a large room on the ground floor on the Forty-second Street side to be used for a Bunyan Exhibit for a period of six months beginning October 1. The Boston Public Library and Harvard University Library are also cooperating, together with a large number of libraries in leading cities of this country.

An International Committee is being formed by the Society to render such assistance in planning for the celebration as is possible through correspondence.

As a part of the celebration, the Society expects to raise a fund of $50,000 to re-print "Pilgrims' Progress" and other Bunyan books in English and foreign languages. This is considered a special need at the present time, as the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism is having nearly all of the old Atheistic books re-printed. Their last catalogue offers over three hundred of these books, many of which are old-timers.

Wants Livelier Churches.

From the New York Times we quote the following:

Christianity too long has been regarded as a refuge for the halt and lame, according to the Rev. Dr. Albert E. Ribourg, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, who said in a recent sermon that those harbored by religion were not expected forever to remain crippled.

"Youth has no desire to join an organization of people who are only waiting to die to be translated to the place where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest," he declared. "They want action, progress, improvement, a glorious fruition. Stagnation has no place in their program.

"If the youth of the United States are to be influenced by religion in this age, they must be brought face to face with a religion which pulsates with power and strength and which gives them the assurance that under its banner they can, if they will, advance from victory to victory. The atmosphere of the graveyard must be removed from our churches."

CAUTION.

Clergy and Church people are warned against one, Alexander M. Guerard, a thickset man, somewhat above the average height, wearing opaque glasses and purporting to be blind. Shows familiarity with the names of the clergy in various parts of the country. Is described by the police as "a confidence man on a small scale". He is an expert piano tuner and seeks to secure the names of people from the South among whom he may operate his schemes.

St. Andrew's Brotherhood for Japan.

A fine Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has just been chartered among the students of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, Japan. Heading the roll of members is Bishop Reifsnider, Suffragan of North Tokyo and President of the University.

There is a total of fourteen members. The Director is Mr. Paul F. Rusch, of the University Commerce Department. The Chapter was admitted into the Brotherhood in the Chapel of St. Paul's University on St. Andrew's Day last, Bishop Reifsnider conducting the admission service as given in the Brotherhood handbook. This service of Holy Communion is conducted each Wednesday, with a breakfast following.

The Chapter had its service of admission as used by the American Brotherhood translated into Japanese, and much of the literature that has been sent to them has also been translated into that language.

Mr. Rusch, the Director of the Chapter, writes: "I firmly believe that the Brotherhood offers the way to keep these Japanese students and teachers interested in their Christianity, once they accept it. . . . . I am interested in this from a layman's standpoint. Japan needs Christian business men as well as Christian priests.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Golden Wedding Day.

The golden wedding anniversary of the Rev. and Mrs. J. H. W. Blake was the keynote of the entire day at Christ Church, Georgetown on February 26. Mr. Blake, rector-emeritus of Christ Church, and his family attended a special Communion service at eleven o'clock, when a large congregation was present. A fitting sermon was preached by the young rector of Christ Church, the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, and the music included as an offertory anthem, "How Lovely Are the Messengers That Preach Us the Gospel of Peace", by Mendelssohn. At their home in the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Blake, in a bower of golden flowers sent by loving friends, received many who came to offer congratulations, and at this time a purse of gold was presented from the congregation by Mr. George A. King. Mr. and Mrs. Blake had with them, at the service and through the entire day, their daughters who live in Washington, and their son, Mr. Vinton Blake, who with his wife, came from Akron, Ohio, for the occasion. Mr. Blake became rector of Christ Church about twenty-five years ago and continued in service there until his retirement three years ago.

Committees for Washington Cathedral Entertained.

General John J. Pershing was host at a dinner given February 21 to members of the National and Executive Committees for the Cathedral, gathered in Washington from virtually every important Eastern and Middle Western center. At this dinner announcement was made of the closing of construction contracts aggregating more than $800,000 for work on the choir and crossing of Washington Cathedral, which work will be pushed for completion in time for the General Convention of the Church, to be held in Washington in October. General Pershing, by his sponsorship of this gathering, formally assumed leadership also of the nation-wide campaign for Washington Cathedral, and in his address of the occasion, said:

"My chief interests are the building of monuments in France to the memory of the service of American soldiers in the war, and assisting to build this great cathedral to the glory of Him to Whom we owe all our greatness. Many cathedrals, unfortunately, have been destroyed in wars, and I, for one, should like to have a hand in building a cathedral."

Among those in attendance at this dinner were: The Bishop of Washington and Mrs. James E. Freeman, the Dean of Washington and Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Major General and Mrs. George Barnett, Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. William R. Castle, Jr., William H. Church, Bronson Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Glover, Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, Major General and Mrs. Grote Hutcheson, Coleman Jennings, the Rev. and Mrs. Robert Johnston, Col. and Mrs. Francis T. A. Junkin, Miss Bessie J. Kibbey, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin N. Lewis, Miss Jessie C. McDonald, the Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, the Under Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Ogden L. Mills, Mrs. James Parmelee, Miss Elizabeth Ellicott Poe, the Rt. Rev. and Mrs. Philip M. Rhinelander, Dr. and Mrs. William C. Rives, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Rust, Mrs. John D. Sherman, John K. Sherman, the Rev. and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran Thom, Mrs. John Campbell White and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic W. Rhinelander, of New York; Rosewell Page, of Richmond; Mrs. Frederick S. Converse, of Westwood, Mass.; William G. ## VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

To Honor Bishops.

Rectors and vestrymen of all the Episcopal Churches of Richmond and vicinity were tendered a buffet supper and reception in the Westmoreland Club on February 22, by the rector and vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in order that they might meet the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of this Diocese.

Approximately one hundred and fifty persons attended the informal meeting at which Bishop Tucker and his father, Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, were the guests of honor.

The Rev. Yates Downman, rector of All Saints' Church, asked the blessing. Short addresses by Bishop H. St. George Tucker and Bishop Beverley D. Tucker followed the supper, in which they made remarks of greeting.

Regional Conference.

Bishop H. St. George Tucker preached the opening sermon before the regional conference on faith and order, which was held on February 22 at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia. Clergymen of the various denominations attended this conference, which was in session for two days.

Wednesday afternoon there was a session in the parish house with devotional exercises conducted by the Rev. J. W. Latham, D. D., pastor of Centenary Methodist Church. There were addresses on "The Existing Unity and Its Implications", by the Rev. W. Cosby Bell, D. D., of the Virginia Episcopal Seminary, and "A Formula for Union" by the Rev. John M. Moore, Corresponding Secretary, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

All of the meetings were open to the public, but the public was especially invited to attend the night meetings. Wednesday night the devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector of St. Paul's. The addresses were delivered by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on "The Lausanne Record", and the Rev. W. Adams Brown, D. D., of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, on "Next Steps".

Bishop Cannon is widely known as an impressive and earnest speaker. Dr. Brown is a graduate of Yale and of the Union Theological Seminary. He also attended the University of Berlin for two years. He was ordained to the Presbyterian ministry in 1893. Since 1898 he has held the Roosevelt chair of systematic theology at the Union Theological Seminary. He has been active in a great many organizations seeking to promote greater unity and cooperation among the Christian bodies and he is the author of a number of outstanding religious books.

The purpose of the conference was to give to the ministry and laity of the various churches an opportunity to hear from delegates to Lausanne a report of the work done by that body. There were also round-table and general discussions on various topics pertaining to the accomplishments of the Lausanne gathering, and matters affecting Christian cooperation and fellowship.

Is Christianity the Religion for the Future?

will be the general subject of a course of lectures by Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell, President of St. Stephen's College, on Monday afternoons in Lent, at five o'clock, in St. Thomas' Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street The lectures are under the auspices of the National Church Club for Women and the Church Club of New York, the diocesan club for men.

February 27—Wanted: Better Gods.
March 5—The Paradox of Man.
March 12—Adventure for Agnostics.
March 17—Mysticism versus Magic.
March 26—Food for Wayfaring Men.
April 2—The Compulsion of the Cross.

President Bell's lectures in this course have been delivered at various times in the college chapels at Princeton, Williams, Amherst, Wesleyan, St. Stephen's, Chicago and Wellesley. They are intended primarily for those who think and act in the fashion of modern educated young men and women of the world. They are not phrased in terms of denunciation. Dr. Bell believes that the younger generation are honest, sincere and sorely puzzled people, deeply concerned with what can be believed and why people should believe, if indeed they should. Those who have read his articles in The Atlantic Monthly will understand his manner of approach.

The hour will be devoted to twenty-five minutes of lecture, twenty minutes of question box and ten minutes of devotions. The question box is important. Questions inserted one week will be answered the next—as far as possible—if time prevents that in all cases, then by mail.

Noon-Day Lenten Services.

Baltimore has the distinction of having started the Noon-Day Lenten Services now so popular throughout the country. The first of these services was held in the Church of the Messiah, then located in the heart of the business section of the city. At the initial service a dozen men were present and one of them was asked to come forward and play the organ. The sermon was preached by the rector, the Rev. Peregrine Wroth. This Noon-Day Service immediately became popular and the church was crowded with men. For several years the local clergy filled the pulpit; then invitations were extended to well-known preachers in other cities. The services continued for thirty years.

In 1904, following the great fire, Old St. Paul's, Charles and Saratoga Streets, the mother church of the city, began the same practice and has continued with full congregations every Lent since that time. Some of the most eminent preachers in the country have occupied the pulpit. The schedule of services for 1928 is as follows:

Ash Wednesday, February 22—The Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D.

Thursday, February 23—The Rev. Hugh Birckhead, D. D.

Friday, February 24—The Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Litt. D.

Monday, February 27 to Friday, March 2—The Rt. Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia.

Monday, March 5—The Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Maryland.

Tuesday, March 6, to Friday, March 9—The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, D. D., President St. Stephen's College.

Monday, March 12, to Friday, March 16—The Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., L. H. D., Evanston, Ill.

Monday, March 19—The Rev. Walter O. Kinsolving, Summit, N. J.

Tuesday, March 20, to Thursday, March 22—The Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, Amherst, Mass.

Friday, March 23—The Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D.

Monday, March 26, to Friday, March 30—The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Central New York.

Monday, April 2, to Tuesday, April 3—The Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, D. D., Providence, R. I.

Wednesday, April 4—The Rev. William A. McClenthen, D. D.

Thursday, April 5—The rector, the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D.

Good Friday, April 6, 12 to 3—The rector.

Quiet Day for Clergy.

The annual quiet day for the clergy of the diocese of Maryland, in preparation for Lent, was held at St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, on February 21. A series of meditations were conducted by the rector, the Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D. The clergy were then the guests of the Bishops of the Diocese at luncheon.

New Wing Dedicated at Church Home and Infirmary.

With simple and impressive ceremony, the new northwest wing of the Church Home and Infirmary was dedicated on Monday, February 20, by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, who was assisted by the Rt. Rev. Edward Trail Helfenstein, and the Rev. Rudolph J. Gunkel, the Chaplain. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Chilton Powell, President of the Board of Trustees, presided and spoke briefly. A short statement made by Edward Guest Gibson, Councillor of the Diocese and Secretary of the Board of Trustees, told of the work and the need of the institution.

In his brief address, Bishop Murray, visitor to the Church Home and Infirmary, pointed out that when the disciples of St. John the Baptist questioned Jesus, Art Thou the Messiah? He did not tell them to remind St. John the Baptist of the heavens opening, of the descent of the Spirit of God like a dove, or of the Voice from Heaven, but replied, "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them". "The Church Home and Infirmary," he said, "does all these things. It is a living exemplification of the Spirit of Christ."

As a grateful tribute Bishop Murray presented Miss Jane Nash, the Superintendent, to the guests of the occasion as being the directing head of the institution.

"The new wing was a venture of faith," said Mr. Gibson. It was built with borrowed money with the belief that the money would be given. It involves an added expense of $12,000 a year to the institution, but the need was so great that the work was undertaken.

Mr. Gibson pointed out that the Church Home and Infirmary is not a wealthy institution, but is in need of additional funds for the care of the aged and the treatment of the sick.

Dr. Powell told of the future plans of the Church Home and Infirmary, which, when completed, will provide a hospital with three hundred and thirty-three beds and a home with provision for one hundred and seventy-five old ladies. In addition, there will be the training school for nurses, helping to meet one of the greatest medical needs of the day.

The Church Home and Infirmary was founded in 1858 by the union of an infirmary for the sick and suffering and a home for the aged. It adopted for its seal the picture of the Parable of the Good Samaritan. Since then it has ministered to all in this spirit.

The new northwest wing will be used temporarily as a nurses' home. The wing is part of the general plan and is connected with the other buildings. Looking forward to the day when the nursing staff will be housed in an adequate and properly designed nursing home, it has been planned for hospital purposes. It will provide eighty additional beds.

The latest hospital equipment has been provided.

Payments on Field Department Subscriptions and Diocesan Expense Assessments in 1927.

With the thought that the figures may be of general interest, especially to those persons who care for comparative statistics, there is given below an analysis of payments made by the churches in Southwestern Virginia on their obligations to the diocese (and through it to the General Church) up to the time the Diocesan Treasurer's books were closed for the year 1927.

A few years ago this diocese discontinued the plan of making apportionments against the various churches for the Field Department (called by some "The Church's Program" and formerly known as the Nation-Wide Campaign). A total program, including the budget of the diocese and the budget quota for the General Church, is laid before the congregations at the time of the Every Member Canvass and they are asked to make their pledges with this total as a goal for the whole diocese.

As a result of the Every Member Canvass conducted in the fall of 1926, to finance the Field Departments of the diocese and the General Church quota, seventy-three churches and missions subscribed $53,035. At the time the diocesan books were closed for 1927 it was found that:

Forty-five had paid the exact amounts pledged.

Eleven had overpaid their pledges by a total of $1,749.93, of which $1,389.43 was an overpayment by one congregation.

Twelve that had made no pledges at all in the canvass actually paid during the year $332.29.

Three had made no payments on their pledges totalling $118.

Fourteen had paid a part but had fallen short of their original pledges; the total shortage being $696.67 in these cases.

The final net result was that, whereas $53,035 had been pledged, the total payments amounted to $54,302.55, or 102.4 per cent. If we leave out of consideration the large overpayment by one church we still have 99.77 as the percentage of payments.

In the matter of diocesan expense assessments the record for the year was good, although not quite up to that of the Field Department.

There were seventy-four original assessments, totalling $10,908.

Fifty-two congregations paid their respective amounts exactly.

Three overpaid by a total of $2.25.

One mission so small that it had received no assessment paid $10.91 anyway.

Ten made no payments at all; the total of their assessments being $465.

Nine paid a part, but fell short of their assessments by a total of $109.

The final net results was that against original assessments of $10,908, there were payments amounting to $10,347.16, 94.86 per cent.

Although the books for 1927 have been closed, payments are yet being received on delinquent 1927 accounts, being noted of course in such a way that they will not become confused with the pledges and assessments for 1928.

The Diocesan Treasurer is grateful for what he considers fine cooperation on the part of the congregations in the Diocese and their respective rectors, vestries and treasurers.

While the actual figures noted above may mean little to the Church at large, outside of Southwestern Virginia, it is quite possible that the officials of other dioceses would obtain interesting information by making analyses of their own receipts along similar lines.

Request for Bishop Coadjutor.

Bishop Garland has made formal request for a Bishop Coadjutor to assist in sharing the increasing administrative and other duties in the diocese.

The Standing Committee has given its unanimous consent to the Bishop's request and official steps were taken February 10 to obtain the necessary "consents" of the Bishops and the Standing Committees of the other dioceses in the United States.

"Extent of diocesan work" is the reason presented by the Bishop for the need of a Bishop Coadjutor. It is pointed out that the Bishop has under his care about two hundred and twenty parishes, missions and chapels; three hundred clergy and nearly 70,000 communicants, in addition to a large number of Church Institutions.

Dr. Burk Winner of Prize.

The Rev. Dr. W. Herbert Burk, founder and rector of the Washington Chapel at Valley Forge, and also founder and president of the Valley Forge Historical Society, was the recipient February 8 in the Academy of Music of the seventh annual Philadelphia award for distinguished service to the community. The award was founded in 1921 by Edward W. Bok and includes a gold medal, an illuminated scroll and a check for $10,000.

Dr. Burk explained to the people who crowded around him in the green room afterward that one half of the check will be devoted to the endowment fund of the chapel and one half will go to the Valley Forge Historical Society.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew in this diocese has an annual Corporate Communion on Washington's birthday. When it was discovered that this year that holiday would coincide with Ash Wednesday, it was decided, after debate, to hold the usual annual service just the same. The event justified the decision, for the largest company that ever came together for this function was the assembly of last Wednesday morning. Five hundred and thirty were present in St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, at eight o'clock that morning for the Eucharist, and nearly as many sat down to breakfast afterward in the Hotel St. George, nearby. There were two admirable addresses on George Washington —one by Judge Charles F. C. Wahle on his characteristics as a citizen, and one by Bishop Stires on his qualities as a Churchman. Bishop Stires also appealed to the men present for recruits for the Diocesan School for Lay-Readers, which lately opened its second session. More candidates are enrolled than for the first session, but there is work for even a larger number. Those who take the training are expected to volunteer for pioneer mission work in the diocese afterward. The Brotherhood is cooperating in gathering candidates for the school.

Here and There About the Diocese With the Bishop.

All praise to the boys and girls of Christ Church, Pensacola. Nowhere can there be found a finer and more faithful crowd of youngsters. For several years now I have watched them with increasing interest and admiration. They are splendidly organized and have sustained a most enviable program of activity, the efforts of which have been felt near and far.

On Ash Wednesday I attended the early Celebration at Christ Church and despite the hour and the deluge of rain, about seventy boys and girls were present. Again at the afternoon service the majority of the congregation were young people, and this is typical of the spirit of loyalty and interest of these youngsters. Their church seems to be coming first with them. They are not a perplexing problem to their rector and their parents, but truly an example to the whole parish.

It is most gratifying to know that so many of our churches are having special preaching missions at this season. Holy Trinity, Gainesville, and St. John's, Tallahassee, have just closed successful missions conducted by the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, our General Missioner. St. Mark's, Stark, reports a most helpful mission, conducted by the Rev. E. L. Pennington, of St. Andrew's, Jacksonville. St. Peter's, Fernandina; the Church of the Good Shepherd, St. John's and St. Andrew's, Jacksonville; St. Mark's, Palatka; St. Paul's, Federal Point; Christ Church, Cedar Key, and other congregations will also have missions during Lent. All of these missions purpose a continuation of the Bishops' Crusade, begun a year ago in Florida, in which renewed allegiance and personal evangelism were the clear call. Florida is not forgetting the Crusade.

Evangelistic Meeting in Toledo.

By permission of the Diocesan Council, the Committee on Evangelism held their Retreat for Diocesan Clergy at St. Mark's and Trinity Churches in Toledo, beginning with a dinner on January 26, and closing with a luncheon at St. Marks January 28. The speaker this year was the Rt. Rev. Reginald H. Weller, D. D., Bishop of Fond du Lac, who stands foremost as a leader among the clergy throughout the Church, in the matter of evangelistic catholicism. He had no place in his heart, he said, for a mere mass priest. Though a High Churchman, he made not a single reference to anything of that nature. He kept everything of the Church in his explanation of things, but uttered no word of controversy. His main subject, he said, was the love of God. It was spoken simply by Jesus to His disciples. The Bishop's whole topic being the contact of Jesus with His disciples, whom He sent into the world to preach the Gospel, was spoken so simply and effectively that it deeply impressed the fifty clergy present.

Surprise Gift Completes Deanery Fund.

As the dean of Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Arizona (the Very Rev. Edwin S. Lane), was presiding at the annual meeting of the Cathedral parish on January 17, a note on a small piece of paper containing a blue slip was quietly passed to him. On opening this note what was his astonishment to read "For the Deanery", signed by the Junior Warden of the Cathedral and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. McKellips. On opening the blue slip the Dean discovered to his much greater astonishment a check for the sum of $8,000, the exact amount needed to complete the fund for a deanery. The fund was started by a Christmas present from the Rt. Rev. J. W. Atwood, now retired Bishop of Arizona, on behalf of an anonymous donor who gave $12,000 for a deanery provided that the corporation should provide a lot which it owned next door to the Cathedral plant and that the parish should raise the sum of $8,000.

The gift of $8,000 at the annual meeting completed the fund and plans are now being drafted. It is hoped the new deanery will be ready for occupancy by fall.

These splendid gifts leave the parish free to undertake another building campaign very greatly needed—the erection of a new wing to the present parish building. The Church School for a number of years has overgrown its present quarters and there is great need for larger accommodations. Ways and means are now being considered to raise the amount necessary for a new building which will cost approximately $75,000.

New Church.

A magnificent new church, designed by the firm of Cram and Ferguson, New York, is to be erected by the congregation of St. Paul's, Winston-Salem, according to a decision recently made by the vestry. The present plant, consisting of church, parish house and rectory, was sold some months ago at a large figure, in order to remove to a site further from the business center.

Forward Movement.

Though there was an increase of $6,000 in pledges to the Forward Movement for 1928 over those for 1927, the Executive Council of the Diocese of North Carolina at a recent meeting had to make some reductions in the $82,000 Forward Movement budget that had been adopted. A revised budget of $75,769 was adopted. At this meeting the diocesan treasurer announced that all 1927 obligations had been paid in full. The diocese will pay its full quota to the General Church in 1928, as it did in 1927.

Lenten Offering.

The Diocese of North Carolina has set $7,000 as its goal for the 1928 Lenten Offering. The Rev. T. F. Opie, D. D., is secretary for the Offering, and has assigned quotas to parishes.

Church Improvement Societies.

One of the most unique and useful Church organizations in the diocese is the Church Improvement Society, of Trinity Church, Scotland Neck, which recently began its fiftieth year. During its long life it has had only two presidents, mother and daughter; Mrs. Peter Evans Smith was the first president, and since her death a number of years ago, it has been under the direction of Miss Lena Smith. It has helped to build two churches in the parish, bought a rectory almost unaided, and done much work of all kinds.

Evangelism.

Evangelistic work is being carried on with apostolic fervor in Rockingham County, North Carolina, under the direction of Miss Lillie Hill. "The Evangelistic Band of the Highways and Hedges", organized and directed by Miss Hill, an Auxiliary worker, visits the sick, relieves the poor and unfortunate, holds services in prison camps, and carries on a continuous crusade for decision to lead a Christian life. The president, Mark Richardson, is a young man who works for ten hours a day in a cotton mill. A list of the Christmas activities of the Band reads like a page out of the New Testament.

The rector of St. Paul's, Winston-Salem, N. C., the Rev. R. E. Gribbin, recently made his congregation sit up and take notice when he declared that if more prayer meetings and less social functions were given young women who had announced their intention of getting married the ratio between marriage and divorce would grow less. He insisted strongly that every man and woman contemplating marriage ought to seriously consider the religious obligations involved in the establishment of a home.

A Rectory.

Emmanuel Church, Warrenton, which has just completed a handsome new church edifice, has begun the construction of a rectory. The first story will be of brick, and the second of waterproof stucco. The architecture will blend with that of the church. The rector, the Rev. B. N. deFoe Wagner, designed the rectory.

Our Old Saint Paul's.

The following letter was sent recently to the editor of the Buffalo Courier-Express:

It was my grateful privilege this happy Lord's day morning to attend service at "Old Saint Paul's" Church. Shelton Square, and share in the joy which greeted Dr. Jessup's return to his devoted ministry after his illness.

Following the long established custom of reviewing, at the opening of every year, the very interesting history of Saint Paul's Parish, Dr. Jessup took occasion to recall the more important events connected with the establishment and growth of this, the first and oldest of all the churches of our home city. Organized in 1816, and worshipping ever since on the same consecrated ground, Old Saint Paul's has a history and a glory peculiarly its own, and may well be reckoned as one of our noblest and most venerated civic possessions.

In churchly beauty, without and within, it stands alone within the city's gates, and has but few equals in the religious beyond, wherever one may go. Its location (while necessarily depriving it of its original constituency), immeasurably enhances its spiritual appeal. To thousands it is a daily reminder that the things which are seen are but temporal—and that the things which are not seen are alone eternal. And how heartening and refreshing is the noontide music of its lovely-throated chimes!

Who would dare to suggest the profanation of de-consecrating dear Old Saint Paul's, to erect in its place some towering structure, utterly without sentiment and forever incapable of serving the city's worthier ideals and noblest lasting life? Let me call attention to one item of Dr. Jessup's message, which was especially interesting, the statement that Saint Paul's endowment fund had now reached the gratifying sum of $350,000.

That is good news, indeed—and does great credit to all who have shared in this notable service to the local parish and the city to which this justly revered church has so generously ministered for more than a hundred years.

We are confident that there are many Buffalonians, representing many different communions, who would be glad to share in the effort which Dr. Jessup and his church officiary are making to increase the endowment fund, within the near future, to fully five hundred thousand dollars.

The city is preparing to celebrate its centennial, in 1932.

Wouldn't it be fine if Old Saint Paul's might then have reached the goal assuring its beneficent ministry to Greater Buffalo for another full century and more? Let us agree (with Bishop Brent's consent and hearty approval—to ### Collect for the Second Sunday in Lent.

Almighty God, Who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves; keep us both outwardly in our bodies and inwardly in our souls from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from the evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul; through Jesus Crist Our Lord. Amen.

De Profundis.

Kate C. Shipp.

Out of the deep we call to Thee,
Out of the dark and treacherous sea,
Thy waves, thy storms, have all
Gone over us and left us crushed,
For help, with voices almost hushed,
Out of the deep, we call.

Not from the glowing mountain height
Touched with the morning's rosy light
Where golden sunbeams fall;
Not from the crests, where all we see
Is light and life, we cry to Thee,
'Tis from the depths we call.

'Tis only in the darkest hour
When waves sweep on and storm-clouds lower,
And deepest shadows fall,
With breaking heart and lifted eye,
"O hear our plaint!" we humbly cry,
From out the deep we call.

The Inevitable Cross.

One thought which impresses itself, when the events which makes the season of Lent so rich in significance are called to mind, is that the cross was the inevitable goal that must be reached before the Saviour's life could issue in the world's redemption. Apart from its being ordained before the foundations of the world were laid, no other issue was to be expected but that the only sinless, spotless life would be the victim of the world's sin. The waters of the Mississippi as they issue from the lake where it takes its rise are pure and clear as crystal. But when the Ohio, Missouri and other streams pour their waters into it, the clean waters from its source come into conflict with the muddy accessions poured into it on its way to the Gulf. It is anything but a pure and refreshing river as it widens and deepens in its near approach to the sea. Its purity at the source has met with currents that are unclean, and its death as a refreshing stream to quench the thirst of millions living on its banks is the result. The battle between the clean and the unclean is inevitable.

Inadequate as the comparison may be, the sinless, spotless life of the Son of God met with just such a reception when it came into contact with a sinful world. Such a life could not possibly be at home in a sin-tainted humanity. It was like a pure stream flowing through a basin where it met with sin-stained hostile currents and was lost in the conflict between the two. "He came unto His own and His own received Him not." When the angel choir announced His coming, His cradle was a manger in a stable because there was no room for Him in the inn. He was not welcome even among His own kith and kin. When He ministered to the sick and the needy, and even to the dying and the dead, when He threw the arms of His love around those who were dying for the want of love, He met with contempt and hatred on the part of those who considered themselves to be chosen of God to be watchmen on the towers of Zion. When He mingled with sinners that He might lift them up and free them from sin's bondage, He was numbered as one of them and made to appear as a blasphemer and as one possessed of the devil. When in His works of mercy He performed wonders to attest His deity, He aroused the envy and the wrath of the responsible leaders of the Church until finally the crisis was reached, and He was numbered among the transgressors and nailed to the cross. The pure stream of divinity poured itself into the corrupt stream of the humanity, and He who knew no sin became ingulfed in the sin of the world and poured out His life blood upon the cross: "He was despised and rejected of men: a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and by his stripes we are healed." Just as the pure waters of the upper Mississippi had to flow through the muddy waters of the lower Mississippi, so did the spotless life of the Son of God take its course through the sin-cursed life of humanity to meet its inevitable goal on Calvary. No other issue could possibly be expected. Holiness came into contact with sin, and the result was clearly foreseen by Him who knew no sin. From the birth to the grave His was but a journey to the cross.

But the death upon the cross has become the great purifying stream for our sin-tainted humanity. There is a divine chemistry at work ever since that has cleansing properties. The unclean no longer has undisputed sway over the clean. There is a water of life, a river of life, which took its rise when Christ was nailed to the cross, and it has been broadening out into a marvelous cleansing stream that is destined to flow through the uttermost parts of the earth. The apostles caught sight of it and pointed men to it with a zeal and faith that knew no bounds. Peter with a holy boldness that is in marked contrast with his cowardly denial faces those who in their ignorance and blindness shouted with the multitude, "Crucify Him"! and with thrusts sharp as arrows brings home to their consciences a deep sense of their guilt in crucifying Him who has become the redeemer of mankind. His message rings with a certainty and finality which is by no means in evidence in many a Protestant pulpit today. No salvation in any other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved is the heart of his message. Paul has the same message when he says that he knows of no other Gospel but Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

And that is the message the world needs today. There is much preaching where that central note of the Gospel is missing. Much is said of the love of God, but little of His wrath against sin. Men are supposed to be saved today by imitating Christ, not by faith in a redemption wrought out upon the cross. That Christ should have borne the world's sin upon His heart and suffered its penalty for all mankind is not a popular message in our day. But the whole fiber and texture of the Scriptures is shot through with that redemptive note and woe to the Church when once it substitutes shallow ethics for the blood-bought redemption wrought out upon the cross by the world's only Redeemer.—Lutheran.

The Undying Faith.

For what it may be worth, here is part of a report, translated from a Moscow paper, sent to the Bible Society Record, of a lecture given in Russia last July by the Commissioner for Atheism.

"It is to be noticed that even now, in the tenth year after the Revolution, common people when visiting Lenin's mausoleum are still respectfully crossing themselves, and the vexed government is powerless against this proceeding. The fight against religion is becoming endless, obstinate, and very ungrateful. . . .

"According to the Sec. 13 of the statutes of the Communistic Party, every member has to carry on atheistic propaganda. But no one does it. Many are eager atheists only in words; but in their homes one can see a lot of icons. Women are especially very obstinate in their resistance to a healthy atheism. . . .

"Today we are living in a period of religious movement. The upstart is growing strong and seeks to support the Church, which is a seat of reaction and an active opposition to everything bearing the name of "Soviet".

"The churches are renewed, and the clergy are busy getting means for gilding the domes. We cannot ignore the elevation and growing strength of our enemy. . . . . It is remarkable that no vagrants or tramps are to be noticed in the Christians unions of youngsters, their life being generally faultless; and it has occurred even that some of the communistic youth and chiefly the best of them, have passed over to the sectarians."

The Work of The Spirit.

The Spirit is in endless pursuit of man, whether the man is saved or unsaved, in the Church or out of it. God Incarnate in Jesus, in the Person of the Holy Spirit, is out after the soul, pursuing it wherever it may flee. It is foolish to try to escape a "divine lover". But this all of us sometimes do. But we fail. Both Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde are in every one of us, and who in the course of a long life has not uttered the words of the Psalmist, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit"? No matter where we go, what we do, we cannot escape the Spirit of God. It is impossible. The Spirit woos us, good or bad, all the time. This truth is beautifully portrayed in Francis Thompson's "Hound of Heaven". Though man flees from God, he is conscious of His love. It is the eternal chase of man by the "Celestial Huntsman", the Spirit of God. Let us all highly resolve to set aside everything selfish, unworthy and mean, all indifference and coldness of heart, everything by which we are fleeing from His love. The Spirit strives with man, wooing him to the high endeavor.

I believe the Holy Spirit is working in this age, at this very hour. He is kindling the brave and generous hearts of this generation. He is in the midst of every gathering that looks to the moral and spiritual uplift of the world. The Spirit is working in the boldness and unusual daring of our young people. He is leading them, as well as the older folk, away from sham and unreality. He is actively at work with them in their ceaseless search for the truth. He is hand in hand with them in the fearlessness with which they are clamoring for fair and just recognition. The Spirit, I believe, is in the most wonderful transformation of two thousand years, the assertion of women for their rights. And I believe the Spirit to be operative in the tumultuous unsettlement in industry, struggling for the spirit and practice of the brotherhood of man. I believe the Spirit is playing a large part in the crumbling of kingdoms and empires with their autocracy and injustice, looking for the coming of democracy as a fact in the whole world. My conviction is that the Holy Spirit is today reckoning with man's crass selfishness, greed, disobedience and the clash of will with will, working with folk in bondage for their deliverance—endeavoring to make the kingdoms of this world to be in fact His own kingdoms. We know the inadequacy of the power of civilization, it has been pressed upon us in recent years. Even though we internationalize scholarship, labor, commerce, banking—the powers of the world will fail. The Holy Spirit must do His perfect work first. And when the Holy Spirit has full sway in this world, the prophet's dream of a golden era of rest and plenty, and the poet's song of radiant empires of equality and justice will be realized.—Pierce S. Ellis, in Religious Herald.

What Pat Announced.

Father Boyle was sick and unable to celebrate mass. One Sunday morning he called in Patrick, the old sexton, and explained that he was sick, and to inform the people, explaining that due to his illness they couldn't hear mass, and that that would be no sin on their part.

Patrick stood attention, occasionally saying, "Yes, Father". As Patrick was about to leave Father Boyle said: "Patrick, you might as well make the announcements for the week. Next Thursday confessions will be heard for the first Friday; Tuesday, Feast of St. Peter and Paul. Collection next Sunday for the Holy Father, the Pope. A package has been found in the church; owner can have same by calling at the sacristy. On Wednesday John Clancy and Mary McCool will be married in this church. Any one knowing why these persons should not be married will please make known their reasons to proper authorities."

Patrick carried out Father Boyle's instructions as follows: "Ladies and Gentlemen: Father Boyle is sick and that is no sin. Next Thursday will be First Friday. Tuesday will be the feast of John Clancy and Mary McCool. The Pope will be here next Sunday to take up the collection, and on Wednesday St. Peter and Paul will be married in this church, and any one what sez they shouldn't be married will find their reasons rolled up in a package by calling in the sacristy."—J. ### Send Me.

Is there some desert or some pathless sea
Where thou, good God of angels, wilt send me?
Some oak for me to rend; some sod,
Some rock for me to break;
Some handful of his corn to take
And scatter far afield,
Till it, in turn, shall yield
Its hundred fold
Of grains of gold
To feed the waiting children of my God?
Show me the desert, Father, or the sea.
Is it Thine enterprise? Great God, send me.

Two Ways to Think of Lent.

There are two ways of thinking of Lent. One, that it is a most irksome task, but the Church asks us to give up our ordinary pleasures, and so, as we belong to the Church we must, but we long for the Season to be over. And the other, I am glad Lent has come. I have been growing too frivolous, or I have been neglecting more and more religious duties that at one time I was glad and happy to do. I want to recover myself and, by God's help, I am going to keep Lent this year in a way that will help me in holding fast to my new-made vows.—Selected.

Merry Mockingbird Makes a Friend.

Lucile Blanchard Boyd.

Merry Mockingbird was very happy one spring morning. He was flying about in the pine trees and palmettos, singing his usual notes of cheer and gladness. He had eaten a good breakfast of grain which the black hen's chickens had left in their yard. Now she was thanking Mrs. Hen for the food, and telling the neighbors that the world was full of joy.

"What cheer. What cheer. Listen to me.
I'm Florida's bird. It's a nice place to be."

He sang the song over and over, and wondered why the robins and swallows had been in such a hurry to fly back north when the winter was gone, and the warm sun made the days longer. Suddenly he saw Mrs. Cardinal fly up to the big pine tree next to him.

"Good morning," said Merry Mockingbird.

"Good morning," sweetly answered Mrs. Cardinal.

"Have you had your breakfast?" asked Mr. Mockingbird.

"Oh, yes. A fine lot of crumbs at the yellow house near my nest," replied the pretty cardinal.

"I'm glad you're so lucky. How many babies have you this spring?"

"I've three of the prettiest youngsters you ever saw," said the proud mother. "I think they are going to look just like their father. You know everybody admires him."

"Indeed I do! A more gorgeous gentleman is seldom seen. And he's so sociable and good natured, too. Will he teach the babies how to sing as he does?"

"Later on, but now we are teaching them that fine feathers make fine birds," replied Mrs. Cardinal. "We want them to be loved for their beauty as well as their songs. It may pay them some time, you know."

Now close to the trees were some telephone wires, much nearer the ground than the pine branches where Merry Mockingbird and his neighbor were sitting. Up to these wires came Mrs. Ground Dove, a small lady in brown, whose nature was as dull as her feathers. She perched on the wire, and looked sorrowfully down at the chickens playing about their mother. "Who, who?" she sadly sighed.

"Good morning," called Mr. Mockingbird to the dove on the wire.

"Who said good morning?" slowly and mournfully answered the dove without raising her eyes or looking about.

"I, Merry Mockingbird, said good morning to you, Mrs. Dove. Aren't you happy this fine morning? All the birds are gay today."

"Who? Who?" asked Mrs. Dove.

"Why, I for one, and Mrs. Cardinal for another. The world is full of sunshine and flowers, food and new baby birds. Why are you so solemn, Sister Dove?"

"Who asks such a question?" answered the dove in minor tones. "Who can be so heartless as to speak of baby birds to me? Who doesn't know that I lost mine this morning?"

"Lost your babies? How did that happen?" asked Merry Mockingbird.

"Who knows the wicked old cat who ate them? Who, who, who?"

"My dear Mrs. Dove, we're sorry as we can be," said Mrs. Cardinal. "Where were your babies that a cat could catch them?"

"Who would fear to leave them in the hollow in the sand where I hatched them? Who would think a cat would be hunting so early in the morning?"

"Didn't you build a nest for yourself when you laid your eggs?" asked Mr. Mockingbird.

"Who would spend time and work in building a nest when a bare spot of ground would do?" asked the dove.

Mr. Mockingbird and Mrs. Cardinal saw that talking to Mrs. Dove was giving her no joy. With pity for her they flew to a nearby tree top to plan a way of cheering the sorrowful mother.

"I think Mrs. Dove would be much happier if she didn't say 'who' all the time," said Mrs. Cardinal. "How different you'd be, Mr. Mockingbird, if you never sang your glorious notes. You know all the songs of the birds. You mimic the dog and the cat. You talk every language the bird world knows. Can't you teach Mrs. Dove to sing something cheerful?"

"I might try," said the mockingbird. "I know that singing makes us happy. But I think that Mrs. Dove would be more cheerful if she dressed herself in bright colors. If you could get her to wear a touch of scarlet like the hibiscus flowers, or orange like the flame vine, she might even be as gay a bird as Mr. Cardinal."

"At least I can talk to her about her dress," said Mrs. Cardinal, "but she is sad now because the cat ate her babies. I wonder if she would like to see how we build the nests for our children. She might see that nests in the trees are better for little ones than the bare ground."

"Who, who, who?" cried the dove from the telephone wire, still mourning.

"I'll go and find my wife," said Merry Mockingbird, "and maybe she can persuade Mrs. Dove to build a nest. Then if she wants to have us help her, we can all gather leaves and stems and grasses to build with."

Away flew Mr. Mockingbird to find his mate, and back to the telephone pole flew Mrs. Cardinal. In a short time Mrs. Mockingbird appeared. She perched on the pole above Mrs. Cardinal, so that they could talk plainly to the dove.

"Now, Mrs. Dove," said Mrs. Cardinal, "we think you'll be happier if you build a nest and lay two more eggs, so that you can raise more babies. Mrs. Mockingbird and I will take you to our homes so that you can see our nests. We will help you gather twigs, if you wish."

Mrs. Cardinal led the way to her nest near the yellow house beyond the chicken yard.

"Wait a minute," she said, shaking her head. "I'll peek and see if my children are awake."

She quietly flew down to the nest and, as she did so, three tiny crested heads appeared.

"Don't be alarmed," said she to her babies, "it's only mother. I've brought Mrs. Dove and Mrs. Mockingbird to see you."

Mrs. Dove flew up to a branch where she could look into the cardinal's home. It was well built, of dry leaves, straws and stems, and lined with soft grasses. The little cardinal birds were tightly squeezed together.

"Who would think three children would be happy in a small nest like that?" the dove mournfully said. "Who would rather have a tiny house than a big open space?"

Mrs. Cardinal didn't answer the questions, for she was proud of her humble home. She thought Mrs. Dove was unkind to make such a remark, but she forgave her because she was so sad.

"Well, come along and see my nest," said Mrs. Mockingbird. "My birdies have learned to fly, and the house is empty this morning."

She flew straight to a high bush in the clearing near the edge of a small pine grove. There she showed the dove a stout nest of bark, roots and twigs, all softly lined with feathers and fine grasses.

"What do you think of my house?" asked the mockingbird.

"Who wouldn't like such a nest?" sadly answered the dove.

"Why don't you build one like it?" said the mockingbird.

"Who would help me?"

"Both of us would," answered the cardinal.

"Who will find a safe place?"

"Let's look about for a tall bush," said the mockingbird.

Off they went in two directions, Mrs. Dove following Mrs. Mockingbird, and Mrs. Cardinal going alone. They flew but a short distance when the mockingbird spied an old nest with a "For Rent" sign on the door. She went close to it. Then she called the dove.

"Here's a nest all ready to live in. I remember that a cousin of mine lived here last year. Isn't it a fine place for you to lay two nice white eggs?"

"Who said I could live here?" asked the dove.

"I'll tell my cousin that I let you in," replied the mockingbird.

Without any more words, Mrs. Dove took the nest for her home. Then she started to find Mr. Ground Dove to tell him the news.

Mrs. Mockingbird and Mrs. Cardinal returned to the tall treetop, where Merry Mockingbird was singing.

Mrs. Cardinal waited for Mrs. Mockingbird to say something. Just then they heard the dove calling, "Who who"? They turned their heads to hear what she had to say.

"Who wouldn't love the mockingbird?" the dove was singing. And the notes weren't as sad as they had been a short time before. "Who wouldn't love my friend?"

Then loudly sang Mr. Mockingbird on the high pine branch in answer to the dove's song of praise:

"What cheer. What cheer. Listen to me.
I'm Florida's bird. It's a nice place to be."

Holy Zion.

Edith Blodgett, Age 11.

O Zion! holy Zion,
I love thy holy name,
I love thy holy city
To which the Saviour came.

(Chorus.)

O Zion! holy Zion,
I love thy holy name,
Although thy wall be broken down,
I love thee just the same.

O Zion! holy Zion,
O what could sweeter be
Than the one dear thought—
Our Saviour taught in thee.

(Chorus.)

O Zion! holy Zion,
I love thy holy name,
Although thy wall be broken down,
I love thee just the same. Amen.

An Indian Legend.

"Aunt Stanton."

When the Great Spirit walked on earth, the grass sprang up where He trod, flowers blossomed around each of His footprints; trees gave forth green leaves to shelter Him, and all the summer green things rejoiced in loveliness.

But when autumn came they were sad, for they had to lose their pretty color and fall to the ground. When the Great Spirit saw this, he remembered that the trees had given Him kind shade, and He was sorry for the leaves, so He touched them and turned them into birds.

The brown and red ones became robins, the bright red ones cardinals, and the yellow ones gold-finches, rice-birds and canaries.

So all the bird family were made out of colored leaves.

That is why the birds love the trees so, and always live with them and make their nests in the branches.

The Best Way to Spend a Birthday.

Shirley woke up early on her birthday morning. The sun was streaming in at her bedroom windows as if inviting her to get up, for something nice always happened on Shirley's birthday. Mother and sister Anne saw to that, and there was always a new surprise each year.

"I wonder what we'll do today," said Shirley to herself, as she jumped out of bed and slipped her feet into pink bedroom slippers. She dressed as quickly as she could and ran downstairs to breakfast.

"Happy birthday!" cried big sister Anne.

"Happy birthday, little daughter!" said father and mother together.

One might think Shirley was spoiled with all this, but she wasn't, not a bit of it. She was usually so busy making others happy that she didn't have time to think of herself, and because she wasn't spoiled every one loved her.

She clapped her hands as she took her place at the breakfast table, for there was a long white envelope beside her plate with her name. "Miss Shirley Hunter." That must be the surprise, of course.

"Not until after breakfast," warned her father playfully, as she began to open it.

She tried her best not to eat fast, but she could not keep her eyes from the letter. At last they had finished, and Shirley tore open the envelope. The letter inside was written in large red printed letters, so she could read it every bit herself.

"Happy birthday!" it began. "Look under the inkstand on father's desk."

Away she ran as fast as she could, and there she found a second long envelope with red printing on it. This time the letter inside said:

"The fun has only just begun.
Hurry now; let's see you run
Up to the attic, where you'll see Something new for your dolly's tea."

"Oh, oh, Anne!" they heard her exclaim when she had reached the top attic stair. Then she came down very slowly with a large box in her hands.

"I only just peeped into it," she said, "but I know it's doll dishes," and she began unpacking them. In the very bottom of the box was another white envelope.

"If on your bureau you will look,
You will find a ——"

"Story-book," finished Shirley as she ran upstairs a second time, and came back with another package.

"Oh, daddy, it's lovely!" she said as she gave him a big hug. "And I'm going to read it all myself, too. Why, here's another letter. It says:

"In the corner of the bookcase
Is a tiny little box,
There's a chance that you may find,
If you're as sly as a little fox.
Mother."

Shirley scampered off, her cheeks pink as the flowers in her dress. This time she came back, holding out her hand, so that they might see the tiny gold ring on her finger.

"It's the prettiest I ever saw, mother, dear!" she cried. "And it has my initials on it, too. Oh, this is the nicest birthday I ever had!"

"You haven't had very many," teased her father.

"I've had six. And that's a lot."

"Mercy me, then you must think I'm a very old man," laughed Mr. Hunter.

"There's only one more thing, Shirley," said her mother. "We are going to let you ask some one to come this afternoon for tea. You may ask whoever you wish, but you had better decide soon, for there isn't much time left."

Shirley sat down and tried to think. Should it be her best friend or Aunt Miriam, or ——. Suddenly she jumped up.

"Oh, I know!" she cried. "I'll ask the little girl who just moved in up the street. I've had such a nice time myself that I'd like to share it with some one who is lonesome, and I guess she is."

"That's a fine idea," said Sister Anne.

"Then I'll go ask her right away."

When Shirley returned, she looked very sober.

"Well, can't she come?" asked Sister Anne.

"Yes, she can; and, Anne, she had just been crying because she hadn't any one to play with. She said she's watched me go past, but wasn't sure where I lived. Besides, she has never lived in the city before, and doesn't like it a bit."

"Perhaps if you will be friends with her and help her get acquainted she will like it," suggested Shirley's mother.

So at half past two the door bell rang, and there was the other little girl. In just a few minutes they were playing as though they had always been friends, and when the time came for Shirley's birthday cake to be cut, and the pink ice cream served in the new dishes, both little girls declared they never knew the time to fly so fast.

When Shirley's new friend had gone home, Shirley told her mother that it was truly the best birthday, if she had had only six of them, and that she was going to find some one each year to share her happiness.—Mary Ruth Clemens, in Our Little Ones.

For Jesus' Sake.

"Mother," said a little boy, "I wish Jesus lived on earth now."

"Why, my darling?"

"Because I should like so much to do something for him."

"But what could such a little bit of a fellow as you are do for Him?"

The child said, "Why, I could run all His errands for Him."

"So you could, my child, and so you shall. Here is a glass of jelly and some oranges for poor, old Margaret; I will let you take them, and do an errand for the Saviour, for when upon earth He said, 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me'. Whenever you do a kind act for anybody because you love Jesus, it is just the same as if the Saviour were now living on the earth and you were doing it for Him."—The Illustrator.

Adventuring.

It's great to go adventuring
With a boat upon a lake,
To watch the trout and tadpoles
Where ripples gleam and break!

Perhaps you spy a bird's nest
Where water willows grow,
And paddle by so softly
That the birds will never know.

Or a heron flies up startled,
A mink jumps in the lake,
And you see the sudden ripple
From a frightened water snake!

It's fine to go exploring
Along a reedy shore,
To paddle out on waters
Where you've never been before.

Winnsboro Blue Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest Man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—granite—genuine Winnsboro Blue. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

Of All The Gray Granites,

Winnsboro Blue Granite

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

REPORT FROM RICHMOND BRANCH LEPER MISSION, JANUARY, 1918, JANUARY, 1928.

In January the Richmond Branch closed ten years of service since Mrs. Mason's death. In that time two cottages have been built in memory of her, one costing $1,000.00 at Naini Asylum, India; also a child adopted for life, ($20.00 per year) at the same place; the other buildings on Tai Kam Island, south of Canton, China, for $2,000.00. In memory of Mr. Poindexter, one cottage, $500.00 in India, another, in memory of Miss Alice Manning, $500.00 at Kusatsu, Japan, both much loved teachers of Christ Church, Richmond. $1,000.00 for church in India from Mrs. R. R. Harrison. Towards building Community Church for Lepers at Carville, La. $442.00, the church was completed and dedicated, December, 1924, a great joy to the Lepers!

From Junior Branch under Miss Allison, which does good work, eight years since organized, $1,403.71, and many other things donated to making a total of $23,805.48 from this Branch.

We have entertained many missionaries, from China, Korea, India and this country, always an inspiration to further effort.

Branches in Waynesboro, Wytheville, Petersburg, Cismont, and Berryville, Virginia, are doing well; Norfolk also contributes, though not an organized Branch. Money is collected each year for simple gifts for Lepers at Christmas, $325.00 was forwarded in December; also a box to George Hodges (he Leper who was here for five long years) is sent to Carville Hospital, where 150 Lepers are all comfortably cared for.

A picture of Father Damien, who gave his life for the Lepers, has been presented by Mrs. Tom Scott, and will be used by teachers in different Sunday Schools to tell the story. Two years ago a Jubilee service was held at Mayo-Memorial, with 115 Guests for Luncheon. The President of the American Branch Leper Mission, and many others were present, to commemorate the organizing of the Richmond Branch twenty-five years ago under Mrs. Landon Mason.

Contributions come from many States as far as Connecticut to California.

We ask your prayers and continued interest, many cures are being effected, and there is Hope and renewed Health for the Leper. "The vision is for him who will see it."

Respectfully submitted,
EVELYN P. MERIWETHER,
Pres.-Treas. Richmond Branch Leper Mission.
Address 2346 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Addison, of Richmond, Virginia, Mrs. R. Bruce Warden, of Washington, D. C., five grandchildren, a sister, Baronne Robert de Boulimont, of Paris, France, and a brother, William B. Withers, of Woodville, Miss. Mr. Withers was a communicant of Abingdon Church, Junior Warden of the Vestry and for many years a delegate to the Church Council. He was much interested in everything concerning the old church, its traditions and present and future welfare.

After life's strenuous battle he sleeps under the shadow of the Cross of the church he loved. When only a youth Mr. Withers enlisted in the British Army, serving under Lord Kitchener in Egypt, and was twice decorated for gallantry in action. He was with the detachment that went to the relief of Gordon in Khartum, but arrived too late to succor the besieged. The march across the desert and heat entailed much suffering on the veteran soldier and even more on the young recruit. He was in Alexandria when the Canadian boatmen were sent over to show the Egyptians how to cut the rapids in the Nile. Mr. Withers was commissioned a lieutenant in the World War but was for some time retained in this country to drill recruits in the "technique" of the English Army. When about to sail for France the Armistice was signed and much to his regret he did not "get across". It was fitting that the bugle sound of "Taps" should ring out on the evening air, a tribute to the brave soldier who had served under the colors of the "mother country", England, and later those of his native land. ### SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

Annual Report of the Treasurer for 1927.

Bishop and Mrs. White entertained at luncheon January 20 the members of the Bishop and Council, for the first meeting of the year.

Mr. S. Raymond Tingley, of Alton, the Diocesan Treasurer of the Episcopal Church, made a cheering report of the financial progress of the Church during the past year. There were twenty-three parishes and missions within the Diocese of Springfield (running from Bloomington to Cairo and from Danville to East St. Louis) which had paid every dollar asked of them for the work of the Church in the diocese and around the world. This, as compared with ten such parishes and missions in 1925 was a very decided gain. Another most interesting statement brought out was that in every single instance in which records are kept of the receipts of money during the past year there was an increase. In some cases certain sums had doubled in four years.

The Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector of Christ Church, Springfield, who has been the Chairman of the Department of Religious Education for the Diocese, relinquished this work in favor of the Rev. Robert Y. Barber, of St. John's Church, Centralia, who now becomes the head of the Department of Religious Education, and Mr. Wallace assumes the Chairmanship of the Department of Christian Social Service, which work had formerly been under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Barber.

The Bishop and members of the Council paid a tribute of appreciation to the fidelity and leadership of the Treasurer of the Diocese, Mr. Tingley, and to the interest and leadership of Mr. Pascal E. Hatch, of Springfield, who is the Chairman of Department of Finance, and to Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, the Executive Secretary of the Diocese, for their help in enabling the Diocese to have such a splendid year.

It was cheering to know that the Episcopal Diocese of Springfield had during 1927 given to the general missionary work of the Church a larger sum than ever before in its history and at the same time had paid all its local bills.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Bishop.

Convocation.

The thirty-fifth convocation of the District of Spokane closed February 14, with the largest attendance, most enthusiasm and forward-looking plans in the history of the jurisdiction. Bishop M. S. Barnwell, D. D., Bishop of Idaho, was the preacher of the convocation. He emphasized the necessity of the continuity of the priesthood, and the demand and tendency of Church unity.

The Rev. Thomas Mann Burleson, son of the Rev. Edward W. Burleson, and nephew of the Bishop of South Dakota, was ordained priest by the Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross. The father presented him, and Bishop Barnwell gave the address.

The organization of the convocation was effected Sunday evening, by the election of the Rev. F. W. Pratt as Secretary, and the appointment of the Rev. E. B. Christie as assistant.

The following was placed on the Council of Advice or Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. E. R. Allman, T. A. Daughters and E. W. Pigion; and lay, E. H. Knight, John King and Fred Phair.

The Rev. E. W. Pigion was elected clerical deputy to the General Convention, and the Rev. J. A. Palmer alternate. Lay: H. C. Whitehouse, deputy, and Stoddard King, alternate.

Those elected to attend the Synod in May at Salt Lake City are: Delegates—the Rev. Messrs. E. L. Rolls, F. W. Pratt and A. L. Bramhall. Alternates—the Rev. Messrs. T. A. Daughters, J. A. Palmer and S. T. Boggess. Lay: Delegates—W. L. Sterling, B. G. Ewing and F. L. Kershaw. Alternates—M. R. Morton, J. A. S. Rodda, F. L. White.

The new members of the Bishop and Council are: the Rev. E. W. Pigion, the Rev. E. B. Christie; and laymen: H. C. Whitehouse and John Kuelbs.

Reports by the officers of St. Paul's Girls' School at Walla Walla showed it was clear of debt and overflowing with pupils, needing additional room and equipment.

Reports for last year showed the jurisdiction Lenten Offering had increased to $2,163, double the amount given the year before. The Church Schools showed a decrease of 353, although the baptized parishioners showed an increase of 762 over the year before.

Over 150 young people attended the convocation young people's group held at St. Andrew's Church. Miss Louise Davis was elected the new President.

Personal Notes

Dr. Wood and Dr. Teusler expect to sail from Tokyo on March 16, on the Empress of Russia.

Bishop Roots and Mrs. Roots and their daughter expect to sail from Shanghai on May 5, on the President Taft.

The Rev. Churchill Jones Gibson, D. D., of Lexington, Virginia, has announced his acceptance of a call to St. Mary's Church, Ardmore, Pennsylvania, and expects to take up the work there about the middle of April. Dr. Gibson is a son of the late Bishop Robert Atkinson Gibson of the Diocese of Virginia, and has been since January, 1918, the rector of R. E. Lee Memorial Church at Lexington.

The Rev. L. D. Gottschall, Chaplain U. S. N., whose address was formerly Oakland, Calif., is now located with the Fourth Regiment Marines, care of Postmaster, Seattle, Wash.

The Rev. Charles S. Hale, rector of Calvary Church, Ashland, Kentucky, has been elected, and has accepted, the position of associate rector of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Ky., the Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., Dean, and will assume his new office in May.

Sister Constance Anna and Sister Helen Veronica arrived in Shanghai, February 22.

ORDINATIONS.

On the first Sunday after the Epiphany, January 8, 1928, in Emmanuel Church, Webster Groves, Mo., the Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Missouri, advanced the Rev. Frank Maples to the priesthood. The Rev. Mr. Maples was ordained deacon by Bishop Johnson last June, in the Church of the Holy Cross, Poplar Bluff, Mo. Mr. Maples was presented for ordination to the priesthood by Archdeacon Henry H. Marsden. The Rev. J. Courtney Jones, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, preached the sermon. The Litany was read by the Rev. J. J. Wilkins, D. D., canon in residence of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis. This is the first ordination had in Emmanuel Church, Webster Groves, in thirty-five years. It was the more interesting because of the fact that the Rev. Mr. Maples, before applying for orders, had been three years pastor of Old Orchard Congregational Church in Webster Groves. He was baptized as a child by his father, who was vicar of St. Andrew's Church, Great Grimsby, County of Lincoln, England, and was confirmed as a youth by the Bishop of Southwell. Several years Mr. Maples followed the stage, in England with Irving and in this country with Mansfield. He continues in charge of the Poplar Bluff-De Soto-Ironton group, a work which he has successfully carried on for a year as lay reader and deacon, much beloved by the people to whom he ministers.

The Rev. Loren N. Gavitt, Vicar of the Nativity Chapel of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Germantown, Pennsylvania, was advanced to the priesthood recently by Bishop Garland for the Bishop of Washington at a Service of Ordination in St. Clement's Church, Twentieth and Cherry Streets. Mr. Gavitt, who was admitted to deacon's orders some months ago by Bishop Freeman of Washington, has been serving as an assistant at St. Clement's and recently accepted appointment as Vicar of the Chapel of the Nativity.

In Trenton, N. J., the Rev. D. Carl Colony, who has been serving as an assistant at the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, Rosemont, Pennsylvania, was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Matthews, of New Jersey. The ordination was in Christ Pro-Cathedral.

In Search of a Mother.

In a great forest there once lived a little acorn. He had a nice oak tree mother and had many good times. When the little breezes would come through the forest they rocked Little Acorn to sleep. Then when he did not want to go to sleep he would play "hide and go seek" with his brother acorns and sister leaves.

But alas, all good times must come to an end! One day the air grew cold and North Wind came puffing through the forest.

Oh! It was a terrible moment when Little Acorn felt himself being whirled through the air to the ground. He was carried far, far away from Mother Oak and he felt frightened and lonely.

He lay still to think of a plan and finally he said: "I believe I will go in search of a new mother, for there is no hope of my ever getting back to Mother Oak. I would like to have that pine tree for my mother. I will ask her.

"Mistress Pine Tree, oh Mistress Pine Tree! Won't you please be my mother? North Wind blew me from Mother Oak, and now I am in search of another mother, for I can never get back to her."

Kind Mistress Pine Tree smiled sadly and shook her head. "I am afraid I cannot," she said, "for I am the mother only of needles and cones. I am very, very sorry."

So Little Acorn turned to a wood-rose blooming nearby. "Won't you be my mother?" he said.

"No, I cannot," said the rose, "for I am the mother only of roses, leaves and thorns."

So Little Acorn found himself asking the birch tree, the maple tree and the butternut tree, but they were all mothers of something else instead of acorns.

Night found Little Acorn still in search of a mother, but, being very, very tired, he nestled deep down among some leaves and soon forgot his troubles.

But! On awakening he discovered something—something which filled him with joy. He felt strong, loving arms about him. He had found a mother—Mother Earth.—Dorothy E. Stevens in Continent.

FOURTH EDITION—REVISED AND ENLARGED—OF

THE REAL LINCOLN

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries

By DR. CHAS. L. C. MINOR
(Edited by M. D. Carter)

Startling but little known facts about the life and administration of the great Civil War President. A composite analysis ofIthe character and achievements of the man who guided the ship of State during the four mostlcritical years of our history. A book that should be in the hands of every student of American history, and especially of every teacher of American history.

POSTPAID, $2.50
Published by Atkins Rankin Co. Gastonia, N. C.
For Sale by SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

GEN. MORRIS SCHAFF- Officer in the Union Army during the Civil War.—No lover of historical truth, no teacher of American history, can afford to neglect reading Minor's "The Real Lincoln," for it lays bare the facts of Lincoln's civil and political life—what his contemporaries, who knew him intimately, and men of prominence, who met him officially or casually, thought of him personally and of his administration of affairs. . . . No reader of this book will fail to see the waves of propaganda set in motion for political ascendancy immediately after Appomattox and the death of Lincon waves leaving a detritus of revenge and falsehood on the pages of about any history written by a Northerner since the War Between the States; but the foliage of Myth has hidden many a counterfeit god.

MAJOR GILES B. COOKE, last surviving officer of General Robert E. Lee's staff.—To all who would like to have a true life of Abraham Lincoln I commend "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, giving an account of that part of Mr. Lincoln's life well known to his life-long friends and boon companions.

MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, Richmond (Va.) Banker and Publisher of The Southern Churchman.—A new edition of that great book, "The Real Lincoln," by Dr. Chas. L. C. Minor, will soon be available to the public, I am informed, and I strongly recommend that all persons interested in the true history of America secure a copy of it. "Time's glory is to calm contending kings, to unmask falsehood and bring truth to light," and it is high time that American writers cease to whitewash Lincoln and give the reading public the true facts about him and his policies. This is done in Dr. Minor's book, which I highly recommend to the reading public.

H. R. McILWAINE, State Librarian of Virginia.—I am glad to know that you are soon to publish a new (fourth) edition of Charles L. C. Minor's "The Real Lincoln." Made up almost altogether of excerpts from the writings of Lincoln's friends, the book gives facts largely overlooked in present-day biographies and which should be known by all who wish to form a just conception of Lincoln's character. It also gives much information as to widespread opposition in the Northern States to coercion of the South. On this account, too, it ought to be widely read everywhere, for such reading has a tendency to strengthen the good feeling now existing between the two great sections of our common county.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

Vol. 98. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 10, 1928. No. 10.

CHRIST THE POWER OF GOD AND THE WISDOM OF GOD.
ONE LORD, ONE FAITH, ONE BAPTISM.
JESUS CHRIST, THE SAME THROUGH ALL ETERNITY.

Gal. 5:22, 23.—But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.

Christian character is not mere moral or legal correctness, but the possession and manifestation of nine graces:

|---|---|
| Love, Joy, Peace | Character as an inward state; |
| Long suffering, Gentleness, Goodness | Character in expression toward man; |
| Faith, Meekness, Temperance | Character in expression toward God. |

Taken together they present a moral portrait of Christ and may be taken as the apostle's explanation of Gal. 2:20—"Not I, but Christ," and as a definition of "fruit" in John 15:1-8.

This character is possible because of the believer's vital union to Christ and as wholly the fruit of the Spirit in those believers who are yielded to him.—Schofield.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"No man's conversion stops with himself."

"He cannot trust God for his past who is trembling as to his future."

This world only begins friendships.—Phillips Brooks.

"Flowers and children turn toward the light."

The man who leans on God will stand upright in all that is Christian.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

Kind hearts are here; yet would the tenderest one
Have limits to its mercy; God has none.
—Addaire A. Proctor.

He who has never fought himself has conquered no other foe.

Sometimes God takes away our message that we may listen to His music.

If God's friends never visit Him, never talk to Him, even though they are busily occupied in His work, they are robbing Him.

In my own hands my want and weakness are My strength, O God is Thine!
—Bayard Taylor.

Where were ye, birds, that bless His name,
When wingless to the world He came,
And wordless, though Himself the Word
That made the blossom and the bird?
—John B. Tabb.

"We can take reproof from a book but not from a tongue. The book hurts not our pride, but the living reprover does; and we cannot bear to have our faults seen by others."

Blessed are they who have the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but, above all, the power of going out of one's self, and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another.—Thomas Hughes.

The purest and grandest beauty (for beyond that of the fairest flower, and high above Nature's noblest work) is of the mind and soul, that labor to enlarge our humble course; by no defiance or heroism, or even conscious teaching, but by patience, cheerfulness and modesty, truth, simplicity and loving kindness.—R. D. Blackmore.

THE ATONEMENT OF CHRIST

1 John 2:1, 2.

My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

The design of this Epistle of St. John seems to have been to guard the Jewish converts against apostasy from the Christian faith, and to preserve them steadfast in the belief, that JESUS CHRIST WAS THE SON OF GOD, and in that holiness of life which his religion required. The pernicious doctrines which then prevailed among the Jews; that men were accounted righteous with God by faith alone, without doing the works of righteousness; that zeal for God, and His laws, and service, would atone for all crimes, even for the hatred and murder of their brethren, made this conduct of the apostle necessary at that time; and his judgment and authority in these points will serve for the instruction and correction of the Church to the end of the world.

Our Saviour had foretold, that, a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, many false Christs and false prophets should appear, and should deceive many. To guard the Christians against their seductions, was another point the apostle had in view. He tells them that these false Christs and false prophets were then abroad; and, with the most affectionate zeal and prudent advice, cautions them against the pollution of their destructive errors.

The text shows particularly the exact judgment and prudence of the holy man; being calculated to preserve them, on the one hand, from presumptuous sins; and, on the other, from desperation of God's mercy.

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not." To live in innocence, free from the defilement of sin, is the first and great aim of every Christian. It ought to be also the great aim of every one of Christ's ministers to imitate this holy apostle, in their endeavors to preserve the people of God committed to their charge, free from the stain of guilt, and the anguish of remorse. They will, therefore, earnestly warn them of the dreadful end of a wicked life, and particularly of the fatal tendency of those errors in doctrine, which may prevail in their neighborhood, especially if they should be such as may influence their practice. But with their people it will remain to make their cautions and instructions effectual. Unless they apply them to their own circumstances, and beg of God His grace and Holy Spirit to lead and preserve them in the way of truth and holiness, all their ministers can do will be lost labor.

The text seems more particularly addressed to young Christians, either in age, or on account of their late conversion to the faith; for of a Father in the Church, these are properly the "little children". And these, through the levity of youth, and the strength of appetite and passion; or through ignorance and inexperience in Christian knowledge and practice are more exposed to temptations, and more liable to be overcome by them. To them, therefore, the Christian minister should particularly attend, for they particularly need his admonitions and instructions. In general, they will be more candidly received by them. Their hearts are tender, their sense of duty to God is quick, and blessing will be on the head of him who helps to preserve their innocency, and keep them free from the pollution of this wicked world.

The other danger of which the text warns us, is desperation of God's mercy, should we be so unhappy as to sin against Him. The weakness of nature, ignorance, inattention, surprise, example, too frequently involve well disposed Christians in offences which they sincerely lament, and wish to avoid. And we trust, as they are more in number than we can recollect, God will, upon our general confession and repentance, in mercy overlook them for Christ's sake; especially as they arise from infirmity of nature which we cannot help, and against which it does not always seem possible to guard ourselves.

Except they are people of weak understandings, or under bodily disease, the Tempter can seldom find opportunity, from these sins, to drive men to despair. But where the sense of duty is quick, the temper mild, and the heart affectionate, conscience is often exceedingly tender. Remorse for wilful, premeditated sins, of what is unhappily taken for such, will then occasion the bitterest anguish, and deepest regret. Should the Tempter succeed in representing the inefficacy of penitence, and the certainty of the wrath of God; despair of His mercy ensues. This is the sharpest sting of sin; the deadliest wound that Satan can inflict, and for which nature furnishes no medicine.

Faith in the propitiation of Jesus Christ the righteous, our Advocate with the Father, is the only balsam that can cure the wounds of conscience, or assuage the agonies of guilt. To this remedy the apostle directs his children in Christ: "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins." And, "If we confess our sins, he", who hath "made a new covenant" with us in the blood of Christ, and hath promised that He "will be merciful to our unrighteousness, and our sins; and will remember our iniquities no more", "is faithful and just" to his word "to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness".

The text strongly asserts the doctrine of atonement for the sins of the world by the death of Christ; in virtue of which He is our Advocate in Heaven, where He liveth to make intercession for us; pleading His own meritorious atonement for the justification, or remission of the sins of all those who believe in Him, and do His Commandments. And this is the invariable doctrine of the New Testament. His intercession is mentioned by St. Paul in the most express terms: "It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again; who is even at the right hand of God; who also maketh intercession for us." In another place, he saith, "Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost," or evermore, "that come to God by him; seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them". He also speaks of Christ as having entered into the true holy place, even "into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us". In as express terms, this same apostle declares Jesus Christ to be a propitiation for sin, "whom", he saith, "God hath set forth a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission", or passing over "of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God". He declareth the same doctrine, though in different terms, when, speaking of Christ, he saith, "God hath made him who knew no sin, to be sin", a sin offering, an atonement "for us; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him". And the author of the text hath said, "God loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins".

I have brought these passages of Holy Scripture together, because they are full to the point, and concur in proving that the doctrine of atonement for sin by the death of Christ, is the doctrine of the New Testament. It is a doctrine, however which is but little regarded by some; openly denied by others, who profess the Christian faith; and ridiculed as an absurd system, by all those who reject it. Even that saying, which in the estimation of St. Paul was "worthy of all men to be received, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners", is assigned by some as the reason of their rejecting the gospel. Should we suppose that something of vanity, or precipitancy of temper had led these men to decide against the doctrine of atonement, before they had duly examined all the circumstances relating to it; it would, I presume, be no breach of charity towards them.

The man who professes to govern himself by reason, must be supposed sometimes to reflect on the conduct of his life, and to examine into the state of his heart. If he should do so, he will find that he hath in many things offended against the sentiments and dictates of his own mind, to say nothing of the transgressions of the positive laws of God. He will, therefore, feel himself to be accountable for his actions, because his conscience condemns him when he does what he knows to be wrong. Now, the sentence of conscience supposes a higher tribunal: For conscience is nothing more than the judgment a man passes on his own actions, compared with some law. If his actions have been agreeable to the law by which he judges, the judgment of his mind—his conscience—will acquit him. If he hath been a transgressor, his conscience will condemn him. If you remove all law, you take away all conscience also. Where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there is no transgression, there can be neither judgment nor condemnation, because there is no criminal. Therefore, without a law superior to conscience, there can be no such thing as conscience at all.

Every law must come from a power superior to him who is to be governed by it: he is not otherwise obliged to obey it; because no penalty could be inflicted upon its transgression. Every law must also be superior to the Judge who is to administer it; otherwise he might set the law aside; and should he do so, instead of judging by the law, he would judge and condemn the law itself. Conscience, therefore, must be subject to the law by which it judgeth.

No laws can bind the conscience but his, who is the author of conscience. He who made man, and gave him the conscience principle, by which he can judge and form an estimate of his own actions; and He only, can bind the consciences of men. Human laws affect overt actions and words only: the heart and conscience are beyond their control. We have, therefore, a right to conclude, that where conscience condemns, the law of God hath been broken. And let such a man beware; for "if his heart condemn him, God is greater than his heart, and knoweth all things".

Here let nature, with her so much boasted religion, try her ability to screen the offender from punishment, who is condemned by his own conscience, and who must look forward to the sentence of a higher tribunal. No hope to escape can come from but two sources—the mercy of God —the repentance of the offender.

To say that God is good and merciful to punish the errors and failings of such weak and frail beings as we are, were it true, is shooting beside the mark: It is applying to mercy in a case of justice—applying indeed to mercy, where it does not appear that mercy of itself could give the proper relief. The condemnation and reproaches of conscience are a species of punishment which simple mercy seems incapable of removing.

Besides, errors and failings are one thing; crimes and villainies another. If the mercy of God overlook the errors of the judgment and the failings of infirmity, it will not necessarily follow that it must pass over crimes and villainies that spring from malignity of heart.

But, by punishment let us understand suffering inflicted by God for sin. And how does it appear that the mercy of God will prevent him from punishing men for the transgression of His laws? Not from His promise, except in divine revelation; and then only upon repentance, and in consequence of the atonement and satisfaction of Christ. If it be said, that it appears from reason and the nature of God: let them speak, and let us attend to what they say. They declare God to be the moral Governor of the world; that He is good and merciful, holy and just. He is, therefore, as much obliged, considered as a just and good Governor, to punish the wicked, as to protect the good. If He be merciful to one sinner, He must by the same rule, be merciful to all; and if He forgive one kind of sins, He may forgive all kinds. But if He forgive all sinners, and every kind of sin, His character of moral Governor of the world is destroyed, and moral evil may proceed to the highest pitch without restraint from Him.

With regard to repentance; if it be asked, whether, if a man repent, and amend, and sin no more, he may not rely on the mercy and forgiveness of God? I answer, Yes, on Christian principles; but not on the principles of nature and reason. Put a case, and see what it will come to—The malicious man, after having murdered a number of his fellow creatures, is sorry for what he hath done, refrains from violence, and becomes humane and benevolent. On Christian principles he is, through the atonement of the Mediator, entitled to mercy; but not on the principles of reason and nature. For the laws of God have been violated, His moral government insulted, and the man's fellow creatures destroyed; nor will his repentance repair the breach of the one, nor re-establish the authority of the other, nor restore life to the dead. Others might, by his impunity, be excited to commit, at least, would not be deterred from committing the same or similar crimes; and the moral government of God would be as effectually destroyed, as it would be, though no repentance were supposed. Some method to re-establish the authority of the divine law must be provided, before the offender can be admitted to mercy. When justice and mercy can be reconciled, we may reasonably hope for the forgiveness of God; but till then, the pardon of offenders would be the destruction of divine authority.

It is therefore, but a cold prospect which natural religion holds out to us. It has no claim on the mercy of God, but leaves us exposed to punishment for every transgression.

Here Christianity interposeth, and proclaims the atonement of a Substitute, who, by suffering in the stead of man, made expiation for his sin, and re-established the authority of the divine law, by submitting to its penalty; thereby reconciling justice and mercy, and making it possible for them to unite in the pardon of sin.

This Substitute is declared to be the Son of God, who took human nature upon Him, and in it endured, and overcame all the temptations to which it is liable; sacrificing it on the cross, sustained in it the full punishment of sin, in the bitter pains of crucifixion, and in the agony which arose from a sense of the displeasure and derelict ion of God. The Scriptures, which contain the history of his life, and the doctrines delivered by Him and His apostles, affirm that God declared His acceptance of His atonement, and ratified all He had said and taught, by raising Him from the dead on the third day, according to His own prediction; by receiving Him up into Heaven in that body which He had assumed, and which had been crucified and raised again; and by sending the Holy Ghost upon His apostles and followers, according to His promise.

That these are true facts is proved, not only from the concurrent testimony of the four Evangelists who wrote His life, but from the continuance of the Christian religion in the world, from that period to this day. On the credit of these facts, that religion was, in the course of a few years, propagated over the whole Roman empire; at a time, too, when arts, and sciences, and learning, and free inquiry were as highly esteemed and cultivated as they are now. Nor were men more deficient in sense, and understanding, and reason, and argument then, than they are now, when, too, it would have been as impossible to have established such a religion as Christianity is, upon the credit of pretended facts, as it would be to do so now.

I know objections have been made against the whole scheme of vicarious satisfaction. It hath been said to be unjust and unreasonable in itself, that the innocent should suffer and the guilty go free; and that it will not answer the end proposed by it, namely, the re-establishment of the authority of God's laws. But,

..1. If the Substitute be willing to submit to the terms, and, by doing so, injures no other being; and the party offended be willing to accept the satisfaction of the Substitute; the scheme of vicarious satisfaction is not unjust.

Now the readiness of Christ to become our Substitute, and of God to accept His satisfaction, are the foundation of the procedure. Love and mercy excited, but no force did, or could constrain them. Nor does it appear how any injury could accrue by it to any other being.

2. If a greater good can be obtained by vicarious satisfaction, than could be obtained by exacting the full penalty upon the offenders personally, then the scheme is not unreasonable.

But to give the whole human race a new, and an advantageous opportunity of obtaining eternal happiness, is a greater good than to consign them all without mercy to everlasting misery; and the future happiness of a part of mankind, is a greater good than the certain destruction of the whole.

3. If the authority of the Law-giver can be as effectually supported, and the benefits of his government as fully secured by vicarious satisfaction, as by inflicting punishment personally on the offenders, then the scheme is not deficient in efficacy to answer the end proposed by it.

Permit me, then, to state the matter as I understand it, and I shall cheerfully submit the determination of it to reason and common sense.

Adam sinned against his Creator, and involved himself and his posterity in everlasting misery, the necessary consequence of his disobedience. The Son of God became his Substitute; and taking his nature upon Him, made in it full satisfaction to Divine Justice for his offense, and for all the sins of the whole world. God approved and accepted this atonement. Adam and his posterity were, in consequence of it, put under a new covenant, by observing which they may recover the favor of God, and obtain endless happiness with Him in Heaven.

Suppose an hundred orders of intelligent creatures to behold and contemplate this scene: How may we conclude they would be affected by it? Should one of them argue in this manner—Adam hath disobeyed God, and instead of having the full penalty of his disobedience inflicted upon him as God threatened; the Son of God, by suffering in his stead, hath redeemed him from endess misery, and put him into a capacity of obtaining the happiness of heaven. There is, therefore, no great danger in disobeying God, however severely He may threaten. I may safely disobey Him also; for, at the worst, the Son of God will suffer for me, as He hath done for Adam and his posterity.

Should another reason in the following manner—How dreadful is God! He hath indeed had mercy on fallen Adam, and his wretched offspring. In a wonderful way He hath reconciled mercy and justice in His forgiveness. That He might pardon him, He hath accepted an atonement. That His government, on which the happiness of all His creatures depends, might be vindicated, He hath required that the atonement be of infinite merit. He hath even permitted innocence to bear the punishment of guilt. His own beloved Son to suffer in Adam's stead. Happy is Adam in finding such mercy—in having such a Redeemer. Let every creature now beware how he disobeys the righteous laws of God—wonderful in mercy—terrible in justice. For will God again accept an atonement? Will the Son of God again consent to be the propitiation for sin? It cannot be. Henceforth all must obey or be miserable. Which of these two would reason most justly?

Whatever may be the judgment of others, the pious Christian will adore with gratitude, the astonishing display of divine justice and mercy, holiness and goodness, righteousness and wisdom, all united and cooperating in the redemption of man by Jesus Christ. And while the heart is raised in grateful devotion; the tongue, with divine rapture, will join the song of holy David, "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

PATHS

In St Matthew's Gospel we are told the way to spiritual and temporal destruction is broad. The multitude choosing it find and follow it easily and swiftly. The way to life and happiness is narrow, but clear and straight, and it is astonishing that so many trying to walk in it insist on making for themselves so much obstructing perplexity and finding occasions and pretexts for wandering off into the wilderness of doubts and fears. Continuance in it to the end involves continual combat, vigilance, courage and endurance, because, wisely and justly, these are required as the price of all high and worthy achievement and rewards worth the winning. While the path is so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool need not err therein, we may not stroll along it at ease nor strut over it with vain self confidence. The yoke is easy and the burden light, but it is our part to adapt and fit ourselves to wear the one usefully and bear the other happily.

The Protestant Episcopal Church points its children and Sunday-school scholars directly to this narrow road with the promise to accept all the articles of the Christian faith, the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, and the duty to God and neighbor in the Catechism. "My duty toward God is to believe in Him, to fear Him and to love Him, with all my heart, with all my mind, with all my soul, and with all my strength." "My duty toward my neighbor is to love him as myself, to do unto all men as I would they should do unto me." The dullest child can understand these. The crudest mind can absorb the meaning of them and of the promise, "He that heareth my word and believeth on Him that sent me hath everlasting life". What more is needed for guidance, incentive, direction, inspiration to right living and peaceful dying? The most ignorant and the humblest can see that road and walk in it right on to beauty and peace, here and hereafter. The most learned, brilliant and profound have shown us no other so good or clear, no other leading anywhere but to confusion, blankness, darkness, hopelessness.

Yet, people aspiring to be intellectual, or to be thought so, voluntarily tangle and lose themselves in bewildering mazes of speculation, questions, theories which lead nowhere, and so impair or destroy their value to Christianity and the world. They waste strength, time, faith, hope, usefulness, pursuing a phantom, created by themselves, which they absurdly call "Truth", to no conclusion or to conclusions impossible to prove and debasing and destructive to accept. These illustrate the eccentricities, perversities, weaknesses, of the human mind. They are precisely like a child set in a straight path from one place to another straying aside to chase a butterfly or find a flower, or from sheer idleness and wantonness and losing itself in briars or more deadly perils. Such there have been always from the very beginning of men and women, since Eve forsook the straight path of obedience to hearken to the counsel of the serpent. Those who take, or pretend to take, the story of Eden as allegory may find in it exact and vivid precursor of their own experiences and the consequences they have reached. Since then to this day those holding to the narrow, straight path, have prevailed and been delivered, justified and triumphant even when they diminished to a small and apparently feeble remnant of a small and captive nation, or to a single family, as with Noah and Abraham, or to a few score disciples of a scorned and crucified Leader.

The path is so straight, so well defined, that it has been and is equally clear to those at opposite extremes of the intellectual and social scale. Solomon, wise and rich and mighty king; Ruth, the Moabitish widow gleaning humbly after the harvesters, saw and worshipped and trusted God alike. Paul, unexcelled logician and master orator, and the lowliest and poorest of his fellow believers, walked side by side in the matchless, splendid democracy of a common faith, so simple that the simplest may grasp it, so splendid that the greatest minds may rejoice in it. Bacon, wisest of students and most enlightened of scholars and thinkers in a golden age of intellectual production, wrote: "A little philosophy inclines man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy brings men's minds back to religion." Bunyan, tinker and private soldier, six years in jail, probably reading nothing but the Bible, but shrewd, close, observer, wrote of the muck raker intent on straws and sticks, oblivious of the proffered crown, and of how Faithful, bound for the Delectable City, was mocked at, with his fellow pilgrims, as ignorant, knowing nothing of natural science. A little learning does sometimes seem destructive. There may have been some truth in the famous remark of Randolph, of Roanoke, that he knew human minds like lands on the lower James river, naturally poor, absolutely ruined and made worthless by attempts to cultivate them.

That sarcasm of Bunyan's, written nearly three hundred years before Darwin, tells us that some of those proclaiming themselves disciples of Darwin are not new things under the sun, and it fits in with some present conditions. We have persons halting in the narrow path to potter laboriously with verses from the Scriptures, perhaps centuries apart, seeking contradictions and inconsistencies, raking sticks and straws, gathering spiritual perturbations and tribulations. Others make stumbling blocks and hoodwinks for themselves from deductions and suppositions of scientific persons who delve diligently to unearth contradictions of each other. Within the last few weeks the country has seen, with derisive laughter, men assuming deep knowledge of the human soul and mind busy on the witness stand with mutual refutations, for fees and publicity, attempting to demonstrate fantastic testimony with spectacular and clownish tricks. We have seen another startling discoverer build from a tooth found far underground an entire nation of ape men inhabiting this continent millions of years ago and prove his case perfectly until another enthusiast, equally eminent and infallible, arose to demonstrate that the tooth was from the jaw of an extinct variety of hog. As in Bunyan's day and Bacon's and thousands of years before them, people are lured from the straight, narrow path by theories, quackeries, honest blunders of theorists and visionaries.

It is pitiful—pitiful and lamentable waste, often, of time, of opportunities for accomplishing real good and for hope and happiness. This narrow path is so straight, so clear and plain, so clearly lighted, even through the Valley of the Shadow. So many are wandering in the wilderness, so many crowding swiftly along the broad way, but ready to answer a guiding hand and strong voice and be led to the straight and narrow path. Surely, it is blighting sin and miserable folly for those whose feet have been set in that path to loiter in it and be peering idly or eagerly for lights, other than those already provided for us, to be ready to turn aside into the mazes, perhaps lead others from safety to desolation and everlasting ruin.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE GOD OF QUIETNESS

It has been said that machinery is destroying man. Whether so or not, it is certainly tending to prevent that condition of quietness whereby man may find God. It is quite evident that "the world is too much with us late and soon". For thus saith the Lord Jehovah . . . . in returning and rest shall ye be saved, in quietness and confidence shall be your strength." Your radio gives its best messages late at night, and Lent ought to be a time of withdrawal into the solitudes of communion when we may obey the command given in 1 Sam. 9:27, "Stand thou still awhile that I may show thee the word of God".

God Reveals Amid Quietness.

"Be still then and know that I am God." It was at the backside of the desert that God revealed His purpose and will to Moses. It was in the quiet of the Temple, in the day that King Uzziah died, amid thus the collapse of worldly prosperity that Isaiah saw the Lord high and lifted up and received his call. David the sweet singer received and transmitted his rich and deep experiences with God from his lonely vigils with the sheep.

That burning and shining light, John the Baptist had his home in the desert till the day of his showing unto Israel. Paul was transformed from the daring persecutor into the intrepid apostle to the Gentiles, not simply by the dazzling light that blinded him, but by his three years in Arabia. Perhaps amid the solitudes where the Law was given, to this choice vessel was revealed the grace and truth that came by Jesus Christ. Banished to Patmos, John in lonely quietness, received the revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him. We might go on, but enough has been said to show that God reveals Himself amid conditions of quietness. One can be a mystic without being a Christian, but one cannot be a Christian without being a mystic.

His Mode of Working.

There was no axe or hammer heard in building the Temple. Noiseless the mighty fabric sprang. God led Israel by the pillar of fire and cloud, this quiet communication of His will was followed by the orderly instructions, whereby there was no noise or excitement but the orderly movement amid praise to God. How beautifully Phillips Brooks describes God's great gift to the world:

"How silently, how silently,
The wondrous gift is given,
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of His Heaven,
No ear may hear His coming,
But in this world of sin
Where meek souls will receive Him still
The dear Christ enters in."

Verily His method is to make us lie down in green pastures and to lead by the still waters. Our Lord showed His love of the quiet places—His frequent retreat was the garden. He was often by the Lakeside; it was on the mount apart from the disquietude of this world that He was transfigured. He revealed Himself on that spring morning as they walked along the country road leading to Emmaus. Think then of the splendid keynote that our Prayer Book strikes in the words, "The Lord is in His Holy Temple, let all the earth keep silence before Him".

Our Duty.

Lent is a call to come apart into a desert place and rest awhile. But there must be a little Lent in our lives every day of the year. A desert is an unattractive place to the flesh—a barren, lonely place, devoid of life. Yet spiritually it may rejoice and blossom as the rose. Have you a desert in your life? In other words do you get alone with God, for that is your desert.

Dr. Wallace, the scientist, has asserted that the very existence of the fertile portions of this earth depends upon its deserts; that if we had no desert of Sahara there would not be a vineyard within a thousand miles. The vineyard on the hillside is dependent on the desert. The scientist says that it is the particles which come from the desert, floating in the air, that makes the clouds and rain possible; and if you remove the desert, you remove the fertility. Whether that be scientific truth or not, it is certainly true that what we call the desert places of life, the times when we have to keep quiet, when there is no strength for money-making or for active duty, but we must be still and wait upon God, such times of quiet prepare us for the times of activity: the desert gives the fertility.

To be spiritually fertile then, "study to be quiet" (1 Thess. 4:11). Satan is full of unrest. The Quietists have been known for saintliness. Why wrestle against the solitary way? Perhaps this word comes to some one stopped by sickness or infirmity from some activity and chafing under it. If so, remember that when the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of place he prevailed with God. Some great saints have become so, by being laid aside by sickness. "The law took the prey" (Isa. 33:23). "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." He promises we shall be quiet from fear of evil and enjoy quiet resting places. And the work of righteousness shall be peace and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever.

O tempest-tossed child of God, get in closer touch with the Lord Jesus, and let Him rise in the matchless glory of His Sovereign power and say to your troubled soul, "Peace be still".

"THE MASTER'S TOUCH".

"He touched her hand and the fever left her,"
He touched her hand as He only can,
With the wondrous skill of the Great Physician.
With the tender touch of the Son of Man.
And the fever pain in the throbbing temples
Died out with the flush on brow and cheek,
And the lips that had been so parched and burning
Trembled with thanks that she could not speak;
And the eyes when the fever light had faded
Looked up, by her grateful tears made dim,
And she rose and ministered in her household,
She rose and ministered unto Him.

"He touched her hand and the fever left her";
Oh, we need His touch on our fevered hands,
The cool still touch the Man of Sorrows.
Who knows us and loves us and understands.
So many a life is one long fever,
A fever of anxious suspense and care,
A fever of getting, a fever of fretting,
A fever of hurrying here and there.
Ah, what if in winning the praise of others
We miss at the last the King's "Well done",
If our self-sought tasks in the Master's vineyard
Yield nothing but leaves at the set of the sun.

"He touched her hand and the fever left her";
Oh, blessed touch of the Man Divine!
So beautiful then to rise and serve Him
When the fever is gone from your life and mine;
It may be the fever of restless serving
With heart all thirsty for love and praise;
And eyes all aching and strained with yearning
Tow'rd self-set goals in the future days.
Or it may be a fever of spirit-anguish,
Some tempest of sorrow that dies not down
Till the cross at last is in meekness lifted
And the head stoops low for the thorny crown.
Or it may be a fever of pain and anger,
When the wounded spirit is hard to bear,

And only the Lord can draw forth the arrows
Left carelessly, cruelly rankling there.
Whatever the fever His touch can heal it,
Whatever the tempest His voice can still,
There is only joy as we seek His pleasure,
There is only rest as we choose His will:
And some day after life's fitful fever
I think we shall say in the home on high,
If the hands that He touched but did His bidding,
How little it matter what else went by.
Ah, Lord, Thou knowest us altogether.
Each heart's sore sickness, whatever it be,
Touch Thou our hands, bid the fever leave us,
And so shall we minister unto Thee.

DAILY NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE PORTIONS

By the Reverend W. G. Scroggie, D. D.

THE SCRIPTURE UNION.

Sunday, March 11—St. John 9:26-41.

Subject-Title—Outside the Camp With Christ.

THE MESSAGE.

WE come now to the fourth of our divisions—4. The Confession (24-33). The Pharisees wished to get this man to change his opinion about Jesus (17), and in the attempt exhibited their own dense darkness spiritually: "Give God the praise; we know that this Man is a sinner"; but no one who dishonors the Son can honor the Father. The knowledge of some people is ignorance. Now mark the healed man's reply (25). Over against their "we know", is his "I know". He really did know, and they did not. There is no better apologetic for Christianity than a well-saved soul. Know something, and let that knowledge be the child of experience. And knowing, tell what you know, and be sure and keep within the limits of your knowledge. Perhaps you will be abused and cast out (28, 34), but that is a small price to pay for sight. There are always people who, when beaten on their merits, turn to throwing mud at their betters; but abuse is never argument. Tinker Bunyan and Cobbler Carey will be remembered while the world lasts, but their critics are forgotten overnight. How bold this man becomes, and what a flood of light is pouring into his soul as he goes (30-33). 5. The Persecution (34). What his parents feared (22), he got; but his excommunication was promotion; he went from the synagogue to the Saviour. 6. The Revelation (35-38). Truly we shall know if we follow on to know the Lord. If we are loyal to Christ so far as we know Him, we shall come to know Him better (17, 36). What began in wonder ended in worship (38). 7. The Condemnation (39-41). A bigot is like the pupil of the eye, the more light you pour into it the more it contracts. Better is it to own to blindness and get sight, than to imagine we see and remain blind.

Subject-Title—The Door and the Shepherd.

THE MESSAGE.

It is important to observe the connection between this and the previous chapter. By "you" in verse one are meant the Pharisees of 9:39-41; so that verses 1-21 of our chapter record the discourse which arose immediately out of the miracle and its effects of the previous chapter. There is here a double revelation. 1. The Door Revelation (1-10). This divides itself into Illustration (1-5), and Interpretation (6-10). Under (i) the Illustration, attention is called first to the shepherds and the porter (1-3a); and then to the shepherd and the sheep (3b-5). Take note of the figures in this allegory: the fold, the door, the porter, the thief, the sheep, the shepherd, the hireling and the wolf. Christ is the Door in this story: who is the porter? who the wolf? and who the thief? Now follow (ii) the Interpretation (6-10). Here we are taught the exclusiveness of the Door (7-8), the benefits of it (9), and the necessity for it (10). There is only one Door of entrance into life, and he who enters finds freedom and provision (9). We are not called to a life anaemic and impotent, but to life abounding (10). Are you living victoriously? Now comes—2. The Shepherd Revelation (11-18), and Conclusion (9-21). Here is brought before us the revelation of the Shepherd, first to the hireling (11-13), then to the sheep (14-16), and finally to the Father (17-18). The shepherd saves the sheep, but the hireling abandons them. The Shepherd will save them all, and at last there will be but one flock (16). The dominating thought in this part of the lesson is that the Shepherd dies that His sheep might live (11, 15, 17, 18). That is the heart of the Gospel, and the declaration has always caused and will always cause a cleavage (19-21). Right and left, life and death, heaven and hell—these are the alternatives.

Tuesday, March 13—St. John 10:19-30.

Subject-Title—Eternal Salvation.

THE MESSAGE.

We begin today at verse 22. As the portion is short, I would call your attention to where we are in the main outline of the Book. Read again the beginning of the lesson for March 3, from which you will see that we are at the point of The Love Outraged (10), in the division. The Controversy Developed (5, 10 to 10:42). How terrible an indictment of the people in this, that they despised the Life, refused the Light, and outraged the Love: people did it then, and people are doing it still. These Jews were always trying to throw upon Jesus a responsibility which was their own. They attributed their uncertainty to His indefiniteness, instead of to their own stupidity (24); but He faced them with two facts, His works, and their alienation (25, 26). When you hear the Shepherd, do you follow Him? (27). One can hear without following, but no one can follow without hearing. The 28th verse is one of the great utterances of the Gospel, but is liable to be misunderstood from opposite standpoints; two truths, therefore, must be insisted upon—on the one hand that God's power is infinite and His promises certain; and, on the other hand, that "we cannot be protected against ourselves in spite of ourselves". He who ceases to hear and to follow is thereby shown to be no true believer (1 John 2:19). No one who is not "in His hand" ever feared lest he should be "plucked out of it". Whoever is in Christ's hand is also in the Father's hand (29), for Christ and the Father are One (30). The Greek language distinguishes gender in the case of the numeral, and it is most important to notice that "one" in this verse is neuter, and not masculine. This fact shows that the Son and the Father are not one Person, but One in essence and nature.

Wednesday, March 14—St. John 10:31-42.

Subject-Title—The Christ, The Son of God.

THE MESSAGE.

The whole section 22-39, should be carefully read again, because the subject is one, and the argument is cumulative in its force. Two facts dominate the discussion; first that the Jews were not wholly indisposed to see in Jesus the Messiah of prophecy (24); and second, that He definitely claimed to be the Son of God, a claim which the Jews considered blasphemy (30, 33). This shows that the Jews had not read aright their own Scriptures. For they did not know that the promised Messiah was the Son of God. Christ's claim to Deity in this discussion should be carefully considered; also the ground or evidence of it—His miracles. Well, because the Jews did not and could not understand Christ's claim, they thought they had better get rid of Him (31). Now stone-throwing was never an argument, but the stupid resort of those who never had any ground, intellectual or moral, for the attitude they assumed to Christ and His disciples. But when you have got rid of a witness to the truth, you have not got rid of the truth; from the ground it blossoms red, red with the blood of the faithful. It is better to think sanely than to throw stones. The only ground on which we have a right to deny Christ's claim for Himself, is that of positive disproof of it. Very many reject Christ's claim, but not all (42). There always have been some who hearing have heeded His Word. Are you one of them? It will be well for us who are preachers if, when souls come to the Saviour, they are able to say that all we told them of Him was true (41). Preach Christ always.

Todays Thoughts—Faith is More Forceful Than Ferocity.

Thursday, March 15—St. John 11:1-16.

Subject-Title—Waiting to be Gracious.

THE MESSAGE.

This is a great chapter, and for a moment we must look at it as a whole. Between chapters 10 and 11 of this Gospel comes Luke 11:1 to 17:10: and the events recorded in John 11, come in between verses 10 and 11 of Luke 17. The Raising of Lazarus is the seventh miracle recorded by this evangelist. What are the previous six? The controversy which was aroused in 5:1-18, and developed in 5:19 to 10:42, is here concluded (11 and 12); and in this conclusion we are made to see The Love Sympathizing (11:1-37), The Life Saving (11:38-12:11), and The Light Shining (12:12-50). Our chapter falls into four principal parts, around the miracle—the Occasion of it (1-16); the Approach to it (17-32); the Performance of it (33-44); and the Consequences of it (45-57). Mark these in the margin of your Bible.

1. The Occasion of the Miracle (1-16). It was the sickness eventuating in the death of Lazarus, one of Jesus' intimate friends. Do you instinctively turn to Jesus when you are in trouble? (1-3). How amazing are verses 5, 6! But learn from them that delay is neither destitution (4), nor desertion (5, 6), nor denial (7). The Divine love sometimes lingers. When God waits, we should wait. How astonishing also is the dullness of the disciples (11-13)! Does Christ find us stupid when He talks to us? When there was a grave to be emptied, hearts to be gladdened, and God to be glorified, stones could not keep Jesus back (7-10). How many living hours are there in your day? (9).

Today's Thought: Fellows in the Fight, Face Up (16).

Friday, March 16—St. John 11:17-31.

Subject-Title—Martha Receives a Revelation.

THE MESSAGE.

2. The Approach to the Miracle (17-32). We have in this chapter a profoundly interesting study of these two sisters, with which you should read Luke 10:38-42. In the latter passage Jesus is not elevating the contemplation above the practical: Mary did as well as thought, but Martha thought less than she did. Their characteristics come out in our lesson (20). How greatly disappointed must these sisters have been that Jesus had not arrived in time to prevent Lazarus dying (21); yet, they who had looked to Him for cure now look to Him for comfort (20). Martha's disappointment had not killed her faith (22), though it is not quite clear what she was expecting Jesus to do, for, from what follows, it would seem that any thought of a miracle was not in her mind (24). It should not be overlooked that at this time Martha did not know that her dear Friend was the Son of God. The evidence of this is not in verse 27 only, but in the word "ask" which she uses in verse 22, a word which is used in the N. T. of our prayers, but never of Christ's (cf. Gr. aite, and erotao). How often has trouble issued in revelation (25)! We had never seen the rainbow but for the storm. Mark what Christ says (25, 26) and then answer His question put to you, "Believest thou this"? I wonder how much we really believe! Martha's little faith became much (27); her sad heart was ready to receive this great word; and she went forthwith and called Mary. Notice what she said: "the Master" (28). Yes, He is over coming and calling; He is coming to you and calling for you now. Listen! Do you hear Him?

Saturday, March 17—St. John 11:32-46.

Subject-Title—Victory Over Death and the Grave.

THE MESSAGE.

3. The Performance of the Miracle (33-44). The first thing to note here is Jesus' grief (33-38). He, who was joyful in the shadow of His own cross, is sorrowful at the mouth of some one else's grave. Only those capable of exquisite sorrow can experience "joy unspeakable"; depth is height. Jesus' intention to raise Lazarus immediately did not make His sorrow less. He genuinely sorrowed with these two women who were His friends, but the deepest ground of His grief was in His knowledge that by sin came death; and that fact led Him perhaps to anticipate Calvary. Christ ever had, and has, "a heart at leisure from itself to sooth and sympathize". Are you in trouble today? He is beside you, and He cares. Some people are so insensible that they will grumble even at the grave (37); yet these, in doing so recalled a great miracle (ch. 9). Could He not? (37). Oh, yes; but He never did all He could, but only what He would for the good of men and the glory of God. The second thing to note is, the immediate preparation for the miracle (39-42). Jesus was about to do what those there could not do, but He will not do what they can (39). Remember that, will you, and this very day answer some of your own prayers. The Son here does not ask anything of the Father, but thanks Him for prayer already answered (41, 42, 4). Do you ever do that? The third thing to note is, the raising of Lazarus (43, 44). The great notes are—dead, alive, bound, free. If all bound Christians were to be set free from their grave clothes, the world would sit up and look, and listen, as it has never done. Are you an enslaved Christian?

"Live out Thy life within me
O Jesus, King of Kings,
Be Thou Thyself the answer
To all my questionings,
Live out Thy life within me,
In all things have Thy way,
I, the transparent medium
Thy glory to display.

The temple has been yielded
And purified of sin.
Let Thy Shekinah glory
Now flash forth from within,
And all the earth keep silence,
This body henceforth be
Thy silent, docile servant,
Moved only as by Thee.

Its members every moment
Held subject to Thy call,
Ready to have Thee use them
Or not be used at all.
Held without restless longing
Or strain, or stress or fret.
Or chafing at Thy dealings,
Or thoughts of vain regret.

But restful, calm and pliant,
From bend or bias free,
Permitting Thee to settle
Where Thou hast need of me.
Live out Thy life within me
O Jesus, King of Kings,
Be Thou Thyself the answer
To all my questionings."

BISHOP TALBOT: A PERSONAL TRIBUTE.

Harvey P. Walter.

Was there ever a kindlier soul than Bishop Talbot? Coming on the train to Scranton on Saturday last for a week's service in St. Luke's Church and nearby parishes, one of the trainmen asked: "How is the good old Bishop?" He said whenever he rode on the train he always greeted all the men, and if he did not see one of them, inquired for him, and asked that the man be sent to him so that he might greet him. This included the porters as well as the trainmen. He was "Our Bishop", though the man may have been a Methodist, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, or of no Church at all.

This unassumed attitude towards all classes of people, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, made him the beloved Bishop to all people.

I have known Bishop Talbott since he came from Wyoming and Idaho to be the Bishop of Bethlehem. For a number of years it was my privilege as Archdeacon to serve directly under his supervision. His uniform kindness, his even temperatment, his kindly consideration, his words of advice and commendation, his cheery spirit, gave one a new heart and new strength and a new outlook whenever one came from his presence.

Truly a good man has gone to his reward, and with him I am sure have gone millions of prayers from all kinds of Church people for the repose of his soul.

THE MIDDLE CROSS

By Dr. Dyson Hague, Toronto

The place called The place of a skull, which is called in Hebrew Golgotha (in the Latin Calvary), where they crucified Him, and with Him two others, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst. John 19:17-18.

IN 1902 Mr. Wallace, a noted scientist, theorized that this earth is the centre of the astronomical system of the visible universe, the point around which the stars and sun and stellar systems all revolve. But the centre of this centre is the Cross of Christ, the Crucified Son of God. There the converging streams of Revelation meet. There all life, ancient and modern, is epitomized. The heart of humanity—yesterday, today, and tomorrow—is there revealed. The lines of ancient history there converge, and the streams of modern history there emerge. And again once more in the Church's year all eyes, all hearts are turning to the tragedy of the first Good Friday. Every figure, every statement, every scene, every action, every actor in the drama of that great day is of eternal interest.

But three figures stand out in its lurid light, never to be forgotten. There, first of all, is Barabbas, the Bolshevist—the man of the people, the choice of the crowd, the misguided champion of "peoples' rights", the everlasting representative of the insurgent, law-defying, authority-resisting instinct of the rebellious heart of man. Next, is Pilate, the wavering Roman Procurator—the embodiment of the world-spirit of expediency, temporizing with criminal irresolution, and abdicating with culpable weakness his claim to power and right of decision. And there, above all, crowned with eternal glory and honor, stands the meek and lowly Jesus, who that day bore our sins in His own body on the tree.

It was between six and seven o'clock in the morning when the awful cry rang through the Praetorium, and struck the ear of the bewildered Pilate: "Crucify Him! Crucify Him!" It seems to have been the first mention of the Cross in connection with Jesus, and the first suggestion of the crucifixion as a climax of the charge against the Galilean. It is possible, if not probable, that arrangements had already been made by the officials of the government for the excution that day of three criminals.

It is possible, if not probable, also, that the man to be the most conspicuous figure, as the occupant of the middle cross in the crucifixion scene on Golgotha's hilltop, was the most dangerous criminal at that time in the clutches of the law. But determined as Pilate was to let Christ go, the religious leaders of the day were still more determined to put Him to death. "They cried out, therefore, again, saying, 'Not this Man, but Barabbas'." And the proposal that came from them, evidently with regard to the substitution of Christ for Barabbas, though resisted again and again by the temporizing Pilate, was at last accepted. The order for execution was given, and at about nine o'clock, the gruesome procession from the Via Dolorosa came outside the city wall.

Now years ago a suggestion was made by an eminent and scholarly preacher so striking and significant that we propose to repeat it again as a probable explanation of what took place that day on Calvary's hilltop. There were three crosses prepared that day by the authorities. There were three thieves or robbers that day to be crucified. The centre cross was to be occupied by the chiefest of the thieves, the most notorious criminal of the three. At noon there were three men on the crosses. But there were not three robbers; only two robbers were crucified. The middle cross was prepared for the chief criminal; that was Barabbas. But the man that was on the middle cross that day was not Barabbas, but his substitute. It was the One who was chosen in his place and in his stead by the world, the nation, and the Church of the day; not accidentally, but in accordance with the plan of God, prearranged in eternity. The two comrades of Barabbas were crucified; but on the centre Cross was not Jesus-Barabbas, the son of man, but Jesus Christ, the Son of God. (This is not a mere fancy, for many ancient authorities of great weight read in Matt. 27:17, "Jesus Barabbas or Jesus which is called Christ".)

And may we not well imagine that on the afternoon of that first Good Friday, two men lurked at the base of Calvary's hill, and gazed with fascinated awe upon the bodies hanging on the crosses. To the right, and to the left, were the distended bodies of the thieves, with their broken legs, and on the central Cross was the sacred Form of the Son of God, with the blood and water flowing from the lance-pierced side. As he touched his companion's arm, one of the two men whispers: "Do you see those three crosses? They were put there for men like us. Do you see the Middle One? You know that is where I should have been. I was condemned to be crucified today. But somehow, I cannot tell why, when Pilate offered the choice, the people called for me, and this Man, Jesus, was put in my place. It is a great mystery to me. I do not understand it at all. I was their leader in crime. I should have been nailed there between my two comrades to that Middle Cross. I was the worst of the lot. But Jesus was put in my place. He was put there for me. He died for me."

As we look back today we understand it all, for that day Jesus became the Substitute for sinners, of whom Barabbas was chief. That day, by substitution, He saved Barabbas from temporal death, and that day, on the Cross, as the Son of God, He saved Barabbas' robber-comrade from eternal death. Year by year Good Friday comes and goes. But never will the world forget the Man who that day wore the crown of thorns, and carried our sorrows, the Man who hung upon the Cross and bore our sins. Barabbas, representing the world of sin, should have been there, but He, the Lamb of God, who was made sin for us, that day took our place. "But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chasetisement of our people was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed" (Isaiah 53:5-6).

SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE

Dr. Walker Gwynne

A Brief of the Aims of the Sanctity of Marriage Association in Its Conference With the Joint Commission on the Whole Problem of Divorce, Appointed by the General Convention of 1925.

AS an association of American citizens, and Christian men and women, we are justly alarmed, "appalled" in fact, as President Roosevelt expressed it even twenty years ago, at the breaking up of the home by the rapidly increasing ratio of divorces to a decreasing ratio of marriages, such as no nation has known since the last days of the Roman Empire. The official report for 1925 shows 175,495 divorces to 1,181,839 marriages, or an increase for the year of 2.7 per cent in divorces to an increase of only three tenths of one per cent in marriages. These figures show that 350,000 persons were separated, and probably 150,000 children were made orphans, in that single year. And the most significant feature of the report is that there was one divorce to every 6.74 (6.50 in 1926) marriages in these United States, while the proportion was only one to one hundred and twenty-one marriages in Canada.

We appreciate greatly, therefore, this opportunity which you have given us to state the results of our investigation of conditions and causes, to which some of us have given as many as forty years of anxious thought and study, and for the last seven years much effort to bring the facts before the general public as well as before our own people and clergy.

We are glad to have the question dealt with by a commission of men of sober and sound judgment, instead of by a popular assembly, where the loudest voice, or the impassioned appeal to sentiment or prejudice, and wholly irrelevant statements, are apt to have more influence than rational argument. We welcome also the wide scope of the enquiry as expressed in the resolution of the Convention: "To study the whole problem of divorce (its conditions and causes"; which necessarily includes the effect of our chaotic civil legislation as well as our own canon law. In regard, however, to our civil law, though very important as having a direct influence even on Christian people, we deem it undesirable on this occasion to discuss it; but if asked at some other time to give the result of our study of it, we shall welcome another conference.

The primary purpose of this conference, we take it, is the question as it must be faced by believers in Jesus Christ, not merely as of one out of many great moralists, but as our Divine Lord and Eternal Judge. What is His judgment? What is the testimony of the whole Primitive Church, to which the English Reformers constantly appealed as witnesses to what was "the mind of Christ"? What is the witness of all history as to the effect of rejection of that teaching?

In furtherance of this purpose we propose to lay before you for future consideration five papers dealing with these questions, and containing historical facts wholly forgotten or ignored until recently. These include the strange story of the small Convention of 1808, of which we have the record in a series of "Statements" made by our first Presiding Bishop in the very last year of his life. They include also the equally strange story of the Convention in the City of New York in 1868 when, contrary to the Constitution, as well as to the plain teaching of the New Testament, the doctrine and discipline of the whole Anglican Communion for twelve hundred years was completely overturned, after only two or three hours' discussion by the Deputies in a single day. This fact is testified to by a complete verbatim report of the debates as ordered by the House of Deputies itself.

On that occasion, in 1868, for the first and only time in the history of the whole Anglican Church, as well as of the whole Church of the West from the beginning what is virtually an exception to the Seventh Commandment was foisted rashly and hastily into the canon on marriage, which had been the law of the Euglish Church for twelve centuries, and of the English State for eight hundred and fifty years. There are two very practical considerations concerning this to which we would call very special attention:

1. It has been frequently asserted of late that it is useless to trouble ourselves with laws, either in Church or State, in regard to this matter. The main thing, we are told, for remedy of our present dreadful conditions as a nation, is education of both young and old in home and school and pulpit. Needless to say that opinion has our complete sympathy. It is one of the chief aims of this Association ever since its formation seven years ago. But one fact in this connection seems to be entirely forgotten. It is overlooked, that law, even civil law, is in itself a great educator. Laws, whether good or bad, are teaching effectively one way or other all the time, when voices are silent. And this is all the more true of bad laws which coincide with men's base passions or infirmities.

That statement is especially true of the exception of our canon, which the experience of our courts and our daily papers tells us is the easiest of all ways of getting rid of husband or wife. The present rule of the courts of France has not yet in a formal way, at least, become the rule of our own courts, namely, that agreement as to permanent disagreement is all that is necessary for divorce and remarriage at will. Nevertheless, with us this single exception accomplishes the same effect. A single act of deliberation or passion, or even only circumstantial evidence showing presence together in a room, is sufficient for court and jury, though no act has been committed, and the marriage bond no longer exists! That our Lord, with His infinite foreknowledge, could have sanctioned such a theory is utterly beyond belief.

2. The other fact concerning this false exception in the canon to which we would call your special attention is that there can be no possible exception to a moral law—to the Seventh, any more than to the Eighth, or Ninth. There may be degrees of guilt and extenuating circumstances, but if exception is allowed, all is allowed. There is no logical resting place between one cause for breaking the bond and fiftytwo causes, which is the actual number that our forty-eight codes allow, today.

The keen intellect of St. Augustine saw this when he wrote: "If by the adultery of a spouse the marriage bond is dissolved, the absurdity follows—that the woman may be unloosed from the bond by her unchastity; and if she is loosed she shall not be an adulteress if she sin with another man; which is as foolish a thing as can be said." (Comm. on Rom. vii. 2, 3. See also Of Adulterous Marriages XVII. 18.) Dollinger sums up his discussion of the same subject when he writes that "this theory goes against language, history, and logic" (First Age of Christianity" Vol. II Pp. 265-267, and App. III., p. 366, ed. 1877).

When the paganized literature of America in this Twentieth Century is found ignoring the greatest of all moralists and psychologists in clamoring for full freedom for divorce and re-marriage, just as the half-pagan Christianity of Constantinople and its imperial court clamored for it in the oFurth Century the Church of today can only find safety in following the example of Athanasius and Chrysostom in resisting the insertion of the smallest exception to the Seventh Commandment, as they did to the insertion of an iota in the Creed. One rift in the divine dam of the moral law, just as one rift in the divine revelation of the perfect Godhead of Jesus Christ, leads on logically and inevitably to the mighty flood that ignores all law.

The Assembly of Puritan divines that met in Westminster Hall in 1648, thought they found in the New Testament two causes, adultery and desertion, for divorce from the bond. A special committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America, appointed a year ago to consider the whole subject of Marriage and Divorce, has just announced its recommendation that, on practical grounds alone, desertion should be omitted from the Confession of Faith. It has taken nearly three centuries of experience for them to learn what the Church has known for nineteen centuries. Sixty years should be sufficient for us to learn that the experience applies equally to adultery as it does to desertion, and all the other fifty exceptions so generously granted by our forty-eight Legislatures.

Shall we alone out of the whole Anglican Communion retain a theory of the destructive power of adultery, unknown to Scripture, to the whole Primitive Church, and to our forefathers in England for twelve hundred years past, and which, by the hard logic of experience, has proved to be the wide-open door of exit from holy estate that our Eternal Judge has told us "man" may not open, but God alone.

This is a hard doctrine for the innocent party, you say. It was a hard doctrine, and still is, that "one man should die for the people, and that the whole people perish not. "But this law is not confined to religion. Even our civil lawyers tell us that "hard cases make bad laws". All life under the cross of Christ must be a life of self-sacrifice. "The right to be happy in this world" has no place in His teaching.

It is no purpose of the Association that a return to the law abandoned in haste and ignorance in 1868 should have any retroactive effect. Those who have been led into sin by the falsehood of the canon must be dealt with not only justly but tenderly. The Church herself, or those responsible for the error, must share the blame.

A Scientist on Evolution

In an article entitled "Truth and Error in the Doctrine of Evolution", J. A. Fleming, D. Sc., F. R. S., President of the Victoria Institute, says:

"The universe is not merely a thing, it is a Thought; and Thought implies and necessitates a Thinker. The use of the term 'evolution' as a name for the cause of the order, adaptation, and beauty of the external world is an error. It is erroneous because it attributes the production of phenomena which appeal to our intelligence and emotion to an agency which is impersonal, unself-conscious, and has no intelligence or emotion itself, and therefore cannot produce them. It is inadequate because dissimilar to the things it is called in to explain. It is merely a personification of the concept of gradual and continuous change."

He warns the general public not to be rushed into the belief that scientific opinion on the "Origin of Species" is unanimous and infallible, or that the time-honored teaching of the Bible understood in the light of adequate knowledge of fact, history, and language must, as too many think, be thrown to the winds.

He adds: "The doctrine of evolution gives us no account of the way in which matter, energy, life, and mind first made their appearance. Nor has it done so for that which we call the human soul, with its innate God-consciousness and deep-seated conviction that bodily death is not the termination of personality."

In conclusion, in view of authoritative statements from eminent biologists (some of them given) he enquires: "Need we be in such a hurry to throw our creeds and ancient doctrines into the melting-pot, and give text-books on evolution a place of pre-eminence in our theological colleges?"

"No one," he says, "would deny that there are difficulties in the form and details of Biblical statements as to man's origin, but they are not yet resolved by substituting for them the doubtful hypothesis of a continuous evolution from the amoeba to the man. There may be more of truth than is generally supposed locked up in the sublime and ancient statement, even in spite of its parabolic form."

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

This great scientist is not so cocksure about the popular evolutionary doctrine of man's descent, as many smaller men in our own time are.—"The Christian Irishman."

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson—Number 25.
Topic—Israel—God's Covenant People, Number 1.

There are many interesting facts concerning the Jewish people, which every Christian should know, and many reasons why our hearts should go out to them in sympathy and love. Our limited space prevents the tracing of Israel's history other than a few leading facts that we may more readily understand their present position in the Divine plan of the ages, and approaching prominence in the world's history.

About 1936 B. C., God called Abraham to be the father of a new nation, a chosen people through whom He would manifest Himself, and through whom all the families of the earth would be blessed (Gen. 12:1-3). The "Old Testament" records the remarkable history and growth of this ancient people until at the present time there are said to number upward of 15,000,000, which true to Divine forecast are scattered throughout the world, without a homeland, without a leader, and with a veil upon their minds and hearts.

Their sorrows began with the rejection and crucifixion of their Messiah, and their sufferings in various lands has exceeded that of any other race. Their greatest suffering is yet to come, as foretold in both "Old" and "New" Testament prophecies. This "time of trouble" is referred to as Daniel's seventieth week, a time such as the world has never seen. It marks the close of the present Gentile Age, when God is to again deal with Israel. After the removal of the Church, and "the great tribulation" sweeps over the world, a remnant of Israel will discern the awful mistake in the rejection of the Son of God, and will turn to the Lord Jesus, their rejected Messiah, and become His witnesses (Rev. 7:3-8). Unknown to blinded Israel, much of the Old Testament is prophetic of this last approaching sorrow, the final triumph, and especially concerning the Lord Jesus who came to His own and His own received Him not. Examples, Isaiah 53, and the various Messianic Psalms.

The present extraordinary changes in Palestine whereby the Jewish people are now gathering in that historic land, is of intense interest and supreme prophetic importance. This "budding of the fig-tree" and "shaking of the dry bones" foreshadows startling events that should awaken a sleeping world; unconsciously drifting toward its solemn crisis (Matt. 24:32-51; Daniel 12:1).

Every Jew and every Gentile should carefully consider the following Scriptures, which cannot be broken:

1. God's promise to make Israel a great Nation.—Gen. 12:1-3.
2. A visual survey of the promised land.—Gen. 12:14-17.
3. Title Deed, and detailed survey.—Numbers 33:51 to 34:29.
4. Increasing in numbers, they become dissatisfied with an invisible King.—1 Sam. 8:7.
5. Punishment for disobedience.—Lev. 26:14-39.
6. The forecasted scattering.—Deut. 28:64-67.
7. Their land desolated.—Lev. 26:31.
8. Palestine's former fruitfulness.—Deut. 8:7-9.
9. Jehovah's case against Israel.—Isaiah 1:1-23.
10. Sinful and laden with iniquity.—Isa. 1:5.
11. Their formal worship and memorial days, are an abomination to Jehovah.—Isa. 1:13-14.
12. Banished from the eyes and ears of God.—Isa. 1:15.
13. The blood of Christ is indeed upon them.—Matt. 27:25.
14. Witnesses unto themselves that they are of the generation that killed the prophets.—Matt. 23:31.
15. "Stiff-necked" and resisting God's call.—Acts 7:51-60.
16. Having a zeal for God, but not of knowledge.—Rom. 10:1-21.
17. God hath given them the spirit of slumber.—Rom. 11:8.
18. Even unto this day, the veil is upon their heart.—2 Cor. 4:15.
19. But this veil will be removed, when any shall turn to the Lord Jesus, their rejected Messiah.—2 Cor. 3:16.
20. Even in the latter days, if obedient.—Deut. 4:30.
21. God will not forget His covenant with the fathers.—Deut. 4:31.
22. The Jews' unbelief, the Gentiles' opportunity.—Rom. 11:25.
23. A witnessing remnant, through grace.—Rom. 11:1-6.
24. Jehovah shall again gather them.—Isa. 11:11; Ezek. 37:15-28.
25. Gathered in unbelief, to pass through final discipline.—Ezek. 22:19-22; Zech. 13:9; 14:1-3.
26. The rejected Messiah shall return to Mt. Olivet.—Zech. 14:4; Rev. 19.
27. They shall look upon Him whom they pierced.—Zech. 12:10; Rev. 1:7.
28. The great battle of Armageddon, when our Lord will rescue the Jewish remnant, besieged by the great world powers, under the Anti-Christ.—Rev. 19:11-20.
29. A nation shall be born in a day.—Isa. 66:8.
30. Israel no longer a curse, but a blessing.—Zech. 8:13-15, 23.

Historic Periods of Frederieksburg

1608-1861.

Mrs. Vivian Minor Fleming.

Captain John Smith and the Indians.

Captain John Smith sailed up the Rappahannock River as far as the falls in 1608, beginning his voyage July 24. Three of his companions, Anthony Bagnall, Powell and Todkill, give a good account of this trip and there are maps showing the location of the various Indian tribes. As the river narrowed in the ascent they were assailed from both sides by showers of arrows. They disembarked near the foot of the falls, where there was no forest nor undergrowth to conceal their enemies, examined the stones, etc., looking for minerals. They were attacked, and in defending themselves an Indian was wounded and left for dead. They took him on board their boat, bound up his wounds and fed him. Mosco, a friendly Indian, who was their guide, wanted to kill him, but John Smith saved his life.

Through the mediation of this prisoner, the next day following, they opened negotiations with the Indians on the shore and peace was made. Several hundred Indians entered into friendly relations with Captain John Smith and his party and furnished them with corn and abundant provisions.

Captain Quinn gives a full account of all this in his "History of Fredericksburg", but when the National Geographic Society met here in May, 1895, one of their speakers told us that the "pow wow" was held on the Washington Farm and the "Pipe of Peace" was smoked. They probably had sources of information which are not available for us.

One of their party, Richard Featherstone, died on this trip and was buried near the rapids. Thus was Fredericksburg first consecrated with the life of a white man.

(To be continued.)

THE BEST SERVICE.

Occasionally a well-meaning woman calls the Good Will Industries and says: "Now, I'm going to send you some old clothes, but I don't want you to sell them. They must be given away. I can't bear the idea of selling anything to those poor people."

Now, of course, there are times when garments ought to be given away and not sold and the Superintendent of the Richmond plant (the Rev. Samuel Coles) never fails to meet this issue fairly and squarely. However, the mission of the Good Will Industries is of a far more constructive nature than this; the slogan is "Not charity but a chance"! the program is to collect clothing, shoes, furniture and odds and ends from all over the city and then to give needy men and women the work of rejuvenating them. At present there are thirty-five of these "opportunity workers" employed at the Administration Building, 1815 East Grace Street. Here, the women are busy with mending, cleaning and pressing worn and soiled clothing, sometimes transforming antiquated garments into modern ones, and the men are baling paper, cobbling shoes and rejuvenating old furniture, all of which has been brought in by Good Will trucks.

What does it all mean? First of all, it means that a number of men and women, who very much prefer honest work to receiving charity, are given a chance. Some of them have walked the streets for months begging work; some have struggled long to avoid asking for charity. To these people, a job means much. It means, too, that they will be brought under Christian influences; that they will be urged to attend chapel exercises three mornings a week and a special evangelistic service every Monday evening. Denominational lines are never emphasized, but efforts are made to lead them to Christ and then into the Church of their preference. Some of those who now hold positions of trust in the Industry and who are consistent Church members, were once very low because of drink and other forms of sin.

But this program could not be carried out, if all the clothing, furniture, etc., were given away. They must be sold in order to have money to pay the wages of the men and women who made them salable. Then there is the side of the customer. Those who buy these articles are people of very small means, who cannot afford to buy new things, but they are delighted to find goods that are clean and in good shape, goods that are altogether different from those commonly found at "rummage sales", and producing an altogether different psychic effect upon the purchaser.

This truth is dawning into the hearts of men everywhere, that the best service we can render our fellow man is to make it possible for him to earn what he receives; to encourage every tendency toward economic independence and to discourage every tendency toward pauperism and, above all, to give him a knowledge of Jesus Christ, the Master Social Worker.

THE "ANGLO-CATHOLIC".

Mr. Editor:

The "Anglo-Catholic" (or "Back to Rome") propaganda emanating from some periodicals purporting to represent the Protestant Episcopal Church is of a most amazing character.

In the "Living Church" of February 18, for example, appears an editorial under the title "The Roman Question", containing the following statements:

> "As one examines the issues that divide Romans from Anglicans and that continue the old hatreds of days gone by, one always comes back to the fact that the trouble lies not so much with differences about religion as with differences about politics and civil rule. . . . . That the relations of the distinguished Bishop and primate of an apostolic see to other Bishops and to the Church at large are a legitimate matter for discussion, as at Malines, is freely granted."

Why make statements such as those just quoted when the actual facts are exactly to the contrary?

The differences between Anglicans (that is, those loyal to the doctrines of the Church as the Church has stated them) and Romans are as pronounced with respect to matters of religion as to the claims of the papacy to temporal power, and no Church has made this any plainer than the Anglican. It is doubtless true that the religious difference between the "Anglo-Catholic", as he calls himself, and the Roman Catholic are almost negligible; but no man has a right to call himself an Anglican unless he is loyal to the doctrines of the Anglican Church as that Church has set them forth officially. The Anglican Church is a Protestant Episcopal body, the doctrine of which in many matters the "Anglo-Catholic" in England and America is striving to undermine and overrun.

With this distinction clearly in mind, an examination of the statements in the "Living Church" immediately demonstrates their fallacy.

Among the Articles of Religion, which "Anglo Catholic" will endeavor at the next General Convention to have eliminated from the doctrinal law of the American Church (and will do if Protestant Episcopalians remain asleep and permit it), is the nineteenth, which reads as follows:

> "As the Church of Jerusalem, Alexandria and Antioch have erred, so also the Church of Rome has erred, not only in their living and manner of ceremonies, but also in matters of faith."

In the twenty-second, twenty-fifth, twenty-eighth and thirty-first articles the Anglican Church has expressly and specifically said that it declines to accept Transubstantiation, Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament, Purgatory, Worshipping of Images and Relics and the doctrines of seven Sacraments, all of which the editor of the "Living Church" is bound to know, are fundamentals in the Roman Communion.

The Church of Rome insists upon all of these doctrines and ceremonies and denounces as heretics all who decline to accept them.

The Anglican Church emphatically repudiates them.

The result is a direct and irreconcilable conflict. One believes in these Roman doctrines and practices or he does not. There is, and can be, no middle ground.

Therefore, why make the statement that the differences between Anglicans and Romans relate more to questions of politics and civil rule than to matters of religion? That may be the view of "Anglo-Catholics", but that is not what this Church has said.

And then, when it comes to the assertion that it is "freely granted" that the relations between the "distinguished Bishop of an apostolic see (presumably the Pope of Rome) and other Bishops, as well as the Church at large, are matters for legitimate discussion, as at Malines, it seems to the writer that the enthusiastic "Anglo Catholic" editor of the "Living Church" finds himself up a very tall tree and out on the end of an equally small limb thereof.

Who is it that "freely grants" his statement? Certainly not the Anglican Church, because that body has positively declared that it will have none of the Mass and other doctrines which the Roman Church regards as vital. True, "Anglo Catholics" in both England and America have, in contempt and violation of the law of the Church, dragged these Roman doctrines and ceremonies into numerous individual parishes on both sides of the Atlantic, but, sooner or later, there will inevitably be a show-down, which will determine whether the Church is to be controlled by those loyal to its teachings or by the revolutionary "Anglo Catholics". And the Roman Church "freely grants" nothing of the kind, because, not only has it, for more than three hundred years, denounced those who differ with it theologically, but the Pope, in his recent encyclical, reiterated the oft-made statement that no one need entertain the slightest idea of union with that Church unless prepared to yeild to each and every one of its dogmas, ceremonies and practices, as well as to all of the claims of the papacy.

It results that the record shows that this statement of the "Living Church" is in direct conflict with the pronouncements of both Churches—neither agrees to it. It also results that there was nothing to be "legitimately" discussed at Malines.

The whole truth with regard to the Malines "conversations" is this: boring from within (just as they are doing in the American Church), certain "Anglo Catholics" (or "Back to Rome" advocates), indulging the fatuous belief that they had made such progress with their disloyal work that they would shortly be able to deliver the English Church, lock, stock and barrel, to Rome, entered into negotiations for that purpose, at Malines, in Belgium, with officials of the Roman Church, seemingly with the approval of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, Bishop Gore and others. Concrete proof is lacking that the Pope was aware of or sanctioned these negotiations on the part of his Church, but the following facts will enable readers of the "Southern Churchman" to reach their own conclusions on that point.

These negotiations began before the World War and covered several years, during which period they were carefully kept from the rank and file of the membership of the English Church, for obvious reasons. But they finally got out. What happened? The ink was hardly dry on the publication of the fact of these "conversations" having taken place when the Pope issued the encyclical mentioned above. Nothing was said at Rome about these negotiations while they were in progress, but the moment they were made public, and aroused widespread indignation throughout England, out comes the encyclical! A reading of that document discloses that, while it does not mention the Malines negotiations, its purpose is to create the impression that Rome never authorised them. Had the "conversations" remained hidden, it is entirely probable that nothing would have ever been heard of the encyclical.

It follows that the discussions at Malines were certainly not "legitimate", so far as the English Church was concerned, because "Anglo Catholics" are disloyal to its doctrines as it has announced them (just as they are disloyal to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America), nor were they "legitimate" as to the Roman Church, judging from the recent pronouncements of the Pope, and he claims to be infallible!

When the "Anglo Catholic" takes his pen in hand these days to spread his propaganda, Church constitutions and doctrinal declarations mean absolutely nothing to him. He seems to be imbued with the Roman idea that whatever he says must be swallowed whole, without question.

Truly, we are hearing some remarkable statements in this day and time.

"The Witness" of February 16 is authority for the statement that:

"What Bishop Henson (Eng.) calls the 'Protestant Underworld' is working the Roman bogey for all it is worth."

What does he mean by the 'Protestant Underworld"?

COMMUNION SERVICE.

Mr. Editor:

Among the many interesting things that I have lately read in The Southern Churchman none has appealed more to me than the letters concerning the invitation to the Communion Service given by the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr. It seems as if it was to be expected of his father's son, for it shows the true Christian spirit which should prevail among us.

In that connection, I think the following in my own experience may be of interest: I grew up in St. Paul's Parish, generally known as Rock Creek, Washington, D. C., during the rectorship of the Rev. James Albert Buck. Mr. Buck was a High Churchman, not a ritualist. Over and over again, on Communion Sunday, I have heard him invite to Communion all of other denominations present there and in good standing in their own churches. I have attended communion in many churches, but he is the only one whom I heard give that invitation. Perhaps it would be wise for ministers of the present day not only to follow his example in that case, but also to exhort members to make the responses in a clear voice; though the modern choir takes away from us most of the responses.

In closing, allow me to congratulate the editors of the Southern Churchman for the brave stand they are making for Evangelical Churchmanship.

H. Cockerille.

THE ARTICLES OF RELIGION.

Mr. Editor:

I have read with interest the various articles and letters which have appeared in your columns relative to the elimination of the Articles of Religion from the Prayer Book, and particularly the article in your issue of February 25 by the Rev. Dr. Edward McCrady, as it is evidently intended to be a scholarly, though unfortunately not dispassionate, discussion of the matter.

As I, like Dr. McCrady, am opposed to the omission of the Articles and as I voted against the proposal in the last General Convention, I hope I may be permitted to point out certain errors of fact into which he and others have fallen as to how the matter came before the Convention. No argument is helped by a display of ignorance of the underlying facts.

Dr. McCrady, for example, charges that the Prayer Book Commission in flat defiance of its instructions has inter alia even gone so far as to propose the complete elimination of the Articles of Religion from the Prayer Book. Now the fact is that this proposal was not made by this Commission and the Commission had nothing whatever to do with it. The Journal (p. 190) shows that the Resolution to omit the Articles was presented on the second day of the session by Mr. Morehouse of Milwaukee, as an individual. The resolution was not even referred to the Commission, but was simply placed on the calendar. There it remained until the thirteenth day of the session, when it came up in regular order for action. The Lay Deputation from Iowa called for the vote to be taken by Dioceses and Orders, which was done, and the resolution was adopted (Journal, p. 304). The thing that surprised me was that there was scarcely any opposition worth speaking about and very little debate.

On the next day the action of the Deputies was concurred in by the House of Bishops, without even a record vote (Journal, p. 384), and on the fifteenth day their Message No. 161 informed the Deputies that the Bishops concurred in omitting the Thirty-nine Articles, together with their title page (Journal, p. 422).

If this proposal, or any objectionable change in the Prayer Book, is to be defeated in the next General Convention, it can not be defeated by attacking the Prayer Book Commission or by appealing to the Resolution of 1913, as if there were something sacro-sanct about that resolution, but it must be defeated simply on its merits. Whether the Prayer Book Commission has in every instance conformed to the Resolution of 1913 is a question of individual opinion and on such question the Convention alone has the deciding vote. All proposals from any source have been passed on by the Convention and what the Convention has adopted it has adopted.

As to the Resolution of 1913 itself it should be clearly understood by all that legally it has no binding effect upon the Convention itself. No mere resolution of one Convention can take away from subsequent Conventions the right to decide for themselves what resolutions they will consider and what they will not.

J. Randolph Anderson.

A CRISIS HAS ARISEN.

Mr. Editor:

I am delighted you have become the Editor of the Southern Churchman; for you are fighting so valiantly for the Bible and the Church of the Reformation. I was surprised and distressed that several delegates to the last General Convention did not arise and protest against the Thirty-nine Articles being taken out of the Prayer Book. Those Anglo-Catholics have taken their policy from the Roman Church; they work under cover, till they think the favorable hour has arrived to declare their policy. Those of us who still uphold the Reformation have been trying to be tolerant; but, they are pushing us to the wall. You are right to sound the alarm; a crisis has arisen. I do hope and pray you will be able to arouse the believers in the Reformation who will insist on the retention of the Thirty-nine Articles in the Prayer Book, and in the addition of nothing that the Thirty-nine Articles forbid.

Well, I expect I had better say who I am. My father was the late Rev. Edward T. Walker. His longest pastorate was Trinity Church, Edgefield, S. C., twenty-four years. His elder brother who brought him up was called by St. Helena Church, Beaufort, from the Eastern Shore of Maryland, when he was twenty-four. He remained its rector for fifty-five years. During his rectorship thirty-seven ministers went out to preach the Gospel from St. Helena Church. Two Barnwells, two Elliotts, Boon, two Whites became Bishops. Uncle Rogers Walker found this a High Church diocese; when he resigned it was Low Church.

I am now in my eighty-third year.

Emily B. Walker.

VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Mr. Editor:

A very conscientious and intelligent minister writes me as follows:

"Years ago at the consecration of the church in Fleeton by Bishop Gibson, I called attention to that blasphemous book, 'Christianity and the Social Crisis', which was, and probably is today, used as a reference book at the Seminary, and recommended to social service classes, and I said then in the presence of Bishop Gibson that as long as that blasphemy was taught I would never contribute a cent to the Educational Society. We are today reaping what we have sowed; while the author of the book has died in shame and despair."

In my humble opinion, the Virginia Theological Seminary needs an overhauling, and like many Episcopalians they are doing things they ought not, and leaving undone things they ought to do daily at that school.

Langbourne M. Williams.

DID GENERAL LEE WRITE THE LETTER?

Mr. Editor:

Among the good features of the reading matter of the Southern Churchman these days, not the least valuable and enjoyable are the frequent articles on different Christian leaders of the Confederacy and the South, such as Davis, Lee and Jackson. I surely hope these will be continued.

In the issue of February 25 is published a letter credited to General Lee, and in which is found the sentiment, "Duty, then, is the sublimest word in our language". In a pamphlet of mine (Living Confederate Principles: A Heritage for all Time), appearing first as an article in Number 40, Southern Historical Society Papers, is an allusion to such an expression, sometimes credited to Lee, and with it this foot note:

The purported letter of General Lee containing the expression is found in Dr. J. Wm. Jones' Personal Reminiscences, Anecdotes and Letters of Gen. Robert E. Lee, 1875, p. 133. Captain James Power Smith, of the Southern Historical Society, advises me that Professor Graves, of the University of Virginia, has examined the question in an Address before the Bar Association of Virginia, and reached the conclusion that the letter was not written by General Lee; also, that the Publishing Committee of the Society concurs in this conclusion.

My article as first written credited the expression in question to General Lee, and this it was caused the advices from Captain (Rev.) Smith, a former member, by the way, of Stonewall Jackson's staff. A separate article devoted to the subject of the authenticity of the supposed letter by Lee appeared in the same annual number (1915) of the Society's papers. Personally, I have been disposed to be disappointed that there was cause to doubt that the letter was written by General Lee, of whom it has been sung:

> His pole-star, Duty, led him on,
> Like second, nobler Washington.
> . . . . .
> This type of perfect chivalry—
> Virginia's peerless Robert Lee.

Perhaps some other reader of the Southern Churchman can throw further light on the question raised. While on the subject of epigrams, here is one credited to Jefferson Davis: "Never be haughty to the humble, nor humble to the haughty."

Lloyd T. Everett.

PRESENTED TO EDITOR FOR PUBLICATION.

My Dear Mr. Ellis:

I want to thank you for writing, and the Editor of the Southern Churchman for publishing in its last issue your article, "Back to the Prayer Book". In a kindly spirit and with a saving touch of good humor, you have, in language clear cut and incisive, called the attention of the Church to conditions that should not continue. No one can read your article and then be content to "stand by for announcements". Clergymen and laymen are making definite study of the Church's one standard of worship and instruction as never before. You have rendered an acceptable service. Your call, "Back to the Prayer Book", will be heeded. Don't feel lonely.

Book Reviews

CONSTRUCTIVE CITIZENSHIP: By L. P. Jacks. Doubleday, Doran and Company, Inc. Price, $2.

Sound thought upon the subject, "Constructive Citizenship", has been applied by Mr. Jacks, and the result is a group of effective suggestions that are both practical and optimistic. He appeals to the intelligence, the moral capacity, and the organizing power, of the citizenship, to accomplish the constructive goal indicated in the subject of his lectures.

The philosophy back of this recommendation is presented carefully, as its consideration involves a few abstractions approaching the theory of relativity, and not usually grasped by the average reader. The points are presented successfully, however, and the reader is enabled to see that constructive citizenship must come as the result of the finding of a "method rather than of a program, a spirit rather than a system". This method or spirit he presents in the early portion of the book: the use of intelligence, of the sense of trusteeship, and of the organizing power, of people, in order to improve the existing state of citizenship. The bulk of the book is taken up with an effective elaboration of each of these suggestions.

Upon the background of present-day citizenship in England, Mr. Jack's lectures, contained in this book, are especially interesting. The industrial demoralization of the country has accentuated the need for a constructive spirit in the philosophy of Englishmen. Mr. Jacks has seen this condition in England from the point of view of America upon his frequent visits in this country, and while American citizenship can learn many lessons from Mr. Jacks' thoughts, the comparison afforded between the citizenry of the two countries must have enabled him to be more articulate in describing the reactions of which he was conscious.

The book is a straightforward presentation of the ideas contained, intended for the reader who is interested in the practical significance of the subject. It is dominated by the persuasive style which has given its author such a popular place in the opinions of the college students before whom he has spoken.

The Great Commission

A reassuring telegram received February 28 from Miss Alice Wright at Nenana, Alaska, reads as follows:

"Fear from letters received last mail friends unduly disturbed over scarlet fever epidemic here. Have had bad time since last October, but are out of quarantine now with no serious after-effects. Staff entirely recovered and all on duty.—Alice Wright."

THE WUHU CONFERENCE.

It was from a special meeting of the Standing Committee, assembled in Anking, the middle of last March, that a cable was sent to the Department of Missions asking that a commission be sent out to confer about various questions brought into the foreground by the tide of revolution which was then sweeping down the Yangtse. November 28 saw this request fulfilled, and another assembly of diocesan leaders gathered in Wuhu to confer with the Commission from the Mother Church.

The Commissioners, Dr. John W. Wood and Bishop Sanford arrived from Hankow, accompanied by Miss Lustgarten as secretary. Bishop Huntington, who had gone up to Hankow with them, came down a few days earlier to make preparations. Mr. and Mrs. Lanphear were already living in Wuhu at the time, and proved most hospitable hosts to the large group of foreign guests. The other members of the foreign staff still at hand, the Rev. Lloyd R. Craighill, the Rev. Joseph E. Wood, Deaconess Fueller. Miss Mildred Capron and Miss Carol Davis came up from Shanghai. About twenty-five Chinese delegates from all parts of the Diocese had assembled a few days before for an informal preliminary conference.

A touch of spice was added to the situation by a demonstration staged by the "People's Livelihood School", a propaganda institution on the hill beyond St. James School, just before the foreigners arrived. A group of students had come down, raised a disturbance at the Sister's Compound, and had plastered the compound walls with the usual posters, "Down with the Slaves of the Foreigners", "Down with the Western Cultural Penetration", "Down with the Christian Church", "Down with Imperialism", etc., etc. A tactful handling of the situation by the Rev. Lindel Tsen and the Rev. Robin Chen, however, quieted things down; and the arrest by the military authorities a few days later of some of the communistic teachers in the school put an end to the incident.

The conference after expressing through the Rev. Lindel

Tsen its appreciation of the visit of the Commission, adopted as its agenda the outline prepared by the preliminary conference. This presented "Evangelistic Work" as the first topic for discussion. The view was expressed that religion in the home should be stressed as a means of assuring a wholesome spiritual life even in times when large public gatherings are impracticable. The need of training men capable of bringing the Christian message to the farmer and labor groups was also stressed. Others urged that men gifted in literary work be given time for production of Christian literature.

"Self-support" was the outstanding question at the afternoon session. At the preliminary conference it had been proposed that twenty-five years be set as the goal of complete self-support. Another suggested method was graduated annual reduction of grant from the Department of Missions. Any scheme of self-support, it was felt, must be based on a careful budget for each congregation, the Chinese participating in the making of this budget and assuming a definite and increasing proportion of the total.

Under "Diocesan Reorganization" the scheme worked out by the Standing Committee in March was presented and passed on to Synod without a great deal of discussion. This scheme recognizes the Diocese as a self-governing unit; and acknowledges all workers, whether Chinese or foreign, as standing on an equal basis. It proposes that the Standing Committee should serve as an Executive Committee of the Diocese when Synod is not in session, and that there should be appointed an Executive Secretary.

Most of the second day's discussion was devoted to educational topics. The consensus of opinion was that we should adopt a policy of concentration in school matters, centering on one Middle School for boys, and one Middle School for girls. The Christian influence of teachers should be an essential point as well as scholastic ability. Registration of schools should be applied for only on condition that freedom of religious teaching and worship could be secured, and that the title to school property should not be jeopardized.

This summary gives no idea of the fine spirit that pervaded the entire conference, but the free and open discussion of all questions in the finest spirit of fellowship was in truth the outstanding features of the gathering. Both Bishop Sanford and Dr. Wood expressed in public and in private that the frank and untrammeled discussion had enabled them to understand the Chinese viewpoint in a way they could not otherwise have done.

ANGLICAN CHURCH IN WARSAW.

A new Anglican Church, Emmanuel, has been consecrated in Warsaw. It is part of a fine block of buildings erected last year in a central part of the capital by the London Mission to Jews. The English Church in Warsaw has been there for more than fifty years without a permanent home of its own until now. The Bishop of Fulham (Anglican Bishop for North and Central Europe), had the service, assisted by the head of the Mission, the Rev. H. C. Carpenter, who is also British chaplain, and by the Rev. O. H. Prentki, recently ordained, the first Polish citizen to be in Anglican orders. Attending the service were the British Minister and Legation staff, representatives of the Polish Government and the municipality of Warsaw, the Metropolitan of the Orthodox Church in Poland, the heads of the Polish Lutheran and Evangelical Churches, the American Consul, many other Americans and British, and the Hebrew Christians.

Ministers Needed!

Bishop Rowe has had a severe blow in the resignation of the Rev. L. F. Kent as Archdeacon of the Yukon (on account of his wife's serious illness). "Just when I thought Fort Yukon was cared for, down crashes this." The Bishop's need of men, and men of the right kind, is very urgent. Priests are needed at Fort Yukon, Ketchikan, Cordova, Anchorage. They must be men not only of devotion but of endurance, youth, creative ability and resourcefulness, and without family obligations.

Bishop McKim, after his visit to Alaska last year, wrote to a friend: "Bishop Rowe is doing an heroic work, but is disheartened for want of men. More than half of his stations have no resident worker, and the people complain of being neglected. . . . It is a discredit to the zeal and missionary spirit of the Church that priests do not volunteer for Alaska."

Deaconess Bedell, with no word of complaint, wrote of the service at Stephen's Village on Christmas Day, when there was no priest available (nor will there probably be at Easter): "We decorated the Sanctuary, which is curtained off from the school cabin. The wall back of the altar was covered with spruce branches, and the result was beautiful, especially with our new altar and hangings. . . . . The midnight service consisted of prayer, carols, and the story of the shepherds. We all assembled again at noon for the Christmas Day service. We could not have the Holy Communion, but we could worship. . . The service was conducted by our native lay reader. . . . The offering was fifty dollars. The natives here are getting very little fur and cannot give much."

More definite particulars about work in Alaska may be obtained from the Rev. Artley B. Parson, Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Yale Dean Says Hope Lies In Average Man.

Dean Charles R. Brown of the Yale Divinity School said in university public worship in Battell Chapel last Sunday, says the New York Times, that Jesus Christ did not believe that all men are created free and equal. He told the undergraduates present that he did not believe that they thought so either.

The world, he said, is made up of average people and the hope of its future lies in the fidelity and efficiency of men and women of average ability.

"I do not want to be compelled to beg my bread and I have no desire to be a millionaire," he said. "Why should I want fifty millions of dollars any more than fifty legs?"

Speaking on the parable of the talents given to the different men, Dean Brown said in part:

"The Declaration of Independence says that 'All men are created free and equal'. I wonder? There may be equality before the law, theoretically, at least—it is not always so in practice. But are men created equal in ability, in opportunity, in chance to rise?

"You would all say 'No'. The Master, who knew what was in man and what wasn't, said 'No'. He frankly faced the fact of human inequality, 'To one man is given five talents, to another two, to another one. To every man according to his several ability'.

"My concern today is not with either extreme. I am not thinking of the man who is thoroughly sure of himself because he feels that he has five talents of ability, nor of the man who looks at his poor little one talent, saying to himself, 'What's the use'? My concern is with the man who received two talents—he is neither very rich nor very poor, neither as wise as Solomon, nor a dunce, neither a finished saint nor a rascal. He is just an average man—he represents the great middle class.

"The world is peopled by men and women of ordinary goodness, nothing prancing or showy, but sufficient to put the race ahead and make the world a better place to live in. The average man holds the key to the future because there are so many of him.

"The man with two talents is exposed to peculiar temptations. The man of average ability, feeling that he will never rise to distinction nor sink to the lowest level, may move along in humdrum fashion, doing mediocre work and failing to make the most of himself.

"When the ordinary tasks are done well, men double their ability. It was so in the parable. 'He that receiveth two talents gained another two'. He became just twice the man that he was. The brilliant man with the five talents made no better show—he also gained five talents more. It is not the size of the final showing in either case which counts, but the fidelity and efficiency the man has shown in using what he had."

Manning Urges Study of Christ During Lent.

"What Our Religion as Christians Means and Is" was the subject of a sermon delivered by Bishop William T. Manning at the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, as reported by the New York Times.

"No man who is living in relationship with Christ will break his marriage or cheat his customers or employees or try to injure his neighbor's reputations, or be willing to make money by writing books or plays which disseminate filth and immorality or tend to weaken the moral status or faith of his fellowmen," said Bishop Manning.

"Our religion as Christians means relationship with Christ. Our faith as Christians is faith in a person, in Christ Himself. The creed and sacrament keep our faith in Him fine and clear. Where men lose their hold on the Creed and sacrament they lose their hold on Christ and substitute a mere emotionalism which lacks the power to comfort and save."

Bishop Manning said the problem of what Christ meant to each individual should be studied and decided during Lent.

"If religion is real," he said, "and if our relationship with Christ is real it will guide all our relationships with our fellow-men. Everything else will take care of itself."

Dr. Merrill Urges Service.

Preaching in the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City, the Rev. Dr. William P. Merrill spoke of the active and the passive codes of religion. The New York Times quotes him as follows:

"There is effort and there is silence. There is the quiet inflooding of spiritual grace and the active outworking of the divine will. There is what God does in us and what we do for God. One can no more live a wholesome and true Christian life by exercising the one side all the time than he can maintain a vigorous physical life by breathing in or breathing out continuously or by devoting himself exclusively to either eating or exercise. The truest religious experience is that which is constantly spending in service the grace received through communion with God."

Moffat Tunnel Opened Formally By Colorado.
(A. P.)

Colorado officially opened on February 26 the famous Moffat tunnel with formal ceremonies.

Twenty-five hundred persons, in a special train of four sections, made the trip from Denver to the east portal of the tunnel to witness the historic event, to hear speeches commending the work of the men who made the tunnel possible, and to witness the governor and a former governor of Colorado drive a golden spike into a tie at the eastern mouth of the tunnel.

Following the dedicatory ceremonies, the trains were formed into two sections, which steamed through the tunnel—the first passenger trains to go under the Continental Divide. The special trains then returned through the tunnel and arrived in Denver at nightfall.

Governor W. H. Adams, of Colorado, and former Governor Oliver H. Shoup, drove the gold spike into the tie amid cheers that made the snow covered slopes of the mountains ring. Short addresses were made by former Governor Shoup and Governor Adams. Mayor John F. Bowman, of Salt Lake City, representing Governor Dern, of Utah, told of the interest of the people of Utah in the completion of the tunnel.

W. P. Robinson, head of the Moffat Tunnel Commission, formerly transferred possession of the tunnel to the Denver and Salt Lake Railroad. W. R. Freeman, President of the Railroad, accepted on behalf of his company.

The tunnel, six and two-tenths miles long, is the longest railroad bore in the North American Continent. It will cut off twenty-seven miles of travel over the Continental Divide and the road, when completed to Salt Lake City, will cut the distance between Denver and the Pacific Coast by one hundred and eighty-one miles. Coloradians declare its completion opens up a hitherto inaccessible inland empire as large as the State of Pennsylvania.

Wants Bible Taken As It Was Written.

We quote the New York Times as follows:

The Very Rev. William J. Duane, President of Fordham University, delivered the second of a series of six talks on "Who and What Is Jesus Christ" at high mass Sunday morning in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Fifth Avenue at Fiftieth Street. In his first talk last Sunday he spoke on "The Witnesses of Jesus" and this Sunday on "Their Testimony".

"The most important element in the interpretation of the gospel accounts of the work of Christ," President Duane said, "is that they must be regarded in their natural setting. The words that the disciples used in describing the attributes of Jesus must be understood in the sense in which they were grasped by the people of that time. Modernistic interpretations that seek to explain away the significance of of Christ's titles as the 'Son of God' and the 'Word of God' fail to realize that there was no doubt about their meaning in the minds of the Jewish and pagan peoples who heard them.

"We must keep to the meaning of God as understood then and there will be no difficulty in grasping the significance of the 'Son of God'. In fact, that title of Jesus was the one which made the Hebrew people regard him as a blasphemer. They had cherished a great monotheistic tradition, and any attempt to change that conception alarmed them. It was the fact that Jesus continually insisted on this divine paternity, and not that He was the Messiah, which brought Him persecution.

"The eye-witnesses of the work of Jesus were sincere men and honest historians, and to understand Christ we must approach the facts about Him as sincere historians ourselves. We cannot be prejudiced before we start to investigate. Nor can we reject anything that may appear to be incomprehensible to us. When facts are attested to and we cannot completely understand them, the result should not be to disparage their authenticity, but rather to realize that we are confronted by a stupendous mystery. Here we must use faith and not seek to understand the mysterious."

Meeting of Bishops.

Fifty of the diocesan and missionary bishops in the United States have been called by the Presiding Bishop to meet in Kansas City, Mo., April 18, to consider important problems of the missionary work of the Church in Continental United States, in advance of General Convention. Methods of financing the missionary work, the question of the representation of missionary districts in General Convention, and the general relation of missionary districts to self-supporting dioceses of the Church will be among the questions discussed. The findings of the conference will be reported to the National Council at its spring meeting in New York, April 25-26, and thence passed on, with recommendations, to the General Convention at Washington. The conference grows out of a suggestion made by the Evaluation Committee that all missionary work, whether in purely missionary districts or in self-supporting dioceses receiving missionary aid, shall be considered on its merits after a careful survey of the field.

Church Witness To The Life of Faith.

The latter part of January in Philadelphia a few clergymen met and under God launched a movement to foster and promote the deeper spiritual life in our Church along the lines of the Keswick teaching in England. The Church Witness To The Life of Faith was the name chosen as describing what the movement stands for. A Conference under this head is to be held in All Saints' Church, Richmond, Va., the Rev. J. Y. Downman, D. D., rector, March 11-18. Services will be held at five P. M. and eight P. M. daily except Saturday. The Rev. Canon F. E. Howitt, the Rev. Canon Osborne Troop, the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, the Rev. Frank Cox, and the Rev. Earle Lier will be the speakers.

Those who attend are assured a feast of Scriptural exposition and spiritual addresses of a high order. If you want to know more of the sufficiency of Christ to keep from sin and how to enter into a life of victory come and bring your friends.

Youthful Crusader.

A beautiful memorial window has been placed in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia, by Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Randolph Williams in honor of their son, John Langbourne Williams, who died in Richmond in 1918 during the "flu" epidemic. The window was erected last week and was viewed by the congregation for the first time at the service Sunday morning.

The window, which is by Lamb, of New York, depicts the youthful Crusader kneeling before an angel to receive the crown of glory. It is in harmonious keeping with all the other lovely windows that make St. Paul's one of the most beautiful churches in the country.

There was no special service of unveiling on Sunday, but the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector, in his sermon, referred to the beauty and appropriateness of this memorial.

He expressed his pleasure that there should be placed in St. Paul's, along with all the other memorials which honor the names and service of men famous and loved in the South, this tribute to youth, and he felt that young men and young women everywhere would feel a stimulating thrill when they came to view it.

John Langbourne Williams died when he had only reached the sixteenth year of his life. But he had already shown, said Dr. Tucker, qualities of leadership that made him stand out from his fellows. During the "flu" epidemic he joined with other Richmond Boy Scouts in rendering unselfish and effective service. While thus engaged in helping others he was stricken with the malady and succumbed to it.

The inscription on the window is as follows:

IN MEMORIAM

August 9, 1903—John Langbourne Williams—Oct. 16, 1918
Beloved Son of Edmund Randolph and Maude Stokes Williams

"Greater love hath no man than this he lay down his life for his friend."

On both sides of the inscription the Scouts insignia is outlined.

Miss Eveline C. Carey.

The mountain mission work of this diocese has suffered a severe loss in the death on February 21 of Miss Eveline C. Carey, for the past fifteen years the woman worker at St. John the Baptist Chapel in Ivy Parish, Albemarle County. She was buried in the church yard of St. John the Baptist Chapel, the service being conducted by the Ven. F. W. Neve, D. D., the Archdeacon of the Mountain Work, and the Rev. Clayton Torrence, of McIlhany Parish.

Miss Carey was born in England and came to Virginia to take a temporary position as woman worker at St. John the Baptist Chapel, but the work took so deep a hold upon her and she upon it that she gave her life to its upbuilding. Miss Carey's life has been a blessed influence for good throughout the mountain sides upon which her people lived. They looked upon her as a loving friend, their nurse when any were ill, their teacher and trainer in the services of religion and adviser in any question that arose.

At her funeral there was music sung by her choir of mountain boys and girls, men and women whom she had trained; there was a young man from the Seminary who came to do honor to the woman whose influence in his life had put him where he was. The nurse who gave her skilled care during those few days of desperate illness was a mountain girl who, through Miss Carey's influence, was moved to seek an education and to train as a nurse at the University Hospital. Truly, this woman's works do follow her."

The E. W. Moore Bible Class of St. John's Church, Richmond, at present has a membership of ninety-seven. For next Sunday its goal is one hundred, which will make this the second largest Episcopal Bible Class in the city. The class meets every Sunday at 9:45 A. M. The officers are: Henry Moltz, President; J. Joseph May, Secretary, and W. A. Powell, Teacher.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

New Church Building, St. John's, Lynchburg.

There was a beautiful service in a beautiful church, when, on Sunday morning, February 19, the rector and congregation of St. John's, Lynchburg, celebrated the formal opening of their new building, which had just been completed. The congregation was so large it was necessary to place a row of chairs in each aisle.

The choir of forty voices was led by Mr. George Purnell Gunn, who carried a processional cross given in memory of his father, the Rev. Sterling Gunn, a clergyman of the church.

The service was in charge of the rector of St. John's, the Rev. Thomas Moore Browne. Mr. George Gunn, who is a ministerial student at Virginia Seminary, led in the reading of the Psalter. The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, rector of St. John's Church at Roanoke, read the lessons.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. George Floyd Rogers, former rector of St. John's, Lynchburg, and now of Asheville, N. C. He took as his text that stirring statement of St. Paul: "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision", and applied this to the devoted and untiring labor of the people of St. John's, which has now been crowned with success.

St. John's Church is located in the "Rivermont" section of Lynchburg, scarcely more than a block from Randolph-Macon Woman's College. The congregation was organized in November, 1911, being made up of members of St. Paul's and Grace Churches living in that part of the city. The Rev. George Floyd Rogers, then at Emmanuel Church, Covington, Virginia, was called as the first rector of St. John's and took up the work there in February, 1912. One of the compelling reasons for placing a church at that point was in order to care for the very large number of Episcopal students attending Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

The congregation erected at that time such a building as their means would permit, intending that ultimately this would be the parish house connected with the church to be built later on. The seating capacity of the first building was taxed from the beginning and it was considerably enlarged in 1919.

In August, 1922, the Rev. Mr. Rogers accepted a call to St. Peter's Church, Charlotte, N. C., and the following November the Rev. Mr. Browne came to St. John's.

Work on the new church was begun March 13, 1927. It is of brick, Village-Gothic type with a seating capacity of about six hundred and the cost was approximately $87,000.

Seven years ago a beautiful window, depicting "The Lord's Supper", was given to St. John's in memory of the late Mr. R. G. Scott and placed within the reredos just above the altar. This window, the reredos and the altar (the last a memorial to Miss Channing Goode) were brought from the old building and reinstalled in the new, as was also the baptismal font, which had been given by Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Winfree in memory of their infant child. Rising above the reredos in the new church is an exceptionally handsome window, showing "The Resurrection". This is the work of Messrs. J. and R. Lamb of New York, and is given by Mrs. Sidney M. Lloyd in memory of her father and brother. The pulpit, of beautiful design and workmanship, executed by Adams Brothers, Paynes Company of Lynchburg, is a memorial given by Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Barger in memory of their son, Howard Barger, who was killed during the World War.

In the course of his remarks on the history of the congregation and the building of the new church, the Rev. Mr. Browne paid tribute to the splendid cooperation and excellent work of the architect, Mr. S. S. Johnson, and the contractor, Mr. W. K. Barger, and their associates.

Sunday evening a community service was held in the new church, and the congregations of Rivermont Avenue Methodist Church and Holy Trinity Lutheran Church were guests; the Rev. P. M. Hank, pastor of the Methodist Church, preached the sermon.

Memorial for St. Paul's Church, Suffolk.

A memorial of unusual design, and exquisite workmanship, in the form of a case for communion linen, vestments and altar hangings has been given to St. Paul's Church, Suffolk, by Mrs. A. S. Eley, in memory of her husband, the late A. S. Eley, who was junior warden and treasurer of this church for many years.

This gift, which has been placed in the vestry room bears this inscription:

"In memory of A. S. Eley, Junior Warden. He served this church with wise fidelity."

It is most fitting that a memorial to this servant of God, should be both a thing of beauty and serviceable, in the highest degree, for Mr. Eley gave of his time, and of his means, not only to make the church a worthy one for worship, but he was also ever mindful of the material needs, and met every need with splendid generosity.

Church Army.

Captain B. F. Mountford, head of the Church Army in this country, has just completed a very successful Mission in the Diocese of East Carolina, in St. Peter's Parish, Washington, the Rev. Stephen Gardner, rector. He was assisted in this Mission by Captain Archie Buchanan, also of the Church Army.

This was the first invasion of the South by members of the Church Army. Other members of the Church Army worked at the same time in Calvary Parish, Tarboro, the Rev. Bertram Brown, rector. After a very successful Mission there, these Missioners went to Wilmington, North Carolina, and from there they expected to go to Columbia, South Carolina.

Captain Mountford and his colleagues made a profound impression upon the people of Washington and of other places in the Carolinas. Expressions on all sides were made that the newly-organized branch of the Church Army in the United States might thrive and prosper.

Following a dinner at the Bourse the initiation of the new group in Philadelphia's Northeast took place at Frankford Library by "Padre" Sawbridge, one of the founders of the English "Toc H". Dr. Edward B. Krumbhaar, of the University of Pennsylvania, made an address and Mr. Jennings presented the new group with "The Lamp of Maintenance".

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Services.

"Inter-Parochial," "united" and even "inter-denominational" are the words to describe the largest Lenten congregations hereabouts this year. Some of the successful efforts along this line last year are being repeated and new ventures are being made, apparently with success.

At the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, the first of the "united" services for the parishes of Queens and Nassau Counties was held Tuesday evening, February 28. There was a congregation of more than five hundred, and many of the parishes of the two counties were represented. Thirteen of the clergy were in the chancel. The cathedral choir was augmented by about twenty men from the surrounding parishes, who had come together for supper and practice before service. The congregational singing was especially fine. Bishop Stires preached a characteristic stirring sermon on "Choices" from the text, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve".

At the first of the "Hill Zone" interparochial services in Brooklyn, upwards of five hundred were in attendance. The place was the Church of the Incarnation, and the preacher was the Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts. His theme was "I believe in the Forgiveness of Sins", and the sermon, though brief, was described as one of the best that have been heard in Brooklyn in years. The music by the choir of the parish was unusually good, and the anthem, by an "undesigned coincidence", was on the very theme of the Bishop's sermon. In the chancel were four of the five rectors of the participating parishes: the Rev. Messrs. A. W. E. Caperington, of the Church of the Incarnation; W. Jusserand De Forest, of St. James'; J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., of St. Mary's, and Rush R. Sloane, of St. Luke's.

The Lenten "week of prayer" under the auspices of the Bedford Ministers' Association, which brought together large congregations last year, is being repeated. The first service was at Kismet Temple last Sunday night, and Dr. Cadman preached. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights the services were at the March Avenue Baptist Church. On Wednesday night the Ven. Charles G. Clarke, Archdeacon of Brooklyn, was the preacher. The series concludes on Friday night at the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, when Bishop Stires will preach. Eighteen congregations of various denominations are participating. The offerings are to be divided among certain charitable institutions in the vicinity.

The two short Lenten "Retreats", which for several years have been held at St. Paul's, Clinton Street, Brooklyn, are to be held again this year. The retreat for women will be on Friday, March 30, beginning with mass at 9:30 and continuing through the day. The conductor will be the rector of the parish, the Rev. Granville M. Williams, S. S. J. E. The retreat for men will be held on Saturday, March 3, from 5 P. M. until 9. It will be conducted by the Rev. Spence Burton, head of the American Congregation of the Society of St. John the Evangelist.

The four o'clock Sunday vespers at St. Paul's during Lent will be enriched with appropriate music instead of an address. Harold Moore's "The Darkest Hour" and Rhineberger's "Stabat Mater" will be sung, and also, on Passion Sunday, Sir Henry J. Wood's "The Passion According to St. Matthew". It is believed that this work has not yet been sung in this country, though it has been used for several years in England.

Large Confirmation at the Cathedral.

Ninety-three candidates were recently confirmed at the Cathedral. Four were from the House of St. Giles the Cripple, eight from St. Paul's School, twelve from St. Mary's School, and sixty-nine from the cathedral parish.

The Rev. Henry Lubeck, D. D., is giving a series of addresses at the Cathedral on Wednesday evenings in Lent on the Life of Christ. More than a hundred attended the first one. The Rev. Dr. Lubeck and Mrs. Lubeck lately presented to the Cathedral a beautiful bronze crucifix, which had been given them in Europe. It has been hung in the crypt-chapel, near the pulpit-lectern.

Professor Easton on the Synoptic Gospels.

At the fiftieth anniversary meeting of the Clericus of Queens and Nassau, held at Christ Church Rectory, Manhasset, on February 9, the Rev. Burton Scott Easton, S. T. D., professor of New Testament Interpretation at the General Theological Seminary, spoke on the subject, "The Modern Use of the Synoptic Gospels". He dwelt on the difficulty if not impossibility of making a chronological order of the incidents recorded in the synoptics, and regretted that so much time has been put upon the preparation of "journies of Christ" as though such a chronology were given. He hoped that some one would prepare a series of lessons from the synoptics, arranged topically rather than chronologically; for this, he said, is the method of the synoptists.

Bishop Tyler Makes More Friends.

Bishop Tyler and his charming wife are continuing to make friends of the people of the Diocese of Long Island. Their visit in our parts will be long remembered. On a recent Sunday evening Bishop Tyler spoke in the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, at a service conducted entirely by the young people of that parish, one of those officiating being a recent graduate of the Bishop's School for Lay Readers. On Tuesday afternoon, February 28, Bishop Tyler addressed an unusually large gathering of women in St. George's Church, Brooklyn. At a recent diocesan meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary he spoke most eloquently on his work for the Indians in his jurisdiction. Mrs. Tyler has become almost as well known as the Bishop, for she usually accompanies him and has been heard in addresses to women.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Executive Council.

At the quarterly meeting of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Georgia held recently, it was reported by the Bishop that the diocese has paid in full its budget quota of $10,800 for 1927, but that on the Diocesan Program of $33,455 for 1928, the pledges to the date of the meeting amounted to only $26,048, with several missions and one large parish to hear from. A resolution was passed by the Council that the Bishop and two members be appointed to select a group of laymen to go out from the Council into parishes which have failed by a considerable amount to pledge their quotas. The Executive Secretary of the Field Department offered a resolution to the effect that at a date and place to be set by the Bishop and the Executive Secretary, there be held a Diocesan Conference of Parish Chairman in the interest of the Church's Program for 1928, and at the same time a separate conference of the clergy for the same purpose, also that there be held one joint conference of both laity and clergy to receive and discuss their respective findings. It was also presented by the Executive Secretary that it is desirable to have an active missionary to present the Church's work to the parishes in the autumn.

The Department of Religious Education reported it had been unable to procure a site for the Camp on St. Simon's Island, where it had been decided to erect a permanent building for diocesan conferences, but that plans are being made to hold a camp of a smaller number of young people than last year, due to lack of space, and that immediately following the camp for young people there will be held a teacher training institute.

The Vice-Chairmen of all Departments with the Diocesan President of the Woman's Auxiliary were appointed a committee to act with the Bishop to arrange the program for the Diocesan Convention, which is to be held at St. John's Church, Savannah, April 18 and 19. The evening before the opening of the Convention will be devoted to a program to be presented by the Department of Religious Education.

Meeting of the Albany Archdeaconry.

A meeting of the Albany Archdeaconry of this diocese was held a short time ago in St. Andrew's Church, Douglas, where for two days the clergy in that section of the diocese met for discussion and to hold services. On the opening night one of the new ministers in the diocese, the Rev. Arthur D. Caslor, Vicar of Christ Church, Cordele, preached on "The Hope and Future of the Church." Visits to the schools of Douglas were made the next morning before a Celebration of the Holy Communion and at that service the sermon was preached by the Rev. H. Scott-Smith, of Bainbridge. A visiting minister of the diocese, the Rev. John Chipman, of Bainbridge, gave the book review on "A Church Awake", following the service, and in the afternoon Mr. Heyward Burnett, Jr., of Waycross, Diocesan President of the Young People's Service League, presented his organization. The Young People's Hour which followed was conducted by the Rev. Harry S. Cobey, of St. Paul's Church, Albany. At the evening service a sermon was preached by another new minister in the diocese, the Rev. Francis J. Wilson, of Hawkinsville. On the following morning the schools were again visited, and at the Bible Study in the church, which followed the reading of the Litany, the Rev. Robb White, Jr., was the leader. At the conclusion of this session a business meeting was held, and in the afternoon a Thesis on "The Gift of Faith" was read by the Rev. J. J. Cornish, of Valdosta. Later in the afternoon the jail was visited, and at the service of Evening Prayer which concluded the sessions, the sermon was preached by the Bishop of the Diocese.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Church Army.

Three evangelists of the Church Army England have been visiting the Diocese of Upper South Carolina. They are Captains Sinfield, Atkinson and Abraham. They conducted services at St. Paul's, Graniteville, from Ash Wednesday to the First Sunday in Lent. This is the center of a group of missions in the cotton mill villages in the Horsecreek Valley. On account of the weather the attendance was not encouraging at first, but grew steadily to the end of the visit.

During the following week these same men were active in Columbia, their work centering at the Church of the Good Shepherd, the Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, rector. In addition to two daily services in the church, there was a daily noon-day service for men in the Rivoli Theatre. The men also spoke before the student bodies of the State University, Chicora College for Women, and Benedict College for Negroes.

The Church Army has won approval in the diocese through the devout, practical, earnest, and joyous service of these trained men.

The Golden Rule.

Martha S. Lippincott.

The Golden Rule if lived by all,
Would make life fair indeed'
And men would realize' at last,
ife gave all they would need;
Then poverty and sin would flee
When men would do the right,
And have the conscience guided by The Heavenly Father's light.

A world of blissful happiness
Would soon be realized,
And rights of others than ourselves
Would, by mankind, be prized.
The rule of love would soon transform
The world to one of bliss;
Then why should we, through selfishness,
Life's greatest pleasures, miss?

First Love Affairs.

Minerva Hunter.

The kitchen door opened and Betty came in and sat down. Aunt Mary looked up from the new potatoes she was scraping and asked, "Have you time to shell some peas for me, Betty"?

Betty nodded.

Aunt Mary got the peas and returned to the potatoes.

"Jack wants to go with me again," Betty volunteered.

Aunt Mary gave a non-committal grunt. Betty's mother had told her this. Betty's mother always scented out her daughter's love affairs, though Betty never told her much. Betty talked freely with Aunt Mary and well she might, for Aunt Mary never told mother or daughter that the other had confided in her.

"When we fell out last winter," Betty continued, "I thought I never could get over it. If it had not been for you, Aunt Mary, I do not believe I could have. I thought Jack the most wonderful boy I ever met. There were weeks and weeks when the sight of a boy at all like him made me want to cry. I know this sounds silly."

"Not at all silly!" Aunt Mary declared warmly. "Your feelings were perfectly natural."

"After awhile I was able to do as you suggested: Hunt for the lesson I could learn by having cared for Jack. I found I had learned several valuable lessons and now I believe I have learned something more." Betty paused thoughtfully.

Aunt Mary did not ask what the "something more" was.

"I never suspected I had stopped caring for Jack," Betty said softly, "until he wanted to take me to the ball game at Benton last Friday. I had been looking at him that very morning and feeling sorry about all that had happened and hoping we might be friendly again some day. I determined I would use all my newly-learned lessons to make us happier if we ever should be friends again. When he caught up with me on the way home from school I began right away being just as nice as I knew how, but in some way I did not feel the same toward Jack. Oh! he is all right, but I used to think I liked him a lot. Am I fickle?"

"No, indeed! You are not fickle!"

"I seem fickle."

"Don't you bother," Aunt Mary consoled. "You must look around quite a bit and go with lots of nice boys. How can you know their faults and their good qualities and choose wisely if you go with just one boy all the time?"

"But I thought I loved Jack. Loved him, loved him— You know what I mean."

"Yes, I know what you mean. I know you feel fickle in finding that you no longer care for him as you once did, but Betty, aren't you glad you learned that you do not care for him now while you are still in school? Suppose you had not learned until much later. Suppose, say, you had married him and then found out you did not care for him. Hadn't you much rather find out now?"

"It would be awful for my feelings to change toward my husband as they have changed toward Jack."

"Then, dear, put your thought on being thankful that you have made the discovery, and not later."

"I am thankful for myself. Jack is terribly distressed."

"When Jack has had time to think it over, he will be as thankful as you are. Don't you think so?"

"Yes, Aunt Mary, I am sure he will."

"Then the present unhappiness will, in time, be a great blessing. Many unhappy experiences can be endured calmly when one realizes that from them some good will come for future use."

For several minutes there was silence, then Betty looked up shyly. "I like Harris Weaver," she announced almost in a whisper.

Aunt Mary smiled.

"I am going to try not to be too fond of him," Betty said sagely. "I am going to try to be just a good friend and have good times with him. The more I like a boy, the more unhappy I am when we disagree."

Aunt Mary nodded. There was an understanding light in her eyes that Betty saw plainly.

Betty jumped up and threw her arms around her aunt's neck. "Harris is just grand!" she exclaimed with enthusiasm. "You should see him on the athletic field! He sings wonderfully! He is going to take me to the concert tonight. I must go now and get ready."

"Bring Harris here some time," Aunt Mary called as Betty paused at the door.

What a help to talk things over with older people when they understand.

Tin Soldier.

Charles Ballard.

When you were sleeping under the ground in Cornwall,
Little in soldier,
Did you dream sometimes

Of a smart little man in blue,
Musket on shoulder,
With twenty others just like him;

Of giant, chubby fingers that moved him about,
Marching and standing, wounded and falling?

Did you dream of a tiny tin man at rest
In the pocket of a giant soldier,
Himself with musket and uniform—
Off for France?

"Changing Views of God."

I have received a letter which evidently reflects a good deal of mental and spiritual distress. I fear I shall have to quote from it rather at length; but I cannot leave it unanswered. The opening paragraph runs:

How can we reconcile the changelessness of God with the ever-changing conceptions of Him and the manifold methods by which we are taught to worship Him? In our young days—and I am speaking of fifty years ago—we were taught by learned men, ordained ministers of Christ, that God was everywhere and especially within ourselves if we would have it so: and that our whole life should be an act of worship. Prayer was an atmosphere of the soul, and was just as efficacious offered while sweeping a room as when offered in church. Public worship was not the be-all and end-all of our religious life, but only the outward and visible sign of our acknowledgment of Him as Teacher.

Surely changing views about God need not denote any change in Him Himself. Let me offer a parallel. I was reading recently a book on astronomy. What chiefly struck me was the almost complete change, on a score of really vital points, since the publication of a very similar book, by a recognized authority, exactly twenty-one years earlier. But it is not a case of the universe having changed; it is our knowledge of it, and views about it, which have changed. So too, surely, it must be in this case. God does not change. Our views of Him may change. Or circumstances may cause us to lay special stress now on one aspect of His nature and now upon another.

I do not think that any clergyman, or indeed any instructed Christian, would teach today that public worship was the be-all and end-all of our religious life. But I do not think that either a clergyman or layman might well and wisely declare that it was today one of our chief duties, and one of the most obvious ways of helping on the Kingdom of Christ. Can any one pretend that church-going is too common, or too much honored today? Would it not be true to say that the neglect of public worship by people of all ages and of all classes is one of the worst symptoms of our religious outlook? And is it not a commonplace on the lips of most people today that they do not go to any place of worship, but they are sure they are just as good as those who do? An old friend of mine, who loved church-going, and had been a regular church-goer all his life, insisted on continuing to be regular in his attendance, even when his doctor declared that he ought not to go out in cold and foggy weather. The reason he gave me was that he wished to set an example to younger folk. Surely his was the right attitude. And if the clergy today seem to my correspondent, and to some others, to lay too much stress on the duty of church-going, surely they err, if at all, in the right direction.

So, too, in the matter of prayer. I do not deny, rather I would very strongly assert, that prayer can be fruitfully offered, no matter where we are or what we are doing. But I do not think that such prayer can or should take the place of prayer offered at regular times whether in church or in one's own home. If I go to see a friend, to consult him about some matter that is troubling me greatly, and he goes on with what he is doing, saying, "Oh, go on and say what you want to say; I can listen to you while I am doing my work", I do not think that he is treating me with much sympathy or respect. How much less can we treat God as we shall if we are doing our own work whether sweeping a room or anything else at the same time? And even if prayer could be perfectly offered while doing other things in one's own house, that would not touch the question whether church-going is or is not a duty. For we go to church not so much to pray as to worship. And worship is essentially a social thing. It is a thing we do in company with others—with other men and women, and with "angels and archangels and all the company of heaven".

I believe, if my correspondent thinks the matter out again, she will see that the duty of church-going is not overstressed by the clergy, and that it is both a duty and our highest privilege.—Canon Peter Green in "Guardian" (English).

Do Your Children Deceive You? Who Is to Blame?

By an Old-Fashioned Lady.

I knew something was the matter the moment I entered my brother-in-law's back-yard, and saw the children's faces white and scared, as they stood facing their father. What terrible thing can have happened? though I.

It was not necessary for me to inquire, for their father turned immediately and explained the situation.

"Do you see these three eggs?" asked he in an awful tone. "Well, the twins stole these, yes, actually stole these from my chicken house, and put them under the old black hen that had made a nest under the currant bushes. Think of the price of eggs, and see what they've wasted!"

As the children crept off, my brother-in-law called loudly after them, "If this happens again, remember that I'm going to give you a good tanning".

Turning to me, he added, "I never thought that I should be disgraced with such dishonest, lying children. They said at first they didn't know anything about these three eggs."

I said nothing, as I walked on out to see his prize birds. I was too busy thinking. I recalled that my nephews had confided in me how much they wanted to raise some little chickens and their father would not let them own a single one.

"We haven't a single pet, and Grandma says Father had lots of chickens when he was our age, but he won't let us raise any dear little downy chickens."

I could still see the tears that gathered in their eyes as they told me this.

"Your father's birds are so very fine," I replied. "Perhaps he'll let me give you some common little chickens for Easter."

But their father did not wish any birds on the place except his own. He had no time to build a separate pen and would not let me have it done. So the matter was dropped by us older people, but not, as it proved, by the children.

Now, as I walked beside the angry and disappointed father, I wondered whether he realized that a little time spent in fencing in a separate yard would have saved the children and him the unhappiness they were suffering. The love of chickens and of ownership, inherited from their father, had made the temptation to take the eggs greater than they could withstand. But who was really to blame for their wrong-doing?

That week-end we went to the seashore. The conductor came to collect the fare. I paid mine. My brother-in-law handed in two tickets—one for himself and one for my sister.

"How old are your boys?" asked the conductor.

"Four," immediately replied the father.

The children crowded forward to correct the mistake, but their father instantly silenced them. Their mystified faces seemed to say, "Can Father so soon have forgotten our birthday cake with the six candles?"

When Cousin Fred met us at the station he must at once swing each child high in the air and ask their age. He always did so, no matter how often he saw his pet cousins.

"Six years old," the twins sang out. "But Father forgot, and told the conductor we were four."

Cousin Fred laughed. "Oh!" he said, "that was to fool the conductor, so he wouldn't have to pay for you on the train."

With widening eyes the twins gazed in silence at their father and at Cousin Fred.

Ode to the Teacher.

The Sculptor moulds his piece of plastic clay
Into the beauteous form his soul has caught,
In vision bright, that came perchange
unsought,
And then upon the marble day by day
His chisel falls with neither haste nor stay,
Until at last, by skillful touches wrought,
The statue bodies forth his raptured thought,
And joy and fame his patient toil repay.

But higher still the Teacher's matchless art;
For he, beyond the Sculptor's crumbling goal,
Devotes his talen to the living soul,
And shapes in noble form the mind and heart,
With loving care, upon a God-like plan,
He boulds the image of a perfect man.

—Franklin Painter.

You, Who Forgot.

How can you sing at Eastertide,
These gladsome songs of praise,
You, who forgot to walk with Him,
These lonely forty days?

How can you say He rose, that time
And reigns again on high—
You, who forgot to weep with Him,
And did not see Him die?

If Toys Could Talk.

I used to be a choo choo train
  Upon a nice new track.
But a little boy grew tired of me,
  And threw me on a rack.

I fell down in a corner,
  And broke off one of my wheels.
If you've never been a choo choo train.
  You don't know how that feels.

I stayed there 'till the paint rubbed off;
  My body got quite rusty;
And never would I have believed
  That I could get so dusty.

The Boy Scouts took me to a hall,
  There I was scrubbed and painted;
And when I learned I was a Christmas gift
  Do you know I almost fainted.

They took me to a little boy
  Whom Santa might not see;
And I made him just as happy
  As a little boy can be.

An Eskimo Party.

Leonard and Lucy had been promised a joint birthday party, but the very week before the great day their house was so damaged by smoke and fire that they were forced to live in two rooms until the rest could be cleaned. The children were sure the party would have to be postponed, and it would not be like a birthday party at all to wait till spring, for they had always had the Christmas tree redecorated and filled with gifts and winter games; and now it would be months before there would be room in the house for a big party, and the Christmas tree had been thrown out by the firemen as they worked to put out the blaze.

"How would you like to go to Aunt Helen's to spend the night?" asked their mother on the sixth of January, the day before the party was usually held. "You need not get home until two in the afternoon."

"It will be all right," said Lucy, though she did not look very happy.

"Since we can't have our party, it will be better than nothing," said Leonard.

That night something happened, and when passers-by looked into the big yard next morning they blinked their eyes in the sunlight and looked a second time, for there, like a big white snowball, was a mound of snow with a queer hole in one side. It looked almost like a small house, or a fort like the big boys make.

It was two-thirty in the afternoon before Leonard and Lucy got home, and they were as much surprised as any one at the queer white hut. "It's a snow-house!" cried Leonard. "Like the ones Eskimos live in."

Both children rushed for the door, and when they crawled inside they found fifteen little children, all dressed in their warmest clothes, gathered about a squatty little Christmas tree, all glowing and twinkling with lights, while under the tree was a heap of little boxes that looked very much like birthday gifts.

"It's an Eskimo party!" screamed the children. "Your papa and our papas made this house in the night."

So they had a glorious time playing Fox and Geese and romping in the white drifts. Then they crawled into the Eskimo house and ate the good things they found there and looked for their names on the gift boxes, just as they had always done. It was as warm as a toast in the snug little place, so they were in no hurry to go home, though it grew dark out of doors.

"I think an Eskimo party is the greatest fun of all," said Lucy when they had to go in to tea. "I'd like to have one every year."

"And the best of it is, the house will last till warm weather comes," said Leonard. "That's something the other parties never did."—Hilda Richmond in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

The Acorn in the Jar.

Bobbie and his mother were taking a long walk in the woods that afternoon. It was Saturday and Bobbie was wishing that every day was a holiday from school. "I just hate school, anyhow," he stoutly declared, "and I don't believe it does me any good to study the old books."

His mother had scarcely time to begin an explanation of the many benefits of school, when Bobbie ran from the path to pick up a handful of acorns which had fallen from a great oak.

"And does a big oak tree grow from one of these little acorns?" asked Bobbie.

"Certainly, my dear," said his mother. "Just as a big man grows from a little boy."

A few days later, in cleaning up Bobbie's room, his mother came upon a glass jar with one of the acorns in it. She asked him about it when he came from school that night.

"Well, you see," explained Bobbie, carefully, "I want one of those big oak trees, like the one in the woods, and so I put the acorn in the jar where I can watch it grow and where it will be safe."

His mother looked at him thoughtfully for a moment and then she took him in her lap. "That is not the way an oak tree grows from an acorn," she said. "It must first be planted in the warm earth, and then it must have sun and air and rain for many years before it will become such an oak as we saw in the woods. That is the law of nature, and an acorn in a jar will never become an oak. And it is just the same with a boy, as with an acorn."

"What do you mean?" broke in Bobbie.

"I mean that the boy must go to school and learn many things before he can become the right kind of a man," answered his mother. "The boy has to have the years of school just as the acorn has to have the years of warm earth and sunshine and rain. In both cases it is the law of nature, and there is no other way. Do you understand?"

"Yes, I think I do," said Bobbie, slowly. "I never thought before that we grow the same way the trees and plants do. I suppose if I didn't study and learn that I would always be like a little boy and not know things like father."

The next morning he carefully planted his acorn in the sunny corner of the garden, and then whistled cheerfully as he started off for school.—Selected.

The Best Way.

By J. L. Glover.

"Look out, there! You'll run over the girls' doll-houses," cried Billy, as Tommy came flying down the hill on his sled. Kitty and May were making an Eskimo village of snow huts right in his path.

"Ho! what does their little old village matter! This is the express; clear the track!" shouted Tommy, bearing down on the small builders, who tumbled hastily out of his way just in time, and then stood dismayed to see the destruction of their morning's work.

Kitty began to cry, and May was busy trying to comfort her. Billy was sorry for them.

"Here, I'll help you build it up again," he offered. "It was too bad. Come on; we'll soon have it as right as ever, and you won't know the difference."

Soon they were all three so busy that they forgot Tommy, until a shout made them turn and look for him. There at the bottom of the hill they spied Tommy and his sled, both in a heap on the side of the road. Billy gave one look and went on building, saying, "Turned turtle; served him right for being so mean. Let him alone."

But Kitty was on her way down the hill.

"He's hurt! We mustn't be mean just because he was," said little May, following her sister down the hill. Billy followed, too.

Tommy was sitting by the roadside nursing a badly skinned knee and elbow, and trying hard not to cry. Kitty was beside him trying to help him when the other two came up.

"I'm so sorry you got hurt, Tommy. Please don't cry," she was saying coaxingly. "We'll help you get your sled mended, and Billy will help you home, won't you, Billy?"

Billy set the sled right side up, and offered to help the wounded hero to his feet.

Tommy was ashamed; but it was too much to expect him to say so. However, when his knee and elbow had been doctored and he felt better, he came back to where the Eskimo village was growing rapidly.

"Come on! I'll give you a good ride down, and we won't run over the huts; there's plenty of room for all of us," he said.

Kitty and May scrambled on, and away went the coaster in fine style. Billy followed.—Exchange.

Prizes!

The Commission on Interracial Cooperation, with headquarters at 409 Palmer Building, Atlanta, Ga., announces the offer to American high-school students of three prizes of fifty, thirty and twenty dollars, respectively, for the three best papers on "America's Tenth Man", submitted on or before April 1, 1928. The purpose of the offer is to interest students in a brief study of the Negro's part in American history, which, according to the Commission, has been much more interesting and creditable than is generally supposed.

The Commission has prepared suggestions and data for the use of those desiring to submit papers, and invites inquiries from principals, teachers and students who may be interested.

Deaths

SAMUEL GORDON FRY.

Resolutions.

In the death of SAMUEL GORDON FRY, February 10, 1928, at Gastonia, N. C., the congregation of St. Mark's Parish has suffered a loss personal to the whole parish. Thousands in the city which he had served for many years in official capacity, have lost a personal friend and faithful public servant.

Seldom has such serenity and calmness of Christian character been sustained through the years with steadfast faithfulness to high convictions. From the time of its organization as a parish, he served as Vestryman and Junior Warden of St. Mark's Church.

Samuel Gordon Fry, born in Richmond, Va., in 1856, the son of John J. and Mary Lewis Fry, lived in Nelson County, in early manhood moving to North Carolina, and in 1907 became a resident of Gastonia, N. C., passing to his eternal rest in the seventy-second year of his age, with the love and esteem of his neighbors, his fellow citizens and his Church. He was a faithful communicant, and an active member of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Kate Banks Fry, and his three children, Miss Anne Lewis Fry, Mrs. Lewis H. Balthis, and Scott Banks Fry.

On the part of the Vestry of St. Mark's Parish, be it

Resolved, That this expression of our loss be sent to the family of the late Samuel Gordon Fry, with our prayers and sympathy for them, and our confidence that for him there is the joy and peace eternal for one whose life has been lived in Christ our Lord.

Resolved, That this memorial be sent to the Southern Churchman, and that a copy be sent to the family of Captain Fry.

MRS. GEORGE HALL GARDNER.

Resolutions.

In the call to the Higher Life, which removes from our daily contacts the radiant personality of our late President, MRS. GEORGE HALL GARDNER, the Woman's Guild of All Saints' Parish has suffered greatly.

Sensible of her many gifts of heart and head and the beautiful spirit in which she came to work amongst us, we desire to record our appreciation of her influence as our leader, of the inspiring quality of her optimism, of the helpfulness of her devotion and of the selflessness of her service in the Master's cause.

Resolved, That her contribution to the life of our organization must not be lost and that we pray that the memory of it may remain as a torch to be upheld by us and passed on in time to others.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be spread upon the Minutes of the Guild and that a copy be sent to the family of Mrs. Gardner, a copy sent to the Southern Churchman, the Virginia Churchman, and to Parish Notes.

MRS. W. R. WILLIAMS,
Acting President.
MRS. GEO. C. POWERS,
Vice-President.
MRS. JOHN DUNN,

NATHANIEL BURWELL PAGE.

Resolutions.

Whereas It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom to call our esteemed brother NATHANIEL BURWELL PAGE who departed this life on January 4, 1928, at the age of forty-five years; and

Whereas, We are grieved for the loss to our parish of one who was ever faithful in attendance upon meetings and services and loyal to its interests; be it

Resolved, That we, the vestry of Christ Church, Millwood, Va., in remembrance of "Nat Page's" many virtues and integrity of character, deeply lament his death and desire to express our sense of gratitude for the inspiration we have derived from his fine example of loyalty and service.

We direct that these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes, that they be published in the Southern Churchman and a copy be forwarded to his family.

The Rector and the Vestry.

cese of Upper South Carolina at the end of Lent. For the week of March 26-April 1, he will be at St. John's (Shandon), Columbia, the Rev. G. C. Williams, rector. During Holy Week, through Easter, Dr. Clark will conduct another mission in St. John's Church, Winnsboro, the Rev. C. B. Lucas, minister-in-charge.

The Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, Bishop of the Diocese, conducted a mission in Grace Church, Camden, during the week of February 20-26. Other missions to be conducted in the diocese during Lent are one in the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, by the Rev. Edward Bryan Andrews, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and others in Trinity, Edgefield; Our Saviour, Trenton, and St. Mark, Chester, by the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, Executive Secretary and General Missionary of the Diocese.

Summer Camp.

Kanuga Lake was selected as the place for holding the young people's summer camp this summer for the Dioceses of Upper South Carolina, South Carolina, Western North Carolina, and East Carolina, at a meeting of representatives of these dioceses held in Trinity Parish House, Columbia, S. C., on February 20. This is the outcome of a camping program initiated by the Diocese of Upper South Carolina six years ago. Later the Diocese of South Carolina came into cooperation. For the past two or three summers a few young people have come from East Carolina and Western North Carolina. This year all four dioceses join in the whole program.

The camp will continue to be called Camp Ellison Capers, in memory of the late Bishop Capers of South Carolina. It will again be for boys and girls together, fourteen years old and over. The dates are June 16-29.

Officers of the camp were elected as follows: Director, the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, Bishop of Upper South Carolina; Assistant Director and Business Manager, the Rev. I. deL. Brayshaw, rector of Grace Church, Camden, S. C.; Dean of Faculty, the Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., Chairman Department of Religious Education, Diocese of South Carolina; Camp Physician and Director of Canteen, the Rev. F. D. Dean, M. D., rector of St. Andrew's, Wrightsville, N. C.; Director of Athletics and Socials, the Rev. Capers Satterlee, rector of Holy Trinity, Clemson College; Camp Chaplain and Custodian of Camp Property, the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Chairman Department Religious Education, Diocese of Upper South Carolina.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Leicester F. Kent, of Cordova, Alaska, who was appointed to be Archdeacon of the Yukon, has resigned on account of the illness of his wife, and is coming out the last of March.

The Rev. Gordon T. Jones, assistant at St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City, Diocese of Newark, has been unanimously elected to become the rector of St. John's Church, East Mauch Chunk. Mr. Jones will take up his new work May 1, 1928.

The Rev. Amos Goddard will assist the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, rector of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., until after Easter, unless a call comes before that time to return to China. The Rev. Mr. Goddard has been a missionary in China for twenty-nine years. He was stationed at Kuikiang, China, and remained at his post until the soldiers had practically despoiled him of everything he possessed and day after day came to the residence armed with long knives demanding his life. The political situation finally became so bad that his nerves were wrecked and the Bishop demanded that he withdraw. He expects to return as soon as conditions permit.

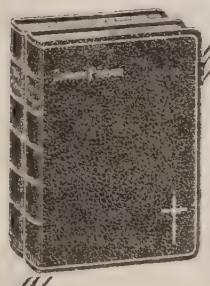
The Rev. Robert C. Topping, formerly rector of St. Stephen's Church,

Denver, Colorado, has accepted a call to become rector of Grace Church, Anderson, S. C. (U. S. C.), to take charge the middle of March. Address Anderson, S. C.

The Rev. Charles C. Durkee has resigned as rector of St. James' Church, Western Port, Md., and accepted a call as rector of Grace Church, Elkridge, Md. He entered upon his new rectorship on March 1.

Chaplain William Reese Scott, U. S. Army, who was retired January 16, 1928, and has been connected with the National Cathedral, Washington, since that date, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Doyestown, Pa., and will enter upon his duties March 8, 1928.

The Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Lexington, Va., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Mary's, Ardmore, Pa., succeeding to the vacancy caused by the death last November of the Rev. Andrew H. Haughey.



The Rev. William H. Haupt, who has been locum tenens of Grace Church, Girard and Leidy Avenues, West Philadelphia, since the Rev. John R. Huggins resigned his rectorship there to return to Holy Trinity, Rittenhouse Square, as assistant to the Rev. Dr. Tomkins, accepted a call to the rectorship of the West Philadelphia Parish to take effect March 4.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

The petition so clearly expresses the best thought of Protestant Episcopalians that we quote it in full:

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church; and

"WHEREAS, there is an organized movement within the Protestant Episcopal Church to adopt some of the doctrines and forms of worship now observed by the Roman Catholic Church; and

"WHEREAS, many of the doctrines and ceremonies observed by the Roman Catholic Church are expressly repudiated by the Articles of Religion; and—

"WHEREAS, all the Bishops and Clergy ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church have promised conformity to the Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of this Church; and

"WHEREAS, we and all the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church have sought Jesus Christ as this Church has received His life and doctrine, and have entrusted our souls to the nurture of the Church as defined in the Articles of Religion and have depended upon the Sacramental life as taught therein; and

"WHEREAS, we believe that the omission of the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer would be tantamount to their repudiation in toto by General Convention, would open the way to the teaching and practice of many doctrines and ceremonies now expressly unlawful in our Church, and would leave the laity of the Church in doubt and confusion as to the position of their Church in many matters of great moral and spiritual importance, and would cause grief and doubt and sorrow:

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

With The American Bible Society Last Year

For over one hundred and eleven years the American Bible Society has been circulating the Bible. That is its one big business. Its field is the world. And although its accomplishments have pushed forward the barriers of civilization, the remaining work but shows the darker against the bright spaces which have been illumined by the light of the Gospel story.

It is by providing the Bible in the spoken languages of the people that the Society renders to all the churches an essential service. So thoroughly is the value and necessity of its work recognized that twenty-nine of the leading denominations in the United States have united in appointing official representatives to confer with the Society and to encourage its support throughout their constituencies.

While the Society has estimated a minimum budget of $1,345,426 for 1928, from the reports received from the workers in its Home and Foreign agencies a much larger sum could be wisely used. It will, however, keep its appropriations within the estimated income.

In war-torn China the Bible is asked for as never before. A new Bible House is being built on one of the leading streets of Peking. The Bible will stay, whatever war's result to missions and their workers. Not many years ago, in Peru, a Bible worker was imprisoned for nine months for the crime of circulating the Scriptures. Now the entire country is open to the Gospel. The Society has completed fifty years work in Brazil. At the beginning, when a man bought a Bible he found it necessary to hide it. While distribution in parts of the country may still be fraught with danger, Scriptures are being circulated annually at the rate of one copy to every 140 of the population.

In Africa the chief aid of the Society had been given to translation work in co-operation with certain American missions. Bibles cannot be sent into Russia, but the Society had the privilege of giving to Russian groups of Christians a set of plates of the whole Bible, from which an edition of 25,000 copies was published. The Bible, for the first time since the Reformation, is to be published in France by a secular publishing house. This was due largely to a donation from the American Bible Society. It is almost impossible to find the Bible on sale in France, except in special bookstores. It is thought the availability of the Book will attract many new readers.

More than 65,000 copies of the Scriptures were sent, free, to the sufferers in the Mississippi flood. So many requests for Bibles with family record pages were received from these people that a special edition has been published. These also will be distributed without financial return.

Translation work during 1928 will be done in two of the American Indian dialects, in various languages of Central America and of South, East and Central Africa. Revision in some of the Philippine dialects will also be undertaken. Ten thousand dollars will be used for the purchase of new printing plates of the Bible, chiefly in foreign languages.

President Coolidge has said "that wherever the Bible goes it raises the whole standard of human relationship." If, as records show, over half the world still lives in Bibleless houses, it is imperative that Scriptures be sent to change these dwellings into Christian homes.

THE TRUE SHEPHERD.

I was wandering and weary
When my Saviour came to me
For the ways of sin grew dreary
And the world had ceased to woo me,
And I thought I heard Him say
As He came along the way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

At first I would not hearken,
And put off 'til the morrow,
But life began to darken,
And I was sick with sorrow.
And I thought I heard Him say,
As He came along the way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

At last I stopped to listen,
His voice could not deceive me,
I saw His kind eyes glisten,
So anxious to relieve me.
And I thought I heard Him say
As He came along the way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

He took me on His shoulder,
And tenderly He kissed me;
He bade my love be bolder,
And said how He had missed me,
And I am sure I heard Him say,
As He went along the way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

Strange gladness seemed to move Him
Whenever I did better,
And He coaxed me so to love Him
As if He was my debtor,
And I always heard Him say
As He went along the way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

I thought His love would weaken
As more and more He knew me,
But it burneth like a beacon,
And its heat and light go through me
And I ever hear Him say
As He goes along the way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

Let us do. then, dearest Brothers,
What will best and longest please us—
Follow not the ways of others,
But trust ourselves to Jesus;
We shall ever hear Him say,
As He goes along His way,
O! sinful soul! come near Me,
My Sheep should never fear Me,
I am the Shepherd true.

—Lines repeated by Mr. Rainsford.

TRUE VALUES

EW realize what an important part equipment and accessories play in their church and Sunday-school life. Church pews and the convenient, adaptable Sunday-school chairs show outwardly but little of the study and careful workmanship that combine to create the things of beauty that effectively minister both to comfort and convenience. We take as a matter of course the years of painstaking labor and thought with which the skillful artisan and the musician have joined forces to produce the pipe organ and the piano. But when something goes wrong we are keenly conscious of the lack of that to which we have become so accustomed as almost to consider it commonplace. The same is true of chimes and church bells, and of hundreds of other forms of church and Sunday-school equipment that serve us year after year.

And if this is true of the equipment that we are using, how much more likely are we to underestimate the value of the equipment and the accessories that we have not yet tried. It is difficult for those who have never used the stereopticon to understand the real help that this method of teaching through the eye gate may be. Not often does the teacher or superintendent fully comprehend the relief from confusion and interruption that a few well-designed sliding partitions will bring, until such facts are pointed out, and it is shown how easy they are to install in any Sunday-school. Hence the importance of keeping posted as to the latest and best in church equipment and accessories.

The advertising columns adjacent to this department will help you with many suggestions, but should you not find here that which seems to fit your problem, Church Equipment Service stands ready to put you in touch at once with experts who will give you the benefit of their experience and cooperation. ## Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"No man's conversion stops with himself."

A man's faith may be known by his faithfulness.

Life is not a goblet to be drained; it is a measure to be filled.—A. T. Hadley.

"Better be poor gold than the best gilding."

Most of our ugly spots are our own fault. Those that are not our fault cannot spoil us.—George Lawrence Parker.

The man who has never made mistakes usually has no real accomplishments to his name.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

"Come, labor on!
Who dares stand idle on the harvest plain
While around him waves the golden grain?
And to each servant does the Master say:
Go, work today!"

The one who is self-centered has his thoughts fixed upon a very small object. The way out into the larger life is given in this brief prayer of Whittier's:
"Change the dream of me and mine
To the truth of Thee and Thine."

He'll win few praises from his Lord
Who does but what he can afford.
The widow's mite to Heaven went
Because real sacrifice it meant.
Edgar Guest.

A race is never won until the goal is reached, and a life-work should cease only with the ending of this life. In neither is there any place for standing still. Thorwaldsen, the great sculptor, whose Lion of Lucerne stands as one of the high-water marks of modern art, was asked what he considered his best work. "My next," was the unfaltering answer. That life contains no place for resting was the belief of a great poet when he wrote:
"The low man seeks a little thing to do,
Sees it and does it;
The high man, with a great thing to do, pursue,
Dies ere he knows it."
Selected.

It is fortunate for us if we can remember always that God is calling us to the noble service of removing shadows, worries and stains from the lives of others. This service is not rendered in our own strength, but only as the Holy Spirit works in us and through us, for God uses human agencies to accomplish His greatest results.—Christian Observer.

Remember as you labor how the threads of life so cross and cross again that others are blest in our goodness or wounded in our faults; remember also that we weave not alone for time but for eternity. Trust the Master weaver who works in us as the shuttle flies and do not judge the pattern of your own life until the work be done. Remember that we stand behind the loom and what seems shadowed now may be, when all is finished, rich in eternal beauty.—Gaius Glenn Atkins.

OF CHRISTIAN UNITY

Ephes. 6:3, 4, 5, 6.

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling: One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

The necessity of Christian unity is so frequently and strongly enjoined on us by our blessed Saviour and His holy apostles, that it is a matter of surprise to see the generality of Christians so inattentive to it. If they ever think of it, it is, probably, under some idea in which they have been educated, or which they have caught from others, without ever comparing their sentiments with the rule of God's word, the only true standard by which to try them.

The force of prejudice imbibed in youth, and matured by education and habit, commonly holds a man in bondage all his life, at least is not likely to be overcome by those careless Christians who take their religion upon trust, and are of some particular party, because their fathers and grandfathers were so before them. They, too, who choose their religion from interest, passion, or resentment; indeed, on any other consideration, but the single one of doing the will of God—are in danger of making shipwreck of Christian unity, as well as of faith and a good conscience.

It is not uncommon to hear people talk of the necessity of union with Christ; of getting an interest in Him; and having once persuaded themselves that this union and interest are obtained, they are perfectly at ease; no thought of any obligation to unity with Christ's Church ever occurs to them. They can divide and separate at their pleasure; join sometimes one party of Christians, and sometimes another. The exercise of Christian liberty is their right; and it consists in the privilege of uniting with any religious denomination which shall please them: of continuing with them as long as their good liking continues; and, when that shall cease, of leaving them and joining any other they shall happen to like better, if such an one can be found; if not, they can set up for themselves, and form a Church upon their own principles.

Whether such vague principles will bear to be examined by sober reason and the Word of God, is a matter which deserves our consideration. Upon Christian principles, no one can be united to Christ, but through the medium of Christ's Church; and His Church is but one, called in the text One Body.

On the oneness, or unity of Christ's Church, stands the necessity of Christian unity. Could there be more churches of Christ than one, the obligation and necessity of Christian unity would be at an end; and we might be of either of them, and still be united to Christ. And, was it possible that all the discordant sects and denominations of Christians, differing in their government, doctrines, sacraments, were all parts of one Church of Christ; we might be either of them, if not with the same advantage, yet at least with a safe conscience. Let us then attend to the nature of Christ's Church according to the text; and we shall, I trust, be convinced that it can be only one.

1. Christ, the head of the Church, is but one; and, therefore, the Church which is His Body can be but one. It is against nature for the same head to have more than one body; and, it is equally against nature, for the body belonging to that head to be divided into distinct and contending portions. For though the same body may have different members, it cannot have separate parts, because whatever is separated from the body ceases to be a part of it. As therefore Christ is one—"one Lord"; so the Church, which is His Body, can be only one.

2. The same consequence will follow from that "one faith" in the "one Lord" to which all Christians are called, and which they must all hold, that they may become living members of that "one Body". This faith, though it consists of various articles, can be but one, because it stands on one ground, the truth, or Word of God; and centers in one object. Therefore it is, that the apostles speak of a "unity of the faith", as well as "of the knowledge of the Son of God"; of a "faith once delivered to the saints, for which they must earnestly contend"; of "the faith of the gospel", for which they must strive together, "in one spirit, with one mind"; of a "like", that is, of the same "precious faith"; of "the common faith", which all Christians are supposed to hold. These expressions show evidently that this faith is but one, and that whoever wants it cannot be in the unity of Christ's Church.

3. The same conclusion will follow from that "one baptism", by which we are admitted into the Church of Christ and made members of His "one Body"; and, for the due reception of which, the "one faith" is an indispensable requisite. We know of but one way of admitting men into the church, and making them members of the "One Body" of Christ, by uniting them to Him the one head of that body, and that is by the "one baptism of water and of the spirit", which He Himself hath appointed for that purpose. This baptism being but one, the Body of Christ, to which it unites us, can be but one.

4. Another reason why the Church is, and can be, but one, is, that there is but "one God and Father of all", who by His essence, "is above all", being the origin and fountain of the Divinity, and of everything that exists; by the energy of His nature is "through all", pervading and governing everything which He has made; and, by the operation of His Spirit, is "in you all", who are members of that Church of His Beloved Son; for,

5. That there is but "one body" of Christ (the holy catholic church) appears from the "one Spirit", the life-giving spirit of God, which animates that "one body". Of this Spirit every member partakes, by virtue of his union with that "one body" which is animated by this "one Spirit". As all the members of the natural body are animated by that spirit which animates the whole body, in consequence of their being members of the body, and united to it; so it is with the members of the Church: The gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit which they receive, come to them in consequence of their relation to Christ, and union with Him.

The Spirit, therefore, which animates the Church, being the Spirit of God, and but one, the Church, animated by it, must also be one.

6. The text furnishes another reason why the Church of Christ is but one; namely, the "one hope of our calling"—the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ. As this hope is but one, and common to all good Christians, so the Church which furnishes this hope, can be but one.

As, therefore, there is one Father, the fountain of the Deity; one Lord Jesus Christ, the Eternal Son of God, who is "over all God blessed for ever", the head of the Church which He hath redeemed and purchased with His blood; one Holy Spirit proceeding from the Father, by whom "the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified"; one faith in this Father, Son and Holy Spirit, to the profession, and acknowledgment of which all Christians are called; one baptism by which we profess this faith, are admitted into Christ's Church, and made partakers of that Spirit in whom our union with Christ subsists; one hope of our heavenly calling—the hope of seeing God in glory; so that the Church distinguished by these blessings and characters, depending on the One Father, governed by this One head, sanctified by this One Spirit, cemented by this One faith, washed by this One baptism, supported by this One hope, can be only one.

On this ground, as I said before, stands the unity of the Church; and from it arises the duty of every member to continue in it, and to serve God faithfully in the station to which his providence has called him, using devoutly all the means of grace and holy living, which His goodness has provided for him.

The Church, therefore, is not the institution of man, but of God; not a confused company, but a regular society founded by divine authority. It is Christ's Church, because He purchased and redeemed it with His blood. He called it out of the world, and separated it from the world, that it might be holy unto Himself; and the school of holiness to all who, being admitted unto it, would conform to its holy and divine nature. For this purpose He appointed its government; He instituted its priesthood; He ordained its sacraments; He bestowed on it His Holy Spirit; He is the author of its faith; and He gave to it the promise of eternal life. Its design is to take men out from under the sin, folly and vanity of this wicked world, to unite them to Christ, and to one another, by a new birth from the Holy Spirit of God and to train them up, in holiness and obedience, for the heavenly kingdom of their Creator, in whose "presence is the fulness of joy, and at whose right hand there is pleasure for evermore".

This being the nature and design of the Church of Christ, it must be a visible institution, and not hard to be distinguished; otherwise, it would fail of obtaining the end proposed by it. It is to be known by its government, doctrine and sacraments; where these are, as Christ ordained them, there is the Church of Christ; where these, or any of them are wanting, there the Church is not; at least, not in a sound and perfect state. What the government, faith and sacraments are, which were appointed by Christ, the Scriptures of the New Testament inform us. But, that the Scriptures may have their proper and full effect, it is necessary that the reader be free from prejudice, and disposed to receive and obey the will of Christ; that is, to believe what He hath said, and to do what He hath commanded. Where difficulties arise, the practice of the apostles, and of apostolic men in the next age after them, together with the customs of the first churches, will be the best comment to guide our inquiries.

Another property of Christ's Church in this world is, that it is catholic or universal; that is, it is not limited to any period of time, but is to continue to the end of the world; nor confined to one nation, as the Jewish Church was, but admits for its members the people of all countries and nations, as well as of all ranks, and degrees, and sexes, and ages. The world is its scene; but, as members from the whole world cannot meet in one place, for the purpose of worship and communion, the Church must necessarily be divided into different portions, each portion being a member of the one Church of Christ. Locally considered, these portions may be denominated particular churches, and take their names from the city where the bishop resides; as the Church of Jerusalem, of Antioch, of Alexandria, etc. The union of a number of these churches, under a metropolitan or archbishop, is denominated from the Country; as the Church of Egypt, of Syria, of France, of England, etc.

In the mode of their worship, in the particulars of their discipline, in their rites and ceremonies, they may differ; but, so long as they retain the government, faith, and sacraments instituted by Christ, they are parts of members of His Church; and their bishops have the right, not only of communion, but of being considered as true and valid bishops of Christ's Church, wherever they shall go.

These local churches, each under its own bishop, must again be divided into congregations, each under its proper presbyter, all subject to the bishop of the diocese. The people of the several congregations, keep up their unity with the church, by submitting to its discipline, by communion with their presbyter, and by their right of communion with every branch of the catholic Church, wherever God's providence may cast them: the clergy preserve the same unity, by their submission to their bishop, by their communion with them, and with each other. In this way, was the unity of the primitive church preserved; its government, faith, and sacraments maintained in their integrity; and its discipline duly administered. The people preserved communion with their presbyter; the presbyters with their bishop; the bishops with each other, in government, doctrine, sacraments, and councils. So that all orders and degrees of Christians may, in this way, enjoy all the means of grace and holy living, which the all gracious Head of the Church hath appointed for them; and each member of the same, in his vocation and ministry, may truly and acceptably serve God; and, "holding the faith in unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of life", may finally obtain the hope of his calling, eternal life with God in heaven.

This view of the subject necessarily supposes an union of Christians with each other, and with Christ the Head of the Church. The Church is the Body of Christ; every Christian is a member of that body, and of course is unified to every other member, and to Christ the Head. This union is effected by the operation of the Holy Spirit, who was given to the Church, in consequence of Christ's ascension into heaven: "By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body", "and have all been made to drink into one Spirit". This Spirit being from Christ, and Christ being the Head of the Church, it is evident that every Christian received the Spirit of Christ by being a member of His Church. Hence appear the guilt and danger of departing from the unity of the Church. By so doing, we separate ourselves from the body of which Christ is the Head, and whose animating principle is the Holy Spirit of God. For if we receive the Spirit, in consequence of our being members of Christ's Church; to preserve His presence with us, we must preserve union with the Church, through which we first received His heavenly influence.

The means by which we are made members of Christ, it has been observed, is Christian baptism; the requisite qualifications for which are Faith and Penitence—a belief of the mercy of God, and of the redemption of Christ; the forsaking of sin, and an earnest desire of being delivered from its power over us.

This faith and repentance spring from the influence of the Holy Spirit, which was imparted to human nature, when God said to Adam, "the seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent". By which word, a principle, or seed of salvation, a capacity of goodness was given it, making man again capable of the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, which, by the fall, were departed from Him. By baptism we receive the Holy Spirit, not only as a seed or capacity of goodness; but in a more eminent degree, as the principle of holiness, the life of our life, to bring to perfect maturity that seed of salvation, which has been sown in our hearts by the good of God.

To preserve the presence and influence of the Spirit received in baptism, we must preserve that faith and penitence which were necessary for his reception in that sacrament—a firm belief in the mercy of God, and an earnest desire that He would deliver us from all the miseries of our present sinful state—a firm belief also in Jesus the Redeemer, that He has made a full atonement for our sins, and that God has accepted that atonement, and will be merciful to our sins through Him—and, in consequence of this faith, an utter renouncing of all sin, and a ready disposition to do everything which God requires us to do. For, the Spirit of God is the spirit of holiness. All His influence tends to increase and perfect that principle or capacity of goodness, which was given to man immediately after his fall.

If, then, we receive the Holy Ghost, in virtue of our being made members of Christ's Church, it will follow that if we renounce His Church, we renounce that spirit which we received by coming into His Church; and, consequently, we renounce all that God can do for us; for all that God can do for us, must be done by and through His Spirit.

Hence appears the absurdity of the right so generally claimed by Christian professors, of forming their own Church, or of joining any party of people whom they shall please to call a church. Christ has but one Church; and if we be not in His Church, we are out of it; and, let our religion be ever so right and good in our estimation, it can have no warranted title to those privileges and blessings, which are, by divine authority, annexed to the Church of Christ.

God may look with pity on the misapprehensions of honest mistaken people; and we trust, and hope, and believe, He will not bring the errors of the head into judgment against them, where the heart is uncorrupt: Still, Christ has but one Church, and all the contrivances of man cannot make another.

If we appoint a governor of our own invention; or have mistaken the government described in the New Testament; our calling it the government of Christ's Church will not make it so. If we set up a ministry by our own authority, and call our ministers Christ's ministers, it will confer no power from Him upon them; and the sacraments they shall administer can be only our sacraments and not Christ's. Should they preach, and what they preach be true, they have no commission from Christ, and preach not by His appointment. If we wish to receive the full benefit of the government, ministry, sacraments, and faith, which Christ hath appointed for us, we must have them according to His institution, or we have no right to apply to ourselves the gracious promises He hath made to His Church—that is, we must have them according to His own commission and authority exercised in His Church.

The short of the matter is this: In the Church of Christ, we have the government, faith, sacraments, worship, and ministry or priesthood, which are by divine authority: In the use of them, we can assuredly depend on the blessings which God hath annexed to them. To this Church the Holy Spirit is given: As members of it, we receive His heavenly graces and influences, to conduct us to the hope of our calling—eternal life through Jesus the Redeemer. Out of the Church, we are sure of none of these things (because out of the Church, God hath not promised them); but we are of the World—emphatically, of this wicked World, in which we live; which is in opposition to the Church of God; the "friendship of which is enmity with God". Therefore, St. Paul writing to the Ephesians says, that before they were converted and brought into the Church, they were "aliens, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world".

In this Church there may be hypocritical and corrupt members, even as there may be diseased and vitiated members in the natural body; therefore, our Saviour compared His Church to a net cast into the sea, which gathers good and bad fishes; to a field in which tares grow with the wheat. When the net is drawn to the shore, the fishes that are wholesome for food are reserved, and the bad ones thrown away; and when the harvest is gathered, the tares are separated from the wheat and burned; so at the great harvest of the general judgment, the wicked shall be separated from the children of God in His Church, and condemned with the evil world.

Most reasonable, therefore, is the direction the apostle hath given, in the beginning of the text, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace". The unity of the Spirit can only be kept by keeping the unity of the Church, which is the body animated by it. The disposition to do so will show itself by continuing in the Church; if, by God's grace, it is our happy lot to be already in it; or by coming into it with all sincerity of heart, if it be our misfortune hitherto to have kept ourselves out of it—submitting quietly and peaceably to its government—abiding in sacraments and worship with its ministers—steadfastly holding the common faith once delivered to the saints—living in holiness and piety towards God, and in love and charity with all its members—and exercising good will and affection to all mankind.

The great bar to this conduct is a proud spirit—a high opinion of our own dignity, ability and knowledge; and more especially of our spiritual attainments. Such a person is above submission to any thing, but his own opinion; and that he claims the privilege of changing, as often as he pleases. For this reason, the author of the text recommends to the Ephesians, in the verse before it, "lowliness and meekness, with long suffering", and "forbearing one another in love"; because it is from the want of these amiable qualities, and from that only, that the One Holy Catholic Church of Christ's hath been so miserably rent and torn, as we see it at this day; insomuch, that Christian unity is little thought of, as if no mention had been ever made of it in the Bible. Most ardently, most affectionately did the blessed Redeemer, just before He was betrayed, even at that very supper when He offered Himself to the Almighty Father a willing victim for the sins of the world, pray for His apostles, and all those who should believe in Him through their work, "That they might be One"; thereby fully justifying the holy author of the text, in using His name, in exhorting the Corinthian converts to Christian unity: "I beseech you, brethren, by the Name of our Lord, Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment."

Remember, therefore, that as there "is one body", the Holy Catholic Church; and "one Spirit" which animates that body, even the Holy Spirit of God; "one hope of your calling", the hope of eternal life with God; "one Lord", Jesus Christ the Head of the Church; "one faith", on which it is founded; "one baptism", by which we are admitted into it; "one God and Father of all", who is above all, and through all, and in you all; so Christians, "being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another". They must, therefore, in all lowliness and meekness, endeavor to keep "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace", that they may attain the end of their calling, eternal life; through Jesus Christ. Amen.

BUDS

It is exactly and entirely and beautifully fitting that the time for celebration of the Resurrection comes, with us of the temperate climes, along with the calling by nature of the apparently dead to glorious and lovely new life. There is no more mystery in the departure from the life here to live again in the hidden life beyond than there is in the growing of a flower from seed or bulb or the buds or new leaves on the tree that we will see presently. The difference is that we see the one process with our mortal eyes, as generations before us, from immemorial time, have seen it, while the other we may not see, but may and do surely know. A child looking at the seed if the convolvulus cannot realize that within the shell of that tiny black seed is what in a few weeks will be the vine, climbing over porch and roof and greeting each new sunrise with varied glory. The child cannot comprehend that the acorn held lightly in its hands may produce an oak tree to tower skyward, spread strong limbs far and be living and splendid after the child and its grandchildren have lived out their times here and gone. Nor can it grasp the possibility that from that little light thing may arise the material to save a nation. From acorns came the wooden walls of England which held her secure through centuries and made her mistress of the world.

The scientist who laboriously deprives himself of instinct and the perception given us by God and diligently forces himself to black, bleak darkness by trust in what he may gather from books and figures, what he can hold in his restricted mind and see and handle and measure and weigh with scales, puts himself on exact equality with the child who has not begun to learn the plainest and clearest facts. In the body of man or woman he sees nothing but a shell, destined to disappear, sooner or later, and to end forever.

Children grow and learn. Philosophers and scientists shrivel and shrink and lose, led by vanity to renounce kinship with Divinity and welcome the degradation of equality with soulless things and vermin. Seeking to soar, they bind themselves to the grossly material. Striving to see all and to be brilliant and enlightening, they blind themselves and struggle desperately to confusion, contradictions, chaos and nothing—to Dis—the vague, dim, old heathen conception of endless storm-torn night and ever-crowding horrors.

The many of us who are neither children nor philosophers may look about us with unclouded eyes and see at this coming season light and beauty, sure fulfillment of promise and attainment of high and glorious hope. We see the seed, the bulb, the shell, put into the ground. We know they will seem to decay and that from their decay will come beauty and fragrance, nourishment to give new life to be assimilated for the far, unknown, to us indefinite future. The life of these things we plant is given them from the earth—the dirt on which we tread. Useful students and agencies with experiments, experiences and demonstrations tell us of elements and chemicals, show us effects and results, teach us to increase fertility. They cannot tell us answers to the two tremendous questions, "Why"? "How"? They cannot tell us the origin of the mysterious power of this dirt to quicken to life and reproduction a grain of wheat that has lain years on a shelf, apparently lifeless, as they cannot explain why, by power of gravitation, the larger body attracts and holds the smaller. Some of the exalted scientists prate volubly of natural laws and there halt. Assuming superior intelligence, they deny possibility of Supreme intelligence and contend that laws regulating the universe, from the infinite smallness beyond searching of the microscope to the infinity of vastness beyond the reach of the greatest telescopes, were established by chance or accident.

Pope, in his time, two centuries ago, wrote of the Indian whose untutored mind sought God in clouds and heard Him in wind, whose soul proud science had not taught to stray. So it is with us, plain, every day people of every day, living our various lives, dealing practically with practical and actual and present things and facts and problems of life. Knowing our own infirmities and weaknesses and need of help, we yearn and long and seek for help. While the pompous boasters of intellectual power grovel at the base of barriers invisible and impassible, the unlettered, the humble, the simple, the merely practical and honestly self-searching and straight-thinking, rise with the power of fervent prayer and faith to contact with the serenity, the majesty, the boundless beneficence of the Omnipotent Creator.

So we may learn and understand from what we see year after year as the spring comes, laughing and joyous, fragrant and glorious, from the cold, stern, sterile winter. Each of the endless billions of buds that will be with us soon will tell us mutely but eloquently that there is no death, that resurrection is sure and new life after the chill and years and pain and blight have been permitted to destroy the shell shall continue, and the real life shall begin. It is a noble thought that death is but the vestibule to the sanctuary. The flowers fading and the leaves falling in autumn and returning splendid in the spring give us ever recurring lesson and assurance.

Most of us will see the budding and blossoming, the beauty and splendor and then the withering and departure of the flowers and leaves, as we have seen them. They are pictures to us, if we will consider, of our own youth time, maturity and going. Some of the sweetest and loveliest and dearest must go early. Others live and linger hardily to make the world more beautiful, defying even the frost. And those living through the early weeks scatter and leave, as they go, their seeds, as all of us must give our seeds of example and word and deed for the future. Flowers and plants have no choice. They must leave behind them, when they go, according to their kind. We men and women may determine each day of our lives what seed we shall sow in other hearts, what memories we plant.

With the coming of each new spring, with the budding on the trees and the springing to new life of the flowers and grasses and plants, comes renewed promise and assurance of resurrection and ascension and new and beautiful life for those who believe and hope; new evidence that there is to be no extinction nor culmination in blank nothingness; new and solemn admonition that in our manhood and womanhood we do as we can to give beauty of thought and purpose to the world, to live through oncoming generations, as do the little humble, valiant, beautiful violets, blooming obscurely in the woods. It is not fulfillment of the purposes of our Creator, nor enough for our duty to Him to learn from the budding and growing things we will see and enjoy that we shall have life after the winter and chill and shadow. We are to learn from them, also, to do good as we can, to show beauty and purity of life even amid desert or forest surroundings, or wherever our lots may be cast, to exhale the fragrance of righteousness and leave its seeds to grow and spread and flourish and blossom when we have gone.

Subject-Title—Caiaphas and Christ.

THE MESSAGE.

4. The Consequences of the Miracle (45-47). These are stated in three paragraphs. First, there is a division of opinion (45, 46), which represents faith (45) and unbelief (46). It always has been so. When Christ passes by, you must stand on the right hand, or on the left. Second, the Sandhedrin commit themselves (47-53). There is tragic humour in what these officials said (47, 48). They admitted much, anticipated more, and argued badly; observe these three things. But Caiaphas comes to the rescue. Not for a moment must it be supposed either that Caiaphas had any sympathy with Jesus, or that he understood the full significance of what he said (50). He offered counsel which was bold and unprincipled, to this effect, that by making a victim of Jesus they might hope not only to avert a popular rising, but also to show their zeal for the honour of Caesar. Thus did he hide self-interest under the cloak of patriotism. Verse 52 is John's expansion of the meaning latent in the words of Caiaphas. The time when this Council met was a memorable day (53) in a memorable year (49, 51); and John could not forget either. Will this year be memorable because of some great failure, or some great success of yours? Third, we see both parties standing by (54-57), Jesus and His disciples at Ephraim, and the Jews at Jerusalem: it was a season of suspense. "To purify themselves" indeed (55). Remember, you do not clean your heart when you wash your hands. A pure skin is of little consequence if it covers an unclean soul. Get thee to the Fountain just now.

Subject-Title—Love and Hate.

THE MESSAGE.

As we take up this chapter for our meditation in the next three days, it will be meet for us to glance down it at once, and get a general idea of what it is about. We shall find that it is in five sections as follows: 1. Jesus and the Disciples (1-11). 2. Jesus and the Multitude (12-19). 3. Jesus and the World (20-36a). 4. John's Verdict on Jesus' Work (36b-43). 5. Jesus' Verdict on His own Work (44-50). We have two of these sections today. 1. Jesus and the Disciples (1-11). Mark these three points: (i) The Feast at Bethany (1-2). The miracle on Lazarus strikes four great notes relative to the Christian life—death, life, liberty, and fellowship (11:41-44; 12:1-2). How far have you got in this program? Remember, even where there is life there is not true fellowship where there is not liberty. Get loosed today. (ii) The Ointment and the Objection (3-8). Have you ever done anything "very costly" (3) for your Lord? If you have, I am certain that some one objected. They do not talk about "waste" when for no end beyond vainglory men and women perish in trying to fly the Atlantic, but they are loud about "waste" when for the cause of Christ at home and abroad, men and women lay down their lives! Have nothing to do with the Judas cult. If the Master endorses your action you need not mind what others say about you (7-8). (iii) Insensate Hate (9-11). All through the ages this method has been in vogue, namely, if you cannot invalidate Christian testimony, get rid of the witness: but truth has never suffered because of rack and stake. Truth must prevail; the right always wins. 2. Jesus and the Multitude (12-19). There is something sad about this welcome given to the Christ, for too soon the crown was of thorns. It is always easier to shout for Christ with the crowd than to stand alone for Him at the Cross.

THE MESSAGE.

3. Jesus and the World (20-36a, see outline yesterday). In this momentous incident are five paragraphs. (i) The Vision (20-22). In the Court of the Temple certain "proselytes of the gate" ask for and obtain an interview with Jesus. What they said is unrecorded, but we may infer what it was from Christ's answer to them. The substance of it would appear to have been—"Your own people have rejected You; we will receive You; come with us". (ii) The Reckoning (23-26). How profound is this answer, first the declaration (23), then the illustration (24), and finally the application (25, 26). Fruit is by dying not by doing: sacrifice is the secret of productiveness: this is true in the realms of the soil and of the soul. Christ applies this truth both to Himself (25) and His disciples (26). (iii) The Conflict (27-30). This is luminous if we read verses 27, 28, in this way: "What shall I say? Shall I say, 'Father, save Me from this hour'? But for this cause came I unto this hour! No, I will say, 'Father glorify Thy Name'." His rescue would have been our ruin; but His death has brought our deliverance. The Father bore witness to His Son three times, at His Baptism, on the Mount of Transfiguration, and here (28). Alas, that still so little is the Divine Voice recognized that it is thought to be a tone of nature, or perchance, an angelic sound (29). (iv) The Triumph (31-33). Verse 32 is one of the greatest in the Bible. Christ's sovereignty is by His sacrifice. "All" means, "without distinction", not "without exception". Christ is the Great magnet. Spurgeon says that He draws like a Trumpet, like a Net, like a Cord, like a Standard, and like a Chariot. Has He drawn you? (v) The Warning (34-36a). Revelation, "ye have". Apprehension, "believe". Transformation, "become", (36); that is the substance of this paragraph.

THE MESSAGE.

4. John's Verdict on Jesus' Work (36b-43; see March 19). We all, and all the time, are under the necessity of forming judgments, even if we do not pronounce verdicts. The Apostle John in this passage, and after the lapse of sixty years, records what he remembers of the effect of his Master's ministry. That effect was two-fold: "they believed not on Him" (37), and "many believed on Him" (42). There are always these issues from the preaching of the Gospel. By verse 38, we are not to imagine that these people did not believe, in order to fulfil a prophecy; but that in not believing they did in fact fulfil it. Both quotations here (38, 40) are from Isaiah, the first from the second part (chs. 40-66), and the second from the first part (1-39). Both are attributed to Isaiah. Unbelief is not compulsory but voluntary: they "could not" because they would not; their state was due to their own attitude, and not to the Divine action. It is important also to observe that "the Lord" Whom Isaiah "saw sitting upon a throne" (Isa. 6:7) was Christ (41). Mark also the poorness of these people's faith (42, 43). What do you love most? 5. Jesus' Verdict on His own Work (44-50). In verses 44-46, Jesus speaks of His Person, and of those who believe. In verses 47-50, He speaks of His Words, and of those who believe not. No one can have faith in His Person who rejects His testimony. His word shall judge us (48) who judge His word. His word comes with absolute authority. Westcott says of verse 49, "of myself"; "The phrase is peculiar and unique. It describes, so to speak, the source out of which a stream flows continually, and not simply the point of origin from which movement started". "I know . . . I speak." Every one who is speaking today does not know. When Christ speaks—listen.

Subject-Title—The Sovereignty of Service.

THE MESSAGE.

Our portion falls into four parts: The Setting of the Act (1-3); The Character of the Act (4, 5); The Significance of the Act (6-11); and The Moral of the Act (12-17). The great object of this story is to show how unchristian Christians may become Christ-like. Think first of Unchristian Christians. We learn from verse 2, that the Supper had begun, and yet the feet of the disciples had not been washed. In the East this was usually done before men sat down to eat. Why, on this occasion, was it not done? For answer see Luke 22:24-30. The disciples had been so occupied disputing who should be the greatest that even the common decencies had been neglected; and now, what they should have done for Christ, He has to do, or rather, chooses to do, for them. Think of it! Christians scrambling for places and wrangling about honours in the shadow of the Cross! Have you ever done that? Are you doing it now? Do you seek and take office in the church because of the prominence that it will give you? And do you refuse service which would leave you obscure? Now, look at the other side—Christlike Christians. How? Not by pride, but by humility; not by getting, but by giving: not by ease, but by sacrifice. The example of Christ is always offered in connection with some form of self-sacrifice. Many claim to be Christ's disciples who do not follow Him. To us all He is ever saying, "Because I did . . . ye ought to do" (14). True knowledge leads to action which begets joy: "if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (17). At the beginning (Genesis 3) man wanted to become a god; at the end, God became a Servant.

Friday, March 23—St. John 13:18-30.

Subject-Title—Judas.

THE MESSAGE.

Remember that this Record is in three main parts. We have considered—I. The Revelation of the Son to the World as Life (1:19 to 12:50). We are now considering —II. The Revelation of the Son to the Disciples as Light (13 to 17). This part of the Gospel is its very heart, and is precious beyond all estimate. The Apostle John alone records these events and sayings. The division has three sections: 1. Introduction to the Light for them (13: 1-30). 2. Impartation of the Light to them (13:31-16:33). 3. Intercession for the Light in them (17). The first of these three parts we began yesterday (13:1-17), considering the significance of the Feet Washing act. Now we are to listen to Conversations at the Supper-table (18-30). Verse 12 tells us that the Master has again taken His seat, and what He said is recorded in verses 12-17. You will observe that it is a lesson on the self-sacrifice of love, based upon the act of verses 2-11. And continuing, He intimates that there is schism in the circle, and He would have them know it before it becomes self-evident, that later on they may think of Him in the light of the forecast (18-20). Now a dark cloud comes over His spirit, and He speaks of betrayal. In answer to a question put by John at Peter's instigation, the charge is brought closer home (21-26), and still more closely when Jesus addresses Judas (27). But, we are told, the disciples did not know why Judas left the table (29-30). Judas is an utter enigma, a tragic mystery. Mercifully he did not partake of the Lord's Supper, which was instituted after he had left. The lesson should lead us to self-examination lest we become worldly-minded and betray our Lord. To you and to me He says, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life".

Subject-Title—Sad News.

THE MESSAGE.

After 1. Introduction to the Light for the Disciples (13: 1-30), is 2. Impartation of the Light to them (13:31 to 16: 33). This impartation of light is in our Lord's two discourses, one in the Upper Room (13:31 to 14:31), and the other on the way to the Garden (15:1 to 16:33). The first discourse is dialogue; the second is monologue. In the first, Jesus replies to Peter (13:36), to Thomas (14:5), to Philip (14:8), and to Jude (14:22). In today's portion the subject is, The Coming Separation. Observe here, (i) The Declaration (31-33). "Now" in verse 31, is a note of relief consequent upon the exit of Judas, and introduces a song of "glory" present and to come (the word occurs five times here). The Master talked about glory in the deepest gloom; about love in time of fiercest hate; and about joy in the hour of most poignant sorrow. That is victory. He then tells of His coming departure, introducing the painful subject with the tender—"little children". Jesus prepares His disciples for the coming change; He always was perfectly frank with them, and is with us. But beyond the sad news was good news, as we shall see. The final revelation is sunrise, not sunset. (ii) The command (34-35). In these chapters (13 to 16) there are at least 26 references to "love". This is the new, the inclusive, and the final law of life. Read and memorize 1 Cor. 13. Have we ever loved one another as He has loved us? (34). What does the world think of Christians today? (35). (iii) The Warning (36-38). Of course it is Peter who speaks first, and he does so characteristically. Peter said, "I'll die". Jesus said, "No, you'll deny". Fleshly confidence is very near to well-nigh fatal apostasy. Our safest place is lying low at our Redeemer's feet.

"O EARTH, EARTH, EARTH, HEAR THE WORD OF THE LORD!"

Canon G. Osborne Troope

THE remarkable words printed at the head of this article constitute a rousing trumpet-call to all generations of the human race. They were uttered by the prophet Jeremiah at a critical period in the history of his people. Israel had become so wholly given over to idolatry, that first the Ten Tribes of the Northern Kingdom had been carried into captivity by the King of Assyria, and now the remaining tribes of Judah and Benjamin were on the verge of the seventy years' captivity in Babylon. Their beloved city, Jerusalem, was about to be destroyed, and their magnificent Temple and its gorgeous ritual reduced to desolation. Jeremiah and the little band of the faithful were fairly overwhelmed by the godless majority; and in a very agony of appeal the cry bursts from the loyal heart of the suffering prophet: "O Earth, Earth, Earth, hear the Word of the Lord!"

The solemnity of the appeal cannot be over-estimated. It is not too much to say that the eternal destiny of every generation, and of every individual, hangs upon the response given to this heart-searching cry. It comes to us in the twentieth century of Christianity with such added responsibility of light and knowledge, as should render its appeal irresistible. In the light of our long Christian experience, we should be able to assume, as a matter of course, that wherever the Bible is known it is reverenced as the living instrument through which is conveyed to us "the Word of the Lord". Nowhere should this be more whole-heartedly true than in the case of the imperial race of the Anglo-Saxon peoples. The history of the Anglo-Saxon peoples of the British Empire and of the United States thrills with overwhelming testimony to the life-giving power of the sacred Scriptures. Our own imperial expansion begins with the translation of the Bible into English, and the freedom of the glorious Reformation. The Bible Societies of England, Scotland, and the United States have now translated the Bible, in whole or in part, into no fewer than seven hundred and thirty-five different languages. The British and Foreign Bible Society alone issued in 1924 over ten million copies of the Bible, or portions of the Bible, at home and abroad, throughout a great part of the world. These figures speak for themselves as to the unparalleled demand for the Word of God. It is by far the "best seller" in the world. No other nation of mankind can for a moment be compared with the Anglo-Saxon peoples in the translation and spread of the Holy Scriptures. England and the United States are the two greatest nations of the earth, and they owe their greatness, whether they realize it or not, to their acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Word and Spirit of the Living God.

In the light of our history we may be sure that national departure from the supremacy of the Word and Spirit of God would rob us of our greatness, and of the freedom wherewith Christ has made us free. Yet is it not seriously true that, as nations, our Empire and the United States are losing their reverence for the Living God and His Holy Word? It has been gravely stated that, of the vast population of London, seventy-five per cent have no religious affiliation of any kind whatsoever. Judge Kavanagh, of the Superior Court of Chicago, tells us that there are "unconfined in the United States more killers than we have clergymen of all denominations . . . and 52,000 more slayers at large than we have policemen".

We are thus brought to the far-reaching conclusion that it is always the faithful minority who are the saving salt of the nation, and preserve it from corruption. It is not only true of England and the United States today, but it has been true all along the line of human history. It is more particularly true in the extraordinary history of the Hebrew people, and of the Christianity that has sprung from them. It is known by all of us that, looked at from its human side, the Bible is almost entirely of Hebrew authorship and that our Lord Jesus Christ, as to His human nature, was born of a Hebrew maiden. So we owe both the Scriptures and our Incarnate Lord to the Hebrew people. The Lord Jesus Himself said to the woman at Jacob's Well: "Salvation is of the Jews."

Yet the striking, and indeed startling, fact remains that we obtained these priceless gifts in spite of the Hebrew people, rather than from them. They did not come to us from the Hebrew nation as a whole, but from the "thin red line" of Hebrew heroes, who, in the midst of an idolatrous world, and in spite of the persistent idolatry of their own nation, kept the standard flying, and handed on the flaming torch of Truth from generation to generation. One of the most convincing testimonies to the Divine Inspiration of the Scriptures is the fact, that, beyond all question, they came down to us through the marvelous faith of an always small but heroic minority. When in exact fulfillment of the Old Testament Scriptures Christ was born into the world as the Incarnate Son of God, only a handful rejoiced at His Birth, while the religious leaders of the nation terrorized Pilate, as the representative of the Gentile world, into His ultimate rejection and crucifixion.

To our equal shame and dishonor, this history of the Hebrew people has repeated itself in the history of Christendom. The Risen Lord, claiming "all authority both in heaven and on earth", commanded His followers to "preach the Gospel to every creature"; yet nineteen hundred years have passed away, and millions even now have never so much as heard the name of the world's Redeemer, who tasted death for them as really as for us. He Himself warned us of the great Enemy, who should sow "tares among the wheat". Counterfeit Christians have grown side by side with genuine believers, and our Lord's worst enemies have been "those of His own household". The real work of the Church through all the centuries has been done by the faithful but heroic minority.

In this twentieth century an astounding thing has come to pass. In the name of Modern Scholarship, the supreme authority of the Scriptures, and even of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, has been with deadly subtlety undermined. The Deity of Christ, His Virgin Birth, His Atonement on the Cross, His actual Resurrection and Ascension, are all openly denied, or philosophically explained away. A subtle atmosphere of unbelief is spreading everywhere, like a deadly poison gas. The cry of the prophet goes up more urgently than ever: "O Earth, Earth, Earth, hear the Word of the Lord!"

Not only is the Word of God undermined: it is also made of none effect by man's tradition. We all know that in Old England the battle of the Reformation is being fought over again through the inroads of Anglo-Catholic superstition. Both State and Church are in a strait between Scylla and Charybdis. The only hope lies in a sincere return of the great heart of the nation to the ancient supremacy of the Word and Spirit of God, "whose service is perfect freedom".

A significant prophecy lies hidden from general view in the Book of the prophet Amos: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the Words of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east; they shall run to and fro to seek the Word of the Lord, and shall not find it." In all sober earnestness, we should pay heed to these momentous words, lest, through the folly of our own wisdom, we should create this terrible spiritual famine in our own day. While there is yet time, let us listen to the insistent appeal of Jeremiah: "O Earth, Earth, Earth, hear the Word of the Lord!"

We have considered the strange parallel between Hebrew history and that of Christendom. Let us now turn to the remarkable relation between the Hebrew people and the Anglo-Saxon peoples of England and the United States. Everybody knows of the providential way in which England was given possession of the Holy Land and of the Holy City. Turkey declared war against us contrary to England's political and diplomatic will, and thus rendered the capture of Palestine a wholly unexpected possibility. The Divine hand brought it about. Our Lord had said of the Hebrew race: "They shall be led captive among all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden under foot of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Thus He set a limit to the oppression of the Holy City. Has not that limit been reached? It is evident that England is not treading the Holy Land and City under foot. England is there as a long-standing friend of the Jews, holding Palestine in trust, until the Divine purpose concerning the Hebrews shall be fulfilled. The Scriptures are pledged not only to the restoration of the Hebrews to their own land, which is now begun before our eyes, but also to their return as a nation, in repentance unto Life, unto our Lord Jesus Christ as their own Messiah. It is an unspeakable honor that England should have been chosen of God as the protector of His Ancient People. And it is the more remarkable that the United States should be standing with England in support of the mandate. All this sets a final seal upon the Divine Inspiration of the Holy Bible; for by far the most wonderful part of the unique history of the Hebrews lies in the undeniable fact, that that history is foretold from the call of Abraham down to our own day, and far beyond. The whole world is to be blessed through the conversion of the Hebrews to Christ. Long ago Isaiah prophesied: "In days to come Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud; and they shall find the face of the world with fruit." How wonderful that Abraham should have been told: "I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed!" England and the United States are the greatest nations of the earth today, and they are conspicuous as friends of the Hebrew people. Truly the friends of the Hebrews are the friends of God. And it is well for us that it is so; for as friends of the race of Abraham, England and the United States are already facing the veiled or open hostility of all the revolutionary forces of the world. Sooner or later we must come into collision with these hostile forces, and that collision may result in the long foretold Armageddon, of which the recent Great War was the ominous beginning.

But let us be of good cheer! Clouds and darkness are round about us, but Christ is on the Throne of the Universe, and the ultimate and eternal victory lies with Him and those who trust Him. In majestic patience He is represented as "expecting till His enemies are made His foot-stool". We know not the day nor the hour, but He is certainly and personally coming back, first for His own loyal friends to take them to Himself, and then to set up His kingdom and reign in everlasting righteousness. Once more let His sublime words be printed:

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's House are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."

DOES GOD CARE FOR HIS OWN?

Kenneth Mackenzie

WHY should I expect the Almighty to shield me from peril, while others who are as good, if not better than I am, are subjected to calamity? Who am I to claim the special care of God?" This challenging questionnaire fell from the lips of a sincere Christian minister in a recent vehement outburst of impatience as he expatiated upon the tragedies which have been sweeping over the world. It had a stunning effect upon his hearers. If there be no answer to it, we are left to a dark fatalism, which affords no room for faith and prayer; if there be an answer, it demands a clear and satisfying definition.

Reason totters on her throne as she rises to give judgment. The mystery is beyond the scope of her sovereignty. During the great war unsettled minds were interrogating, "Where is God"? "Why does He not do something"? "Is it not dangerous to believe there is a God"? We must look elsewhere than the shallow thoughts of man for the solution of the problem. We recall the simple confidence with which we lived our early years, ere the sophistries of the wise invaded our child-like faith. To renounce it now seems like spiritual murder. Our Christianity would thereby be reduced to a bare system of ethics; our daily life shadowed by a dread of the possible with no intervening hand but precarious luck to break the spell. Our theology would become a blind mechanism. We should have a corpse of hope upon which we might longingly gaze, while the putrid breath of death poisons our spiritual atmosphere. We should fear the thing we look for; while we know that if it should come, we should utterly fail to understand why. If we reduce life to this concept, we have either to crave calamities or despise ourselves if we escape them. We can no longer echo with Lowell:

> "And behind the dim unknown,
> Standeth God within the shadow,
> Keeping watch above His own."

For, if this stoicism prevail, God can do nothing of the kind. The god of fatalism has no heart for the weak and helpless; he has no care for the unprotected; it is inconsequential to him whether a man dies restfully upon his bed by simply sleeping his life away, or be torn from this life in an indescribable agony. Like the relentless Juggernaut grinding despairing humans under its bloody wheels with no sensation of pity, this god would sweep over the world in a soul-racking expedition of cruelty. The only result of such a system of thinking would be that it were better to anticipate it all ere it comes, and "to take arms against a sea of troubles and by opposing, end them".

Who wishes such a philosophy of life? The pessimism of our age is quite in accord with its ideality, if it may be deserving of such a designation. But where does pessimism land us? What does pessimism for the sufferings of mankind? Is not this very state of mind a demand that we shall despise the good things which are all about us, and get out of a world in which we are so at loggerheads? According to this code, there is no treasure in a smile; joy is an intruder and nothing is worthwhile. There is one factor, however, who would make capital out of it. He is the brute, who, whether of the refined world of crookdom or emerging from the social dregs, would fasten himself as a leech upon the helpless, with no heart for the loss and grief he may cause. We know him full well. He is his own god; the cream of the world is none too good for him. The rest may have the skimmed milk, if any.

Now, we all realize that suffering is not only the lot of mankind, but is in the divine order. Job gave witness to this (Job 14:1). Our Lord allowed that offences must come (Matt. 18:7); and He assured His disciples that in this world they should have tribulation (John 16:33); while the apostles themselves give testimony to the fact (Acts 14:22; Rom. 5:3; 1 Cor. 4:9-13; 2 Cor. 4:7-12; Gal. 6:14; Eph. 6:10-16; Phil. 1:27-30; Col. 1:24; 1 Thess. 3:1-3; 2 Thess. 3:1-3; 1 Tim. 4:10; 2 Tim. 2:12; Heb. 12:4-10; James 1:2-4; 1 Peter 1:6-9; Jude 20:25; Rev. 2:10; 3:10).

The real challenge then, is not to a dead fatalism, nor yet the vagaries of chance; but a definite grasp of the value of suffering as a disciplinary agent in the perfection of Christian character (Lam. 3:31-33; Heb. 12:11); but higher still as the medium by which God may be afforded opportunity to enter our lives and make them the sphere of His benign operations.

So, we approach the discussion by the only door that has ever opened to us, the Word of God. The Scriptures assure us that our Lord has loving designs towards the erring, if they will admit Him to their lives. There comes to us the ringing assurance through Jeremiah to the sorrowing captives in Babylon, "I know the thoughts that I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you an end and expectation" (Jer. 29:11). How wondrously does our Redeemer unveil the heart of the Father in the memorable parables of Luke 15. His face must have glowed as thus answered the petulant condemnation of His accusers, "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them". What if we could have seen His countenance and heard His marvelous declaration, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth"!

We know that a part of His mission was the distinct purpose to bring His Father into the closest relations with mankind. The people of Israel had regarded God as Father, but in a national sense only. We shall find, if we look, about twenty allusions to this in the Old Testament; we may count over one hundred in the Gospel of St. John, where the relation of the individual to the Father is indicated alone. And after He had taught His disciples to pray, "Our Father", and in many other instances disclosed this supreme quality of love and care for the believer, He climaxed His ministry by the resurrection assurance, to Mary Magdalen, "Go to my brethren and say unto them, 'I ascend to my Father and your Father; to my God and your God' " (John 20:17).

Granted then, that we have the authority to think of God as a Father, personal to every child of God by faith in Jesus, the Son of God, we have a premise from which the syllogism may flow in smooth order. The reason why He thus unfolded the deep mystery of the Fatherhood through the indwelling of His Holy Spirit was two-fold: First, He would assure men that the God they had dreaded was a gross misconception; then having such joy in His own Sonship, His glad heart yearned to have others enter into His felicity.

What now will this loving Father do for the children of the household, as He beholds before Him (Heb. 9:24) the Son of His love? Will He leave them to the stern exigencies of an unalterable fate? Must they shift for themselves and come out as best they may in the hard battle of life? Is there no sweet commerce of love between Him and them, whereby He unfolds to them the secret of His heart (Ps. 25:14)? Shall they be debarred from telling Him their trials and thanking Him for gifts acknowledged? And is not life eternal that they may know Him (John 17:3)? And how can they know Him if they never commune with Him as His own?

Certainly we agree with the impetuous minister whose scorching declaration is the ground of our discussion, that he is not better than others. No really born-again man can entertain such a thought of himself. This is not a question of merit, but what God longs to do for His needy, suffering and exposed children. How can He show His love if He be denied the privilege of making them the objects of His solicitude? The protest from one prospective, that He sends His rain upon the just and the unjust (Matt. 5:45) leaves no room for an uncommon ministry. Our Lord did not design to teach this in the words expressed. The rather, to show the largeness of the compassion of God towards all mankind. But the challenge of the entire Sermon on the Mount is to His own, for the consideration of the finiteness of the infinite God in relation to the believing soul. And we may fear that many Christians have the other aggregated concept of God as Father. They would take their place in the mass. They cannot be persuaded that in their individual lives He can have anything but the universal care for humanity, which they share with the race at large. A special divine intervention on their behalf would frighten them; they would rather have a God afar off than near at hand. So they saw their conventional prayers as a pious habit; but have not the least expectation of any personal application of such petitions to themselves.

But the very thing they evade is what He wants them to possess. So minute is His knowledge of us and His cherishing, that our needs are already known to Him ere we ask (Matt. 6:32); the very hairs of our head are known in number by Him, so deep is His scrutiny of us (Matt. 10:30); He reads our very thoughts (Ps. 139: 4, 23). Why not meet the situation by a full surrender to Him for all He can do in the outworking of His good plan for us (Phil. 2:13; Eph. 2:10; Heb. 13:20, 21)?

Looking at the matter from a coldly speculative point of view, we allow that the divine permissibility which enriches mankind by the shining of the sun upon the evil and the good, admits as well, the inclusion of good with the evil in times of tragedy. Where such conditions exist, the exception, not the rule, prevails. In our sorrows we forget our blessings; but the latter, we know, far outnumber the former. So that as a basis of living, we may maintain that the apostolic standard becomes us or we are not worthy of the name we bear, "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God" (Phil. 4:6). This, let us note, not for our selfish ends alone, but in the recognition that if we refuse to do so, we wound His heart (Rom. 14:23) by our unbelief; and sunder the chain that He has ordained should link us to Himself.

The life that is dominated by the Holy Spirit will be certain to grasp this profound truth. Unbelievable as it is to the intellectually schooled, who scan the vast universe and contend that it is impossible for such a Deity to have even a knowledge of the ills, the aches, the pains and perplexities of frail mortals, we may hold tenaciously to our Lord's assurance that we are wrapped in the bundle of love with Himself (John 17:26; Eph. 1:6); and are thus the intimate objects of His Father's care and protection. This, not because we are essentially good. We simply accept the generous terms of our redemption and by our faith give pleasure to Him who has made us "partakers of the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4) and in His dear Son (Col. 1:13) one with Himself (John 17:21, 22).

The gracious mission of the Holy Spirit is to draw and hold us close to God by the bond of His solicitude and our responsive dependence upon Him. Thus again, let us plead, if by self-will we alienate ourselves from this fellowship, or utterly fail ever to enter it, we bring disappointment and grief to His heart. Sad is it to contemplate that myriads of His children are evoking from Him the lamentation over Jerusalem. How often would I . . . and ye would not" (Matt. 23:37-39). Ours is the part to atone for this deplorable lack in His joy, by a dedication in holy confidence, gendered by His good Word and its numberless promises, to satisfy the yearning of His great love to keep and bless.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

By the Right Reverend William A. Guerry, D. D.

THE statement has been made that "there is no essential connection between the Virgin Birth and the Incarnation". If this be true, then the sooner the Church removes this article from her creeds the better. Nothing touching the fundamental facts of the Incarnation should be retained in a creed required to be believed by all persons who come to Holy Baptism or Confirmation, unless it has a vital and essential connection with this great central doctrine of Christianity.

The Church of God is facing one of the greatest spiritual crises in her history. She cannot afford to teach anything as "necessary to salvation" that cannot be clearly proved by Holy Writ. If, therefore, the doctrine of the Virgin Birth is a matter of secondary importance, if its presence in the Creed tends to confuse the minds of the rising generation of young people and places an obstacle in the way of faith, then it becomes not only desirable but our solemn duty to discard it as being of no more practical value than a beautiful and artless myth.

But, so far from the Virgin Birth having no essential connection with the central truth of the Incarnation, I think a careful and reverent study of the New Testament and the history of the doctrine from the very beginning will convince any open-minded and conscientious critic that the Virgin Birth rests upon a secure foundation. My studies have led me to believe that it would be difficult to exaggerate its importance. "Beware," said the ancient Trojans, "when the Greeks bring gifts."

The attack upon the Virgin Birth is often made so plausible, so insidious, and, under the guise of loyalty, so sincere, that unless one is on his guard, it may seem after all to be a doctrine hardly worth contending for. It is alleged that there are many in the Church who claim that they have no difficulty in accepting it for themselves, but do not believe that it ought to be required as an article of faith of others. Such an attitude of mind is all the more dangerous because it comes from those whose orthodoxy no man may question. Without fully realizing the consequences of their position, and in the name of tolerance and broad-mindedness, they are really admitting into the very citadel of Christianity those who would destroy it.

Perhaps the most dangerous heresy Christianity has ever known, certainly the oldest, was Ebionism. The Ebionites fiercely attacked the Virgin Birth because they denied the essential divinity of Christ. They claimed that Christ was born of the union of Joseph and Mary, and that this gifted and inspired Jew later became Messiah by union with the Holy Ghost at His baptism. They rejected the entire gospel of the infancy, together with St. Luke's narrative, because of its historical evidence. On totally different grounds, the Gnostics also rejected the Virgin Birth because they taught that human nature was fallen, and the flesh so inherently sinful that it was inconceivable that an all-holy and righteous God could ever live the life of a real man in the flesh. Against these early heresies, which developed within the period in which the New Testament was written, the Church had to fight for her very existence. The Ebionites clearly saw, if some modernists do not, that the Virgin Birth was really the key to a proper defence of the Church's teaching concerning the Incarnation. If that fact could be gotten out of the way, the rest was easy. If it could be shown that Christ was born by the usual processes of natural generation, what then could be more logical or plausible than their position? They argued that if Christ was the child of Joseph and Mary, then it must follow inevitably and necessarily that He was an individual human person. The descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him at His baptism, they claimed, would account for all the miraculous events which later took place in His life.

Against such a view of the Incarnation it would have been idle and futile to argue, as some are doing today, that all things are possible with God, and that if He had chosen to become incarnate in some other way than as the Church teaches, He could have done so. To this we reply, what God could or could not do is an idle speculation. We are concerned now with what He did do. If we once admit that Christ was the product of the union of Joseph and Mary, then the contention of the Ebionites is established, for by all the laws of heredity, confirmed by the universal experience of the race in such cases, the average man would undoubtedly have come to the conclusion that Christ was only a highly gifted and favored individual, no matter what the documents or the Councils of the Church might say to the contrary. We venture to think that he would have welcomed such explanation of the life of Christ as that given by the Ebionites.

Those early heretics had enough insight into the heart of the Gospel to see that the Virgin Birth was the one incontrovertible, historic fact in the record of the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke that stood most in the way of the general acceptance of their views. Under the repeated assaults of the Ebionites and Gnostics upon the "faith once delivered to the saints", the Church came to realize, as she could not have done before, the essential and necessary connection between the Virgin Birth and the Incarnation of God in the flesh. The presence in the creeds, therefore, of this doctrine is not the result of accident or of abstract speculation; it is there as the result of a long intellectual and spiritual struggle. If the modern man does not appreciate its importance, let him go back and study carefully the New Testament and the history of the early Church, and weigh well the arguments which the Fathers used to defend it. Let him not assume that the Virgin Birth is the fruit of an age of legend and superstition. At least let him do the great scholars and fathers of the Church the justice of acquainting himself with the scriptural and intellectual foundations of their faith.

The doctrine of the Virgin Birth has survived, as other great truths have survived, because it has passed successfully through the crucible of the most searching criticism, and has stood the test of the appeal which it makes to reason and to Scripture. It rests not only upon Scriptural authority, but upon the collective and corporate life of the Church, which interprets and justifies every truth of God at the bar of an actual religious experience. No modern theologian of recent years has defended the Virgin Birth more ably and convincingly than Dr. DuBose. In his Gospel in the Gospels he has this to say:

"I venture to say that at any living point or period of Christianity, the Christian consciousness concerning Jesus Christ would instinctively and necessarily have come to the practical conclusion embodied in the artless and poetic stories of the birth and infancy of Jesus. Who and what is Jesus Christ? The answer which this artless and yet most profoundly artful so-called 'nursery myth' forestalls and precludes is this: He was no mere natural offspring of Joseph and Mary. Why not? Because the product of every such natural union is an individual human person. Viewing Jesus Christ in this light it is impossible to construe Him otherwise than as a human individual exceptionally favored by unique relations with God" (p. 212).

And again in his Soteriology, p. 176:

"The Virgin Birth represents the highest reach, the focusing upward, as it were, of the world's susceptibility for God. She (the Virgin Mary) was the truest humility, the truest desire, the truest faith, the truest impotency in herself, the truest preparedness for the work in her of the divine Omnipotency, the truest readiness and receptivity, therefore, for the coming to her of God as Saviour and salvation. Her virginity represents the fact of an impotency whose potency must come from without itself." . . . . "Through the Virgin as the faith and receptivity of humanity, the Word of God is born by the Spirit and man becomes Son of God."

If, therefore, Christ was born of Joseph and Mary in the order of nature, what becomes of the wonderful faith manifested by Mary when the angel of the Annunciation visited her and declared that she would bear a son? When she asked how this was possible, the answer was, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall over-shadow thee". We ask, what need for faith if she had borne a son in wedlock? What more natural or to be expected? What events were there in such a birth to ponder over as a great mystery to be kept locked in her heart? If Christ had been born under such natural conditions, He would not have been as much the child of faith and prayer as John the Baptist, or as Isaac, whose mothers were past the age of child-bearing.

It is impossible to view the Incarnation even in its physical beginnings except as an act of divine grace working through human faith. Mary's words to the angel, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word", expressed the deepest faith and truest obedience and submission to the divine will. She was a true daughter of Abraham's faith. Back of her lay the whole spiritual history of her race. She could not possibly have come out of any other environment. She could not have been prepared and spiritually fitted for her divine mission save through the exercise of faith. We, therefore, ask again, what need would there have been for such sublime faith as she manifested, had Christ been the child of natural generation? To quote Dr. DuBose once more:

"As I have said before, the Logos was conceived and born in, and of, not merely the physical but the spiritual womb of the Virgin and of the race. The true seed of Abraham was the fruit, not so much of his flesh, but of his faith. He prepared the Virgin's faith as well as her womb, and her womb only through her faith."

If then the faith of the Virgin rests upon nothing more substantial than natural processes of nature, what becomes of it? Where is there any room for the exercise of faith, and what becomes also of the sacrifice that she was called upon to make when she bowed her head in utter submission, and with rare and wonderful courage, faced the future with all its consequences?

Thus the Cross and the great law of Sacrifice, which is at the very heart of the Gospel, meet us on the threshold of the Incarnation. Called upon to face the scorn and publicity which she and every other Jewish woman knew full well would surely fall upon her devoted head, the Blessed Virgin shared with her divine Son, from the beginning of the Incarnation, the agony and the suffering of the Cross.

Surely we are not prepared to surrender such a spiritual heritage. If the foundations of Christianity are laid in faith and obedience, and courage and self-sacrifice, then it does not need to be pointed out how very vital, necessary, and essential is the relation between the Virgin Birth and the Incarnation.—Reprinted from The Living Church.

HISTORIC PERIODS OF FREDERICKSBURG—1608-1861.

Mrs. Vivian Minor Fleming.

Historic Period, No. 2—1671.

Major Lawrence Smith and the Early Settlers.

There is a tradition that there have been continuous white settlements in this locality since 1622. After the massacre of Opecancanough appeal was made to Jamestown for "Protection for all the section between the James and the Potomac".

Then there is Major Lawrence Smith. He took up land as early as 1665, before John Buckner and Dr. Thomas Royston, because their boundaries began where his ended. Judge Francis T. Brooke, in his narrative, says that he was born at Smithfield, four miles below Fredericksburg, in 1763, and he believes the place was named in honor of "Captain Lawrence Smith".

Now, who was Lawrence Smith? In Miss Dubellet's "Prominent Virginia Families" we find the following: "Lawrence Smith, of York, and John Smith, of Gloucester, were contemporaries, probably brothers, as we have a record of a deed of land in Gloucester from Lawrence Smith to 'my brother, John Smith', in 1666". John Smith was the ancestor of the Smiths, of Shooter's Hill. He, Lawrence Washington and John Lewis, married sisters, daughters of Augustine Warner, hence the name Augustine in both families. Augustine Smith, probably a nephew of Major Lawrence Smith, was prominent in this locality early in 1700. However, to return, Major Lawrence Smith, of York, was a surveyor and engineer and was prominent and influential in the period immediately preceding the Bacon rebellion. He was, at a Grand Assembly at Jamestown, empowered to build a fort, with two hundred soldiers, near the falls of the Rappahannock, Miss Dubellet says, in 1674. The fort was not constructed until 1679 and it is a mooted question whether it was built on the north or south side of the Rappahannock, but Major Smith probably built it where he could best guard his own estate. In 1686 Major Smith was surveyor of the counties of York and Gloucester. In 1691 he laid out the city of Yorktown. He died in 1700. His granddaughter, Lucy Smith, married Augustine Moore, a grandson, I believe, of Governor Spottswood, and it was at their home, Temple Farm, that the articles of surrender of Lord Cornwallis were signed.

Now, John Buckner, Thomas Royston and the other early settlers. What of them? John Buckner, the immigrant, was the first man to use a printing press in Virginia. On February 21, 1682-83, he was called before Lord Culpeper and the Council for not getting his Majesty's license, and in 1690 Lord Howard granted instructions that "Henceforth no person be permitted to use a printing press in Virginia". John Buckner's sons owned land in both Stafford and Spottsylvania, so this John Buckner is probably the Buckner of the Leaseland.

Thomas Royston was the grandfather of Richard Wyatt Royston, who sold the eight hundred and sixty-one acres of land, where Kenmore was built, to Colonel Fielding Lewis, February, 1752. George Washington surveyed the land. Among the names of the early settlers are several still known in this section and all are found in the early records of the county.

Phillip Buckner took up land on the south side of the Rappahannock River in this section in 1672.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

HERE is a splendid and searching message on the question of the personal habits of the Christian worker. It shows how one minister of our Church faced the motto—Christian, have no habit that you cannot recommend! This same minister said to me a few days later: "You cannot talk about Jesus to a man when you are puffing a cigar." This clergyman has a parish that is taking an interest in evangelical truth. May we have more men who call people to a full surrender. The article follows:

The Christian's Habits.

"Christian! Have no habit you cannot recommend." It hits us all. It hits the minister of the Gospel particularly. It is at once a challenge and an appeal for self-examination to every one who serves the sacred ministry of the Church and who is a leader of the people. I confess it hit me hard. What about smoking? It was a challenge and a high calling at that. It was a declaration of war upon myself. Could I recommend my young people never to smoke cigarettes while I smoked them? Could I honestly recommend the habit. No. I could not. Does smoking extend the Kingdom of God in the Church and parish. Again the answer comes clear and unmistakable—No.

Then what is to be done? Tell God about it and be honest and give it up. Well, that is what I have done. From now on, no habit I cannot recommend, for smoking is a habit one cannot recommend.

St. Paul exhorts us, saying "Mortify, or make dead, your members which are upon the earth, fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire and covetousness which is idolatry. . . . Put off the old man with his doings and put on the new man which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of Him that created you" and he goes on in that same chapter (Colossians 3) saying, "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord".

This is much more in keeping with the mind of Jesus and the peace of the follower of Jesus, than smoking.

We are to "flee—follow—fight", and "lay hold on eternal life", or "the life eternal" (as it ought to be rendered) "whereunto we are called, and hast professed a good confession before many witnesses".

There is so much that we have not yet known in the Christian life and a half-hearted Christian is not a good recommendation for Christianity. A half-hearted person in any line is a failure. We must be all or nothing, if we are to be full of joy.

Into my heart, into my heart,
Come into my heart, Lord Jesus:
Come in today, come in to stay,
Come into my heart, Lord Jesus.

There is the secret for all victory over sin and doubtful things, "Come into my heart, Lord Jesus". Then your cup will run over with joy. Then when the strong tides lift and the cables strain—then, when the angry waves o'erflow your bark and the straits of fear lay hold of you, then, your anchor will hold, for it is fastened to the Rock of Ages.

So we may pray in all its power:

Spirit of the Living God
Fall fresh on me.
Break me, make me, cleanse me, fill me,
Spirit of the Living God
Fall fresh on me.

You want perfect peace! Of course you do. Then God will keep you in perfect peace, if, your mind is stayed upon Him. That is the condition; "your mind stayed upon Him". God is waiting for your decision.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

LESSON—No. 26.
TOPIC—Israel—God's Covenant People, No. 2.

In our previous study (No. 25) we considered a general view of the Jewish race, with respect to their position in the Divine plan of the Ages, and approaching prominence in the world's history. Both Jew and Gentile should know that the entire Bible was written by inspired Hebrew writers to whom the oracles of God were thus committed (Rom. 3:1-2). The Jewish race has the further distinction of being honored by the Beloved Son of God taking on human form through the medium of a Jewish Virgin, and it was to the Jew first that the Gospel was first delivered and transmitted to the Gentiles (Rom. 1:16).

For these three reasons alone, the true Christian should love the Jewish people, while for the same reasons every Jew should search the Scriptures to see if these things be so, "that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory".

But being blinded as they are, the serious question is how we may best enable the Hebrew to discern in this present age of Grace, that there is no approach to God except through the Lamb of God, and that this Lamb, without spot or blemish, is none other than the Beloved Son of God in whom dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead bodily (Col. 2:9, 10)—their rejected Messiah, the crucified One, before whom some day, every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father (Phil. 2:10, 11; Isa. 45:23; Rev. 5:13).

Since Jehovah promises to remove the veil from any Israelites whose heart shall be turned to Christ (2 Cor. 3:14-16), let us carefully note the following Scriptures concerning the One who "shall reign over the house of Jacob forever" (Luke 1:33).

1. He must first come in humility and suffering.—Isa. 53; Psalm 22.
2. He must be born of a virgin, miraculously.—Isa. 7:14.
3. He must have an advance messenger.—Malachi 3:1.
4. He must come as a child; the government shall be upon His shoulders.—Isa. 9:6.
5. He must be born in Bethlehem.—Micah 5:2.
6. He must be rejected by his own people.—Isa. 53:2.
7. He must be falsely accused.—Psalm 35:11.
8. He must ride into Jerusalem on an ass.—Zech. 9:9.
9. He must be betrayed by a friend.—Zech. 13:6.
10. He must be wounded and scourged.—Isa. 53:5.
11. He must be sold for thirty pieces of silver.—Zech. 11:12.
12. He must be crucified.—Psalm 22:16; Zech. 12:10.
13. He must be laid in a rich man's tomb.—Isa. 53:9.

In due time He came; He lived; He bled; He died; He arose and ascended into Heaven, and from whence He shall come again, according to the same prophets, in great power and glory (see Lessons 8 and 9). On the day of our Lord's crucifixion, twenty-four or more distinct prophecies were literally fulfilled. Let us, then, believe the remaining prophecies yet to be fulfilled in the Divine plan, that we may not be ashamed at His coming (1 John 2:28).

In this present Age of Grace, the Jew has no lamb; no altar; in darkness; and without hope; for without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sin (Heb. 9:22). It is, therefore, the high privilege, and solemn duty, of every believer, to point the way to "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"; "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles" (1 Cor. 12:13); "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one, all things in Christ, both of which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in Him" (Eph. 1:10).

"BETTER TO HAVE GIVEN UP."

Mr. Editor:

A very young man, son of devoted Church people, nephew of a Bishop, graduated in Harvard law; set up in California and was doing well. A splendid young gentleman. Suddenly he felt called to enter the ministry; wired his parents that he was leaving at once to enter Union Theological Seminary; had not consulted with any one really interested in him. After a few months he came back to his home. He would not talk much, but whatever faith he had ever had was GONE, killed by the traitors of Jesus Christ, greater traitors because pretending to be members of His Body the Church. I was in his home two days last fall. He is quite silent. His mother told me about it just before I left. I had no opportunity to talk to him. I feel that it was a cruel thing. He looks crestfallen and disappointed. He is back at his law. But the call was in him before.

I notice that Coffin is of the Union; and perhaps he has buried many in the casket of his unbelief. It was better for this young man to have given up rather than to have gone out as the apostle of skepticism as so many have.

"Minister."

THE REV. GILES B. COOK REPLIES.

Mr. Editor:

As a Christian, my answer to the question, "Is unforgiveness right"? is no, decidedly; it is not right. We of the old South, the followers of Lee and Jackson, have never been asked to forgive Lincoln and his followers for stigmatizing us as traitors; for the awful suffering of millions of men, women and children in the Southland, caused by waging a four-year war of extermination, as proclaimed by some of Lincoln's generals and approved by him as commander-in-chief of the army and navy. When the followers of Mr. Lincoln ask to be forgiven, why, of course as Christians we will forgive them, because the Bible tells us to forgive our enemies.

It was not in a spirit of unforgiveness that I protested against the action of the House in honoring Mr. Lincoln, but simply to present a statement of facts to show that Mr. Lincoln had done all in his power to dishonor General Lee and his followers, and, therefore, I thought it was unnecessary in the House to stir up strife between the North and South that was inevitable when it is considered that it requires but little to arouse bitter feelings between the G. A. R. and the Confederate soldiers.

One blessed result from the unrighteous war was the liberation of the slaves North and South, for which I shall ever be devoutly thankful. Like General Lee, let me say before closing this letter, that I believe all of his followers knew that they were right in the part they took in the war of secession, not of rebellion, and that, like him, they would take the same course again under similar circumstances.

Giles B. Cooke,
A Soldier of the Cross and of the Old South, and only Surviving Staff Officer of General R. E. Lee.

ORIGIN OF THE WORD—MASS.

Mr. Editor:

Candor is always to be commended. In a recent issue of one of our Church papers, a brief article is quoted from the pen of the Rev. A. C. Buchanan, D. D., entitled: "The Lord's Own Service." After enumerating the various names signifying the Blessed Sacrament, and their distinctive value, the writer adds:

"But perhaps the dearest name of all for many of us is the pet name, like the pet name of a big family for the youngest child; I mean the 'Mass'. Like all pet names, it arose from a kind of accident. A little child mispronounces a word, or some one in a delightfully silly outburst of tenderness, utters just a meaningless sound, and at once it acquires a tender significance, and sticks. A kind priest wishing to let the people know a service was over, and that they might depart when they wished, said: 'Ite; missa est'. 'Go; it is over'. Others repeated it, and 'Missa', or 'Mass', at length attached itself as an affectionate term to the holy rite of the Eucharist."

Could there be a more singular perversion of meaning, or intention? Instead of a gracious invitation a distinct dismissal! But this frank definition of the word corresponds perfectly with what many; in fact, the majority, of our Church people have thought: a word with no tangible root, irrelevant in substance, faulty in etymology, trivial in value, and, therefore, all but irreverent as applied to the Church's highest act of worship and adoration. Yet few would have ventured to define it as the present writer: a term confessedly a "meaningless sound", and a "silly outburst" of sentimentality.

A Reader.

APPRECIATION.

Mr. Editor:

I enclose a check for $2, dated March 2, for which please continue my subscription for this year.

Your noble Southern Churchman has won a place of affection in my heart. I had never seen a copy until last January.

I enclose a program showing the work carried on in our dear old Trinity, but one form of Christian community work in which we are engaged.

T. L. Rynder.

Toledo, Ohio.

"BIBLE SUNDAY."

Mr. Editor:

I am the representative appointed by our General Convention to the American Bible Society and I feel that there should be an annual offering in each of our churches, no matter how small, to sustain that Society in its free distribution of the Sacred Scriptures in many languages in all parts of the world. Their colporteurs go from home to home selling the Bible, if possible, and if not, giving it free of cost to those who do not possess it. I hope your "Appeal" will lead to many churches giving an offering. The most appropriate Sunday, I presume, would be the Second Sunday in Advent, when the collect mentions the "Holy Scriptures given for our learning". This Sunday is also very commonly called "Bible Sunday". It seems to me that an annual offering on some Sunday or weekday is not too much for the Bible Society to ask, when all our Missionary Bishops rely upon it for gifts of Scriptures in the language of their own people.

James Henry Harrington.

STAND BY THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES.

Mr. Editor:

Stand by the Thirty-nine Articles! Organize for their defence in the coming General Convention. Adhere, as Irenaeus says, to those presbyters, bishops, who together with their succession from the apostles teach apostolic doctrine.

Ruin stares the Protestant Episcopal Church today, because the guardians divinely appointed to enforce the teachings of the Thirty-nine Articles, shall I say alas, some do not themselves believe in them, most with some honorable exceptions, perhaps, of Bishop Manning, do not attempt to enforce their teaching in the Seminary, in the Pulpit.

Modernists by defect of faith, Romanists by superstitious excess, violate the Thirty-nine Articles.

The Thirty-nine Articles proclaim the divine integrity and inspiration of the Holy Canonical Scriptures, we listen to our modern clergymen saying there is no Hell and tearing out pages, books of the Bible, archaeology has recently proven genuine! Is this invincible ignorance? Can the prelates answer to God for such instruction to our people? The Thirty-nine Articles worded the definition on the Lord's Supper, the Holy Eucharist, the Worship of the Cross, and of Images, so wisely as to allow a freedom as to philosophic inquiries and opinions not meddled with by the primitive Christians, and yet to condemn idolatry.

The Anglo-Catholic Romanizing Episcopal clergy we have heard lately preach from the pulpit Prayers to the Saints, Angels, against which, as the Thirty-nine Articles, Irenaeus rises up to say in his time the whole Church throughout the world rejected! And so explicitly Clement of Alexandria, Origen with the Council of Laodicea.

Let us, dear Editor, preserve that faith, let us keep the Thirty-nine Articles!

Let them say they only venerate, not adore, the crucifix, the image. The Council of Eliberis foretold the future danger truly.
